FOREWORD

TRADE CASES reports the full, official texts of all decisions rendered by the higher courts, state and federal, in cases involving antitrust, Federal Trade Commission, and other trade regulation law problems. In addition, the more important lower court decisions and attorney generals' opinions are included, either in full or in excerpt form. For good measure, Government antitrust consent decrees are included in full text.

The Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act are the principal federal laws interpreted and applied by these decisions. The state fair trade acts (involving resale price maintenance), unfair practices acts (involving sales below cost), and price discrimination and basic antitrust laws are the state laws concerned in these cases.

In this volume, cited 1959 TRADE CASES, are reproduced all of the court decisions reported in TRADE REGULATION REPORTS from January 15, 1959, to February 5, 1960. These decisions appeared in the "Current Court Decisions" volume of the Tenth Edition of the CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTER.

Since TRADE REGULATION REPORTS is an original reporter of the exact texts of official decisions as handed down by the courts, it follows as a matter of course that these bound volumes are also authoritative. Decisions appear in the chronological order of publication and are designated by paragraph numbers in numerical order. The paragraph numbers are the same as those used and referred to in the TRADE REGULATION REPORTER case tables and indexes, thus facilitating direct and cross reference.

Each decision is preceded by:

(a) The full name of the case.

(b) The name of the court, the docket number, and the date of the decision.

(c) Headnotes—accurate, succinct, and informative, with emphasis on the main issue.

(d) References to all paragraphs in the compilations of the Tenth Edition of the TRADE REGULATION REPORTER which are pertinent to the subject matter of the case.

(e) Names of attorneys representing the litigants, whenever available.

(f) References to any previously reported decisions in the same case.

In antitrust cases instituted by the Government, the case number (Blue Book number) by which the case is identified in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is also included.

In cases involving a Federal Trade Commission complaint or order, the FTC Docket number is given.

Effective indexing is provided to afford quick and convenient contact with any case by reference to its paragraph number. The indexing system includes:

(a) Table of Cases. Alphabetical, with complete listings under plaintiffs' names and cross references under defendants' names. The official and national reporter citations are included when available.

(b) Indexes. Complete and detailed. In addition to the General Topical Index, covering all of the decisions in the volume, special indexes are provided for:

(i) Antitrust Consent Decrees

(ii) Attorney Generals' Opinions

(iii) Federal Trade Commission Cases

(iv) Robinson-Patman Act Cases

(v) State Fair Trade Act Cases

(vi) State Unfair Practices Act Cases

This thorough indexing affords instant contact with any case (a) by case name, and (b) by subject matter.

In planning and producing TRADE CASES, the aim of the publishers throughout is to make this volume of the utmost utility in the important and extensive field of trade regulation. The user's time is saved by concentration on the subject of trade regulation (no time is lost leafing through irrelevant cases); by the single reporting medium for courts of all jurisdictions; and by the explanatory headnotes—clearly stated captions written by specialists in trade regulation law.

COURT DECISIONS

—Cited 1959 Trade Cases—

[¶ 69,231] International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., International Boxing Club, Inc., et al. v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1958. No. 18. Dated January 12, 1959.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge.

Case No. 1122 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Conspiracy To Monopolize—Monopolization—Practices—Acquisition of Control of Professional Boxers, Promoters, and Arenas—Legality.—Two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, a corporation engaged in the operation of an arena, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations were properly found to have engaged in a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade in the promotion of professional world championship boxing contests in the United States, to have engaged in a combination and conspiracy to monopolize such trade, and to have monopolized such trade. The trial court had found that the intent of the defendants and the necessary result of their activities, including (1) their acquisition of contracts from champion boxers and leading contenders requiring them to box exclusively for the promotion corporations as a condition of participating in title bouts, (2) their acquisition of competing promoters of championship boxing contests, and (3) their acquisition of control of key arenas and stadia for the presentation of championship boxing contests, was to combine in order to obtain control of, and exclude others from, the promotion of championship boxing contests in the United States. Also, the defendants were found to have excluded others from the promotion of, exhibition of, and sale of television, radio, and motion picture rights to, championship boxing contests. The Supreme Court ruled that the decree adjudging the defendants to have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act must be affirmed since the defendants failed to sustain their burden of showing that the trial court's findings, or at least the basic ones, were "clearly erroneous."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.460, 2005.690, 2035.153, 2035.213, 2035.219; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.275, 2510.500, 2520, 2610.120, 2610.300, 2610.800.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Relevant Market—Promotion of Professional Championship Boxing Contests—Reasonable Interchangeability Test.—The promotion of professional championship boxing contests, in contrast to all professional boxing contests, constituted the relevant market in an action charging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The trial court found that there existed a "separate, identifiable market" for championship boxing contests. Among other things, the court found that the average revenue from all sources for defendants' championship bouts was $154,000, compared to $40,000 for their nonchampionship programs; television rights to one championship fight brought $100,000, in contrast to $45,000 for a nontitle fight seven months later between the same fighters; viewing ratings over a certain period were 74.9 per cent for the defendants' championship contests, and 57.7 per cent for their nonchampionship programs; although revenues from movie rights for six of the defendants' championship bouts totaled over $600,000, no full-length motion picture rights were sold to a nonchampionship contest; and spectators pay "substantially more" for tickets to championship fights than for nontitle fights. In view of such findings, it could not be said that the trial court was "clearly erroneous" in concluding that nonchampionship fights are not "reasonably interchangeable for the same purpose" as championship contests. A determination of the "part of the trade or commerce" encompassed by the Sherman Act involves distinctions in degree as well as distinctions in kind. Championship boxing is the "cream" of the boxing business, and, as had been shown, is a sufficiently separate part of the trade or commerce to constitute the relevant market for Sherman Act purposes. The contention that the "physical identity of the products" requires them to be put in one and the same market was rejected.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2540.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Divestiture of Stock in Arena Corporation.—A decree ordering two individuals, who controlled corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests in Illinois and New York and controlled corporate boxing stadia located in the same states, to divest themselves, within a five-year period, of all stock which they owned "directly or indirectly" in the New York stadium corporation was affirmed by the Supreme Court. It had been found that the individuals, the boxing clubs, and the New York stadium corporation engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize the promotion of professional championship boxing contests and monopolized the promotion of such boxing contests. "It may be that the stock in * * * [the New York stadium] was not the fruit of the conspiracy; but even if lawfully acquired it may be utilized as part of the conspiracy to effect its ends." It was the stock ownership and the individuals' control of stock voting power that the trial court found dictated the election of the officers and directors of the stadium corporation and gave to the individuals the control and management of its activities. Through the exercise of this power, the individuals elected the officers and board of directors of the New York boxing club—a joint board with the Illinois boxing club, which they also controlled through the Chicago arena corporation. The joint board was the bridge over which the conspiracy was made effective. Over it the control of the promotion of championship boxing contests was secured. The individuals continued to exercise their unlawful control long after they knew that the activity was within the coverage of the Sherman Act. Divestiture was the only effective means by which competition in championship events might be restored. It was intended to return the parties as near as possible to the status quo existing prior to the conspiracy.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.700.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Dissolution of Boxing Clubs.—A decree ordering the dissolution of two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests was affirmed, where it had been found that such corporations, a corporation engaged in the operation of an arena, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize the promotion of professional championship boxing contests and monopolized the promotion of such boxing contests. The boxing clubs were formed pursuant to and were the means used to effectuate the conspiracy. It is antitrust policy to decree dissolution "where the creation of the combination is itself the violation." Existing conditions confirmed the need for dissolution. The contention that dissolution is a useless act because the parent companies, under the decree, are left free to organize new corporations to handle boxing promotions was rejected. "New corporations, if formed, would start off with clean slates freed from numerous written and oral agreements and understandings now existent and known throughout the industry." There would be little inconvenience and nominal expense even if, as the defendants contended, they must form new corporations if they are to promote boxing contests.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.700.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Compulsory Leasing of Arenas.—A decree requiring the leasing of two arenas for championship boxing contests was affirmed, where it had been found that a corporation engaged in the operation of one of the arenas, two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize the promotion of professional championship boxing contests and monopolized the promotion of such boxing contests. The trial court had found that one of the means used in effectuating the conspiracy was the ownership and control of arenas and stadia. The defendants' main objection to the compulsory leasing provision was the requirement that in the event the terms of a lease could not be agreed upon, the matter would be submitted to the trial court. They contended that the requirement was not only an undesirable but an impractical activity for a trial court. Obviously, such a provision might result in some disputes which must be settled. Until experience in the enforcement of the provision proves the reference is too burdensome, there is no reason to disturb it. If experience proves it unworkable, the parties, under the decree, may apply to the court for appropriate relief. The Supreme Court also noted that the defendants suggested no alternative to relieve the trial court of the burden.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.800.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Prohibition Against Exclusive Contracts for Professional Boxing Contests.—A provision of a decree prohibiting exclusive contracts for the promotion of boxing contests was affirmed by the Supreme Court, where two corporations engaged in the promotion of professional championship boxing contests, a corporation engaged in the operation of an arena, and two individuals controlling the affairs of the corporations engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize the promotion of professional championship boxing contests and monopolized the promotion of such boxing contests. The defendants objected to the prohibition being applicable to all professional boxing contests and not being confined to professional championship boxing contests. "But human nature being what it is there is sound reason to say that exclusive contracts with boxers in nontitle contests would surely affect those same boxers when and if they arrived at the title." Such arrangements would give the defendants, so experienced in the boxing field, a decided advantage over the independent promoter. Such a prohibition is fully justified at least until the effects of the conspiracy are fully dissipated. For the same reason, a five-year prohibition against exclusive rights to a return bout was upheld. The trial court recognized that these prohibitions went beyond the relevant market which was considered for the purposes of determining the Sherman Act violations, but felt that the "relief here must be broader than the championship field because the evil to be remedied is broader." Sometimes relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation. The decree, which contained other prohibitions, was affirmed.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233, 8233.625.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Scope of Relief—Monopolization Cases.—A decree in a monopolization case should (1) put an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation, (2) deprive the antitrust defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy, and (3) break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the law.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.100.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Modification.—In affirming a trial court decree, the Supreme Court noted that in the event experience proves that some of the provisions of the decree are so severe as to require modification or amendment, the parties may apply to the trial court as provided in the decree.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.475.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decree—Review by Supreme Court.—In reviewing a trial court decree, the Supreme Court noted that it is not its function to sit as a trial court. The relief granted by a trial court in an antitrust case and brought to the Supreme Court on direct appeal, thus by-passing the usual appellate review, has always had the most careful scrutiny of the Court. Though the records are usually most voluminous and their review exceedingly burdensome, the Court has painstakingly undertaken it to make certain that justice has been done. In the instant case, the Court concluded that the relief granted was not beyond the allowable discretion of the trial court. Also, the Court noted that when relief beyond the narrow limits of the proven antitrust violation is granted, it must be especially wary lest the trial court over-step the correspondingly narrower limits of its discretion.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8235.

[Prior Proceedings]

MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text].

This civil Sherman Act[1] case was here four years ago on direct appeal from a dismissal by the District Court, which had held that the Act did not apply to the business of professional boxing. We reversed, finding that "the complaint states a cause of action [under the Act] and that the Government is entitled to an opportunity to prove its allegations," and remanded the case for trial on the merits. United States v. International Boxing Club [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236 (1955). The complaint charged the appellants with a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce among the States in the promotion, broadcasting, and televising of professional world championship boxing contests, as well as a conspiracy to monopolize and monopolization of the same. After a trial, the District Court, in an opinion incorporating detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law based on the principles laid down in our earlier opinion, found that the allegations of the complaint had been sustained. 150 F. Supp. 397 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,649]. After further hearings on the nature and extent of the relief necessary to protect the public interest, the court entered its final judgment dissolving two of the corporate appellants, directing divestiture of certain stock owned by the individual appellants and granting injunctive relief designed to open up the market in the business of promoting professional world championship boxing matches. 171 F. Supp. 841.

[Appeal]

The appellants, while not attacking any specific finding as clearly erroneous, claim that the proof did not show that they violated either Section 1 or 2 of the Act. In this regard appellants level their strongest blows at the District Court's definition of the relevant market. Out of the entire field of professional boxing, the District Court carved a market in championship contests alone, holding it to be the relevant market at which the conspiracy was aimed. In the alternative, appellants insist that the relief granted the Government was "unnecessarily punitive," even if liability is assumed. On a direct appeal to this Court we noted probable jurisdiction, 356 U. S. 910 (1958). We have concluded that the findings of the District Court are not clearly erroneous and that in view of our former holding on the sufficiency of the complaint the judgment on the merits was properly entered. As to the relief granted we find that the court did not exceed the limits of allowable discretion in framing a decree "that will, so far as practicable, cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, and assure the public freedom from its continuance." United States v. United States Gypsum Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729], 340 U. S. 76, 88 (1950).

[Trade or Commerce]

Our previous decision herein having decided that the promotion of professional championship boxing contests on an interstate basis constituted trade and commerce among the States, within the meaning of the Sherman Act, there is no contest here either on the findings or the law on that point. Since on that appeal we discussed in some detail the allegations of the complaint, which the trial court has now found amply proven by the evidence, we shall only summarize the findings here.

THE FINDINGS

[The Conspiracy]

The conspiracy began in January 1949, when appellants Norris and Wirtz, who owned and controlled the Chicago Stadium, the Detroit Olympia Arena and the St. Louis Arena, made an agreement with Joe Louis, the then heavyweight boxing champion of the world. Wishing to retire, Louis agreed to give up his title after obtaining from each of the four leading contenders[2] exclusive promotion rights including rights to radio, television and movie revenues. Upon securing these exclusive contracts Louis assigned them to the appellant International Boxing Club, Illinois, which was organized by Norris and Wirtz for the purpose of promoting boxing for the combination in Illinois. They paid Louis $150,000 cash plus an employment contract and a 20% stock interest in I. B. C., Illinois.

In March 1949 Norris and Wirtz approached appellant Madison Square Garden, in which they had for many years owned 50,000 shares of stock. It was the "foremost sports arena in New York City and is the best known arena of its kind in the United States, if not the world."[3] However, its facilities were tied up by an exclusive lease it had granted to Mike Jacobs' interests—the leading professional boxing promoter in the field at that time. Norris and Wirtz proposed that they should all "work together now and keep the events for our buildings and not create a competitive situation that would be harmful to all." In order to effectuate this program, appellant Madison Square Garden bought out Mike Jacobs' interests, including, in addition to his lease on Madison Square Garden, his exclusive leases to Yankee Stadium and the St. Nicholas Arena and his contract with the then welterweight champion Sugar Ray Robinson. These contracts were assigned to International Boxing Club, New York, organized for the purpose of promoting boxing for the combination in New York.

Once Jacobs' interests had been acquired, there remained only one substantial competitor in the field of promoting championship boxing matches. That was Tournament of Champions, Inc., owned in part by the Columbia Broadcasting System. It owned an exclusive lease on the Polo Grounds as well as an exclusive promotion contract covering the next two fights of the then middleweight champion of the world. In May 1949 Madison Square Garden bought all of the stock of Tournament of Champions at a cost of $100,000 plus 25% of the net profits on the next two middleweight championship matches. The assets thus acquired were likewise assigned to I. B. C., New York. By a simultaneous separate agreement, Columbia Broadcasting System agreed for a five-year period not to invest in or promote any professional boxing matches in return for a first refusal right to the broadcasting of certain boxing matches staged for a like period in Madison Square Garden.

This series of agreements, consummated within four months' time, gave appellants exclusive control of the promotion of boxing matches in three championship divisions, i. e., heavyweight, middleweight, and welterweight. Not satisfied with this temporary control, however, appellants perpetuated their hold on championship bouts by requiring each contender for the title to grant to them an exclusive promotion contract to his championship fights, including film and broadcasting, for a period of from three to five years. Over the facilities for the staging of contests appellants exercised like control, owning or managing the "key" arenas and stadia in the Nation.[4]

Tightening the ropes around the ring thus built, Norris and Wirtz increased their stockholdings in Madison Square Garden to where they controlled it and were able to "dictate its policies and boxing activities." This has continued their control over I. B. C., New York, the stock of which is now wholly owned by Madison Square Garden.[5] They

[2] Ezzard Charles, Joe Walcott, Lee Savold, and Gus Lesnevich.

[3] The importance of the Madison Square Garden in the present context is shown by the fact that of all the championship contests staged during the 12 years immediately preceding 1949, 45% were held in New York City, of which 75% were in Madison Square Garden. The balance of the New York championship bouts, with one exception, were held in Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds, or the St. Nicholas Arena.

[4] Between 1937 and 1948, 50% of all championship contests were staged in either the Madison Square Garden, Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds, St. Nicholas Arena, Chicago Stadium, Detroit Olympia Arena, or the St. Louis Arena.

[5] At the time the I. B. C.'s were formed, Joe Louis owned 20% of the stock of each and the other 80% was split evenly between Norris and Wirtz on one hand and Madison Square Garden on the other. At some point thereafter, Louis ceased to be a stockholder and his share was split evenly between Norris-Wirtz and are the sole stockholders of Chicago Stadium Corporation which in turn is the sole stockholder of I. B. C., Illinois. Their control over this boxing empire is revealed by the fact that Norris is president of each of the four top corporations, i. e., Madison Square Garden, I. B. C., New York, Chicago Stadium Corporation, and I. B. C., Illinois. He and Wirtz are directors in all four, while I. B. C., Illinois and I. B. C., New York, which have owned all of the promotion contracts with the contenders, have a joint board of directors.

[Effect of Conspiracy]

The effect of the conspiracy is obvious. Using the facilities of I. B. C., Illinois, and I. B. C., New York, appellants entered into exclusive promotion contracts with title aspirants, requiring exclusive handling agreements in the event the contender became champion. In amassing their empire, appellants obtained control of champions in three divisions. The choice given a contender thereafter was clear, i. e., to sign with appellants or not to fight. With appellants in control of the key arenas and stadia of the country through Madison Square Garden, Chicago Stadium Corporation, and others, an event could not be successfully staged in any of these areas, the most fruitful in the Nation, without their consent. The exercise of this power brought immediate results. From June 1949, when appellants staged their first championship fight, until May 15, 1953, the date of the amended complaint, they staged or controlled the promotion of 36 of the 44 championship battles held in this country, giving them approximately 81% of that field. In two of the classifications, heavyweight and middleweight, the combine staged all of the contests. The power of the combine to exclude competitors in the championship field is graphically shown by their promotion of 25 out of 27 fights in all divisions, a total of 93%, during the two-and-a-half-year period ending with the filing of the amended complaint. This power extended to the sale of film and broadcasting rights—most valuable adjuncts to successful promotion in the business.

[Relevant Market]

Appellants launch a vigorous attack on the finding that the relevant market was the promotion of championship boxing contests in contrast to all professional boxing events. They rely primarily on United States v. du Pont & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377 (1956). That case, involving an alleged monopoly of the market in cellophane, held that the relevant market was not cellophane alone but the entire field of flexible packaging materials. In testing for the relevant market in Sherman Act cases, the Court said:

> ". . . no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce,' monopolization of which may be illegal." Du Pont, supra, at 395.

The appellants argue that the "physical identity of the products here would seem necessarily to put them in one and the same market." They say that any boxing contest, whether championship or not, always includes one ring, two boxers and one referee, fighting under the same rules before a greater or lesser number of spectators either present at ringside or through the facilities of television, radio, or moving pictures.

We do not feel that this conclusion follows. As was also said in du Pont, supra, at 404:

> "The 'market' . . . will vary with the part of commerce under consideration. The tests are constant. That market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced—price, use and qualities considered."

With this in mind, the lower court in the instant case found that there exists a "separate, identifiable market" for championship boxing contests. This general finding is supported by detailed findings to the effect that the average revenue from all sources for appellants' championship bouts was $154,000, compared to $40,000 for their nonchampionship programs; that television rights to one championship fight brought $100,000, in contrast to $45,000 for a nontitle fight seven months later between the same two fighters; that the average "Nielsen" ratings [6] over a two-and-one-half-year period were 74.9% for appellants' championship contests, and 57.7% for their nonchampionship programs (reflecting a difference of several million viewers between the two types of fights); that although the revenues from movie rights for six of appellants' championship bouts totaled over $600,000, no full-length motion picture rights were sold for a nonchampionship contest; and that spectators pay "substantially more" for tickets to championship fights than for nontitle fights. In addition, numerous representatives of the broadcasting, motion picture and advertising industries testified to the general effect that a "particular and special demand exists among radio broadcasting and telecasting [and motion picture] companies for the rights to broadcast and telecast [and make and distribute films of] championship contests in contradistinction to similar rights to non-championship contests." [7]

Madison Square Garden. At the time of the final decree, apparently as the result of an effort to make a showing of separateness of control, the Norris-Wirtz interests owned all of the stock in I. B. C., Illinois, and Madison Square Garden owned all of the stock in I. B. C., New York. The trial court found that the two interests nevertheless still shared equally in the combined profits of both I. B. C.'s.

In view of these findings, we cannot say that the lower court was "clearly erroneous" in concluding that nonchampionship fights are not "reasonably interchangeable for the same purpose" as championship contests. A determination of the "part of the trade or commerce" encompassed by the Sherman Act involves distinctions in degree as well as distinctions in kind. One prime example of this is the application of the Act to trade or commerce in a localized geographical area. See, e. g., Schine Theatres v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110 (1948); United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100 (1948); cf. Times-Picayune v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594 (1953); United States v. Columbia Steel Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,260], 334 U. S. 495 (1948). The case which most squarely governs this case is United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948). There, the charge involved, inter alia, extensive motion picture theatre holdings. The District Court had refused to order a divestiture of such holdings on the grounds that no "national monopoly" had been intended or obtained. This Court felt that such a finding was not dispositive of the issue, saying:

> "First, there is no finding as to the presence or absence of monopoly on the part of the five majors [defendants] in the first-run field for the entire country, in the first-run field in the 92 largest cities of the country, or in the first-run field in separate localities. Yet the first-run field, which constitutes the cream of the exhibition business, is the core of the present cases. Section 1 of the Sherman Act outlaws unreasonable restraints irrespective of the amount of trade or commerce involved (United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 224, 225, n. 59), and § 2 condemns monopoly of 'any part' of trade or commerce." Paramount, supra, at 172-173. (Emphasis in the original.)

Similarly, championship boxing is the "cream" of the boxing business, and, as has been shown above, is a sufficiently separate part of the trade or commerce to constitute the relevant market for Sherman Act purposes.[8]

[Antitrust Violations]

We have also examined the remainder of this characteristically lengthy record. When the case was here previously appellants did not deny that the allegations of the complaint stated a cause of action against them, provided their activity came within the meaning of the Sherman Act. We held that the complaint stated a cause of action. The District Court has now found these allegations to have been proven. With the case in this posture, appellants have an almost insurmountable burden. They must show that the findings, or at least the basic ones, are "clearly erroneous." Rule 52(a), Rules of Civil Procedure. This they have not been able to do. It follows that the decree entered on the merits adjudging the appellants to have violated both §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act must be affirmed.

THE RELIEF

[General]

In approaching the question of relief we must remember that our function is not to sit as a trial court. Besser Mfg. Co. v. United States [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,280], 343 U. S. 444, 449-450 (1952); United States v. National Lead Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,575], 332 U. S. 319 (1947); cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,316], 323 U. S. 173, 185 (1944). As was said in International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, 400-401 (1947):

[6] According to the District Court, the "Nielsen Average Audience rating is a percentage which purports to show the number of residential television sets that were tuned in to the program expressed as a percentage of the total residential television sets, whether turned off or on, which were in areas into which the program was telecast."

[7] Approximately 25% of the revenue produced by the appellants' championship fights during the period covered by the complaint was derived through the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights.

> "The framing of [antitrust] decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case."

The yardstick which the trial court should apply in monopolization cases is well stated by the Court in Schine Theatres v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110, 128-129 (1948). The decree should (1) put "an end to the combination or conspiracy when that is itself the violation;" (2) deprive "the antitrust defendants of the benefits of their conspiracy"; and (3) "break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the Act."

The relief granted by a trial court in an antitrust case and brought here on direct appeal, thus by-passing the usual appellate review, has always had the most careful scrutiny of this Court. Though the records are usually most voluminous and their review exceedingly burdensome we have painstakingly undertaken it to make certain that justice has been done. See, e. g., United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra; Schine Theatres v. United States, supra; United States v. National Lead Co., supra. That we have done here. We have finally concluded that the relief granted was not beyond the allowable discretion of the District Court.

The Bounds of the Relief Ordered

At the time of the final decree the Joe Louis agreements had elapsed; the exclusive-contract practice had been at least temporarily abandoned; the leases on Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds and St. Nicholas Arena in New York had been given up and the appellants had no control over the new heavyweight champion, Floyd Patterson. Nevertheless, the additional evidence taken by the District Court showed that they still possessed all of the power of monopoly and restraint. In this we agree. The appellants had exercised a strangle hold on the industry for a long period. It was evident at the time of the decree that, statistically, they still dominated the staging of championship bouts and completely controlled the filming and broadcasting of those contests. They had gained this leadership through the elimination by purchase of all of their major competitors in the field; by the control of contending boxers through exclusive agreements; and by the staging of events through the ownership or lease of key stadia and arenas. This illegal activity gave appellants an odorous monopoly background which was known and still feared in the boxing world. In addition, Norris and Wirtz still possessed the major tools, so well used previously, necessary to continue their control. They owned or controlled the key arena and stadium in New York and Chicago, the most lucrative communities in boxing; they continued to control all of the championship bouts staged there; they commanded the filming and broadcasting of all championship fights—the cream of the business—wherever staged; and though on the surface they owned no stock directly in the two I. B. C. corporations, each was the wholly owned subsidiary of corporations which Norris and Wirtz did control and manage.

In this setting the District Court ordered Norris and Wirtz to divest themselves, within a five-year period, of all stock which they owned "directly or indirectly" in Madison Square Garden. In addition, both of the International Boxing Clubs, Illinois and New York, were ordered dissolved. The Chicago Stadium and Madison Square Garden were each enjoined from staging more than two championship bouts annually. All exclusive agreements for the promotion of boxing events, including nonchampionship, were banned. Madison Square Garden was ordered for a period of five years to lease its premises when available at a "fair and reasonable" rental to any duly qualified promoter applying in writing therefor. Failure to agree on terms would require submission to the courts for determination. Like requirement was imposed on Chicago Stadium Corporation, provided Norris-and-Wirtz control continued.

The District Judge concluded that it was necessary to include each of these provisions in the decree in order to put an end to the combination, deprive the appellants of the benefit of their conspiracy and break up their monopoly power. At the conclusion of the final hearing on relief he observed that prior to 1949 the Norris-Wirtz group was in Chicago while the Madison Square Garden enterprise was in New York. They were "two separate entities," one promoting contests in the mid-West and the other in New York. He declared that "in order to destroy this monopoly we have to return the situation as nearly as possible to the economic conditions as they existed in 1949" and, further, "I can see no way in this case . . . that a proper decree can be formulated unless that power that Wirtz and Norris have in Madison Square Garden is curtailed. They have to get out of the control."

The Order of Divestiture

Appellants contend that since the stock owned by Norris and Wirtz was not acquired pursuant to the conspiracy, was not the fruit of illegal activity and was not proven to be the lever by which Madison Square Garden was persuaded to join the conspiracy, divestiture was but punishment rather than a necessary corrective remedy. They further say that the sale, even though made in the manner outlined in the decree,[9] would result in great loss to Norris and Wirtz. They contend that it was arbitrary for the District Court not to permit them to exercise an option, as proposed by them, of a choice between Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium, both of which they still control.

It may be that the stock in Madison Square Garden was not the fruit of the conspiracy; but even if lawfully acquired it may be utilized as part of the conspiracy to effect its ends. See United States v. Paramount Pictures, supra, at 152. Moreover, since the inception of the conspiracy Norris and Wirtz have increased their holdings to over 219,000 shares. It was this stock ownership and their control of stock voting power that the trial court found dictated the election of the officers and directors of the Madison Square Garden and gave to Norris and Wirtz the unquestioned control and management of its activities. Although reluctant at first to require a divestiture of this stock, the trial judge ultimately became convinced that it was the sine qua non of the relief. During the hearing he said:

> "The great evil I found was the combination that Wirtz and Norris caused and created by joining up with Madison Square Garden. I regard Wirtz and Norris as one and Madison Square Garden as another, a separate entity and business interest. The evil primarily sprung from their combination, their concerted efforts and action. That has to be broken up."

What is perhaps equally significant is that through the exercise of this power Norris and Wirtz elected the officers and board of directors of I. B. C., New York—a joint board with I. B. C., Illinois, which they also controlled through the Chicago Stadium Corporation. This joint board was the bridge over which the conspiracy was made effective. Over it the control of the promotion of championship boxing contests was secured. That this control remained effective up to the very date of the final hearing, June 24, 1957, is shown by the following statement by the court on that date:

> "The unlawful combination of the defendants still possesses and exercises its monopolistic control in the field of championship contests. It appears that since May 15, 1953 there have been held in the United States 37 championship contests, excluding one bantamweight contest. The defendants admit that they had promotional control over 24 of the 37 championship contests which were held or of 65 per cent of the market, but we find that the defendants were not financial strangers to the other 13 championship contests which were held in cities other than New York and Chicago. Because the defendants are licensed by state authorities to promote only in New York and Illinois, they could not be the persons actually designated as the promoter of the 13 championship contests, but all five of the championship contests which originated in cities other than Chicago or New York on Friday nights were televised on IBC's-New York Friday night television series.
> "We find, too, that all of the 37 championship contests in this period from May 15, 1953, save only the five outdoor contests, were televised on either the defendants' Wednesday or Friday night television series, and that the profits of the sale of the telecasting rights inured to the benefit of the defendants."

[9] Norris and Wirtz were given five years to sell their stock in Madison Square Garden, which stock is listed on the New York Stock Exchange. During this time, the stock is to be held by two trustees named by the court. If the stock is not sold within five years, the trustees are ordered to sell it within the next two years.

As this was some two and a half years after our opinion in the former appeal on January 31, 1955, it appears that appellants had continued exercising their unlawful control long after they well knew that this activity was within the coverage of the Sherman Act. In view of the fact that no denial was made on that appeal of the sufficiency of the Government's complaint it is reasonable to assume that appellants, subsequent to our opinion, knew that their conduct violated the Sherman Act, obedience to which is so important to our free enterprise system. Still they continued their illegal activity. In fact from all appearances it is continuing to this day. Such conduct, in addition to the interlocking nature of the ownership at the time of the final decree, fully justified the District Court's conclusion that the "dissolution of the combination can only be accomplished by an immediate and complete severance of the interlocking ownership of Norris and Wirtz in Madison Square Garden. . . . [T]here must be a complete divestiture of the stockholdings of Norris and Wirtz in the Garden. The Government has established Norris and Wirtz control the Garden Corporation." Moreover, this was the only effective means at hand by which competition in championship events might be restored. It was intended to return the parties as near as possible to the status quo existing prior to the conspiracy.

For these reasons, we do not see why it was incumbent upon the court to give Norris and Wirtz certain options requested at the time of the decree. We shall mention only two. The first was that they have the right to exercise a choice of retaining either the Madison Square Garden or the Chicago Stadium. But this would not be conducive to the re-establishment of competition between the two interests, which the District Court considered a necessity. Nor would it eliminate the "great evil" the trial court found in the Norris-Wirtz-Garden combination. Another requested option was that Norris and Wirtz be permitted to retain their control of the Madison Square Garden and the latter be enjoined from promoting championship boxing events. But this would have eliminated the world's principal boxing center—"the premier sports arena in the world," as appellants characterized it—from promoting such events in competition with Norris and Wirtz.

In short, the Government in its effort to free the professional boxing business of monopoly and unreasonable restraints would have won the battle but lost the war under either of the proffered alternatives. As this Court said in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,316], 323 U. S. 173, 189-190 (1944):

> "Common control was one of the instruments in bringing about unity of purpose and unity of action and in making the conspiracy effective. If that affiliation continues, there will be tempting opportunity . . . to act in combination . . . . The proclivity in the past to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future."

The Dissolution of the Two International Boxing Clubs

Admittedly these corporations were formed pursuant to and were the means used to effectuate the conspiracy. As the trial judge said:

> "These corporations are the promotional arms of the defendants, conceived and used to enable defendants to restrain and monopolize promotion of championship boxing contests. Their assets are of but nominal value except for the goodwill attaching to their names by virtue of the conspiracy."

The conditions existing here even subsequent to our former opinion confirm the need for such dissolution. Both corporations continued to share equally the profits the combination reaped from the staging of championship boxing contests. This also included revenues from championship contests promoted by others but televised by the combination. They continue even now as the bridge between the choice arenas Norris and Wirtz own or control and the boxers with whom they have exclusive promotion contracts. Through interlocking officers and directorates the two I. B. C.'s thus effectively hold the combination together. It is antitrust policy to decree dissolution "where the creation of the combination is itself the violation." United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, at 189, and cases there cited. This is one of those situations where the injunctive process affords too little relief too late.

Appellants argue that this is punitive; that the parent companies, under the decree, are left free to organize new corporations to handle their respective boxing promotions and, hence, dissolution is a useless act. The trial court felt, however, and we agree, that continued operation under the old I. B. C. charters might lead to a situation nominis umbra not conducive to the elimination of the old illegal practices. New corporations, if formed, would start off with clean slates free from numerous written and oral agreements and understandings now existent and known throughout the industry. Hence dissolution might well have the salutary effect of completely clearing new horizons that the trial judge was attempting to create in the boxing world, especially when effected in conjunction with the stock divestiture provision. Moreover, there would be little inconvenience and nominal expense even if, as appellants contend, they "as a practical matter must [form new corporations] if they are to promote any boxing at all." This we think a poor excuse for not completely eliminating, by dissolution, these old trappings of monopoly and restraint.

The Compulsory Leasing Provisions

The District Court, having found that one of the means used in effectuating the conspiracy was the ownership and control of arenas and stadia, entered a compulsory leasing provision in the decree as to Madison Square Garden and the Chicago Stadium Corporation.[10]

The appellants' main concern with this provision of the decree is the requirement that in the event the terms of a lease cannot be agreed upon the matter will be submitted to the District Court. Appellants fear that this is not only an undesirable but an impractical activity for a District Court. But they have suggested no alternative to relieve the court of this burden. Obviously, such a provision may result in some disputes which must be settled. Until experience in the enforcement of the provision proves the reference to be too burdensome we see no reason to disturb it. If experience proves it unworkable the parties, under the decree, may apply to the court for appropriate relief. See Lorain Journal Co. v. United States [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 156-157 (1951); International Salt Co., supra, at 401.

Exclusive Contracts With Contestants

Appellants object to the prohibition against exclusive contracts applying to all professional boxing contests. They question the Government's enlarging its base from championship bouts to all professional boxing. But human nature being what it is there is sound reason to say that exclusive contracts with boxers in nontitle contests would surely affect those same boxers when and if they arrive at the title. Such arrangements would give appellants, so experienced in the boxing field, a decided advantage over the independent promoter. Such a prohibition is fully justified at least until the effects of the conspiracy are fully dissipated. For the same reason we see no fault in the five-year prohibition against exclusive rights to a return bout.

The trial court recognized that these restrictions went beyond the "relevant market" which has been considered for purposes of determining the Sherman Act violations, but felt that "[t]he relief here must be broader than the championship field because the evil to be remedied is broader." This Court has recognized that sometimes "relief, to be effective, must go beyond the narrow limits of the proven violation." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., supra, 340 U. S., at p. 90; Timken Co. v. United States [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,837], 341 U. S. 593, 600 (1951). When this sort of relief is granted, we must of course be especially wary lest the trial court overstep the correspondingly narrower limits of its discretion, but for the reasons set out above, we feel that no such misuse of the trial court's power is present here.

[Judgment Affirmed]

We have considered the other objections of appellants to the decree and find them unsubstantial as presently posed. In the event experience proves that some of the provisions are so severe as to require modification or amendment, the parties may apply to the District Court as provided in paragraph 25 of the decree. The judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

[10] This provision of the decree, applying only to championship contests, ordered appellants to lease their respective buildings upon seasonable written request by a qualified promoter, if the proposed rent is reasonable, if the applicant furnishes adequate security, and if at the time of the application the building is neither already under lease to another for the specified day nor in conflict at that time with "any well-established event" which has been regularly conducted therein. If the parties cannot agree on what constitutes adequate security or a reasonable rental, either party may apply to the court for a determination thereof.

[Dissenting Opinions]

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, dissenting in part.

While I have heretofore expressed views in favor of the almost controlling deference to be paid to a District Court's considered formulation of the provisions appropriate to a decree designed to remedy adjudicated violations of the antitrust laws, those views have not prevailed, see the opinions in United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, and this Court has felt free to modify and eliminate provisions of an antitrust decree, particularly when a single judge has imposed an unconventional and drastic remedy. The main issue dealt with in Mr. Justice Harlan's dissent, while a narrow one, is, in my view, important. While divestiture has been decreed by the district judge, the mandatory disposition of the stock has been delayed for five years, and the stock placed in trusteeship. During this five-year period a series of detailed controls have been imposed, under the supervision of the District Court, in order to prevent appellants Norris and Wirtz from exercising the power their stock ownership has given them over the operations of Madison Square Garden. The ownership itself has been sterilized. I think it not an unreasonable forecast that, even were we to postpone for five years the decision whether to order the divestiture or continue the trusteeship, appellants Norris and Wirtz would not find it profitable to continue their sterilized ownership of the Garden stock. However, there is no compelling reason to order them to do what sound business judgment may compel. One has the right to assume that, in view of this Court's unanimous affirmance of the findings below that appellants were in violation of the Sherman Law, they will scrupulously obey the decree and not even by the subtlest indirection seek to avoid our decision. Therefore I think it is needless now to determine that divestiture must take place five years hence, rather than wait upon the event in order to determine whether divestiture should then be ordered.

Accordingly, I join Mr. Justice Harlan's opinion.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER join, dissenting in part.

I am unable to subscribe to the Court's approval of those parts of the decree below which ordered (1) the divestiture of the stockholdings of Norris and Wirtz in Madison Square Garden Corporation and (2) the dissolution of the New York and Illinois International Boxing Clubs. On the other aspects of the case I agree with the results the Court has reached.

DIVESTITURE

As a starting point I accept the conclusion of the District Court that competition in the promotion and exhibition of professional championship boxing could not be effectively restored so long as Norris and Wirtz remained in control of Madison Square Garden's activities in this field. Because of the pre-eminence of the Garden as a site for boxing contests, the District Court found that its control by Norris and Wirtz constituted the fulcrum of the antitrust violations which were adjudged. That finding is supported by the evidence, and in turn justifies the court's conclusion that the elimination of their influence in the Garden was prerequisite to restoring competition.

It by no means follows, however, that the order divesting Norris and Wirtz of their Garden stockholdings was an appropriate method of accomplishing that objective in the circumstances of this case. Unless past pronouncements of this Court cautioning against the indiscriminate use of divestiture as a remedy in antitrust cases, see Timken Co. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,837], 341 U. S. 593, are to be taken less seriously than they should be, it seems to me that the Court has too lightly given approval to the use of that drastic measure here.

First. It is not at all clear to me just why the District Court, which in the early stages of the hearings on relief expressed itself strongly against divestiture, ultimately reached the conclusion that such a course was necessary. Indeed the record can be read as indicating the court's belief that the five year trusteeship of the stock, though designed to alleviate some of the hardships of a forced sale, would at the same time effectively remove Norris and Wirtz from control over the Garden's affairs and therefore in conjunction with the other provisions of the decree result in restoring competitive conditions, whether or not the correlative requirement of sale was carried out within the five-year period.[1] The decree itself supports this reading. For despite the evident realization that the stock might not be sold within five years, the provisions of the decree especially aimed at opening up competition for the use of the Garden are all geared to this period. If in fact the District Court thought this five-year insulation of Norris and Wirtz from managerial and policy-making activities at the Garden would combine with the other restrictions to restore competition, justification for divestiture must then be found in a purpose to prevent a relapse into noncompetitive conditions after the five years have elapsed, something which the District Court quite properly considered to be a function of the decree. On this premise I am at a loss to see why continuance of the trusteeship, and, if necessary, the concomitant restrictions on the Garden's activities, should not have been considered adequate to serve that end.

Second. If I am mistaken in thus divining the thinking of the District Court, I still consider that in the circumstances of this case divestiture was at least ordered prematurely. Determination whether that drastic remedy was required should have been postponed until the expiration of the trusteeship period so that the necessity for its application could then be judged in light of the effectiveness of the other sanctions of the decree. I recognize that various contingencies can be conjured up to support the view that divestiture, rather than trusteeship, holds the more solid promise of assuring the preservation of competition. Nevertheless I think that rejection of a continuance of the trusteeship in favor of divestiture should, in the peculiar setting of this case, be based on experience rather than speculative apprehension.

Three factors seem to me especially compelling toward such a course. In the first place, this cannot properly be considered a case of reprehensible immoral conduct or willful lawbreaking.[2] Not until January 31, 1955, when this Court handed down its opinion in United States v. International Boxing Club [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,941], 348 U. S. 236, did it become known that professional boxing was even subject to the federal antitrust laws. In view of this Court's earlier decisions in the baseball cases, Federal Baseball Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200, and Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,602], 346 U. S. 356, I think it reasonable to say that in 1949 when this alleged conspiracy began most well-informed lawyers believed that professional boxing, like professional baseball, was beyond antitrust stricture. Hence the appellants had every reason to believe their actions were innocent when taken. Putting the matter somewhat differently, we should be slow in lending approval to the use of such a drastic remedy as this in a case where the appellants have never had the opportunity to demonstrate their willingness to comply with the law once they have learned that it applies to their activities. In my opinion, the thrust of this factor is not blunted by arguing, as the Court does, that appellants should voluntarily have done something to unscramble their relationships during the two and a half years that elapsed between the Court's decision in the original International Boxing case and the entry of the present decree. That sort of squeeze play should not be expected of those already involved in a lawsuit.

Further, divestiture here is brought to bear upon a large investment much of which was acquired long before the conduct charged in this case began, and the balance of which [1] Apart from its divestiture and dissolution provisions, the decree imposes wide-ranging and pervasive restrictions on appellants' activities in boxing promotion and exhibition. It renders void all exclusive contracts which they may presently have with boxers. It prohibits the making of new exclusive contracts, with the exception that, after five years, exclusive provision may be made for return bouts. Similarly, exclusive leases with stadia not owned by appellants are proscribed. So, too, are such arrangements with television and radio broadcasters. Further, appellants are restrained, for a period of five years, from promoting more than four championship boxing programs annually, two by Madison Square Garden and two, cumulatively, by Norris and Wirtz. During that five-year period also, the compulsory leasing provisions discussed in the Court's opinion are to be in effect. Finally, the decree removes Norris and Wirtz as officers and directors of Madison Square Garden, and enjoins them from holding such positions in the future.

[2] The District Court put the matter in this way: "I don't charge them [Norris and Wirtz] with malicious intentional and moral wrongdoing, nor do I proceed to formulate the decree on such a basis. They are guilty, if anything, of a moral, prohibitive wrong, which was in doubt as to whether it was even prohibitive at the time some of these acts were done, and serious doubt, but most people held it was not."

was obtained prior to the announcement of the International Boxing decision. The "unlawful fruits" doctrine accordingly offers no justification for this divestiture. Although recognizing this to be true, the Court states that the Garden stock was nonetheless utilized as means of accomplishing the antitrust violations. But this is just another way of saying that divestiture is a necessary element of effective relief; it affords no independent justification for the employment of that remedy.

Lastly, the divestiture order reaches far beyond the subject matter of the action. It permanently removes Norris and Wirtz from all interest in the Garden, over 90% of whose activities are entirely unrelated to professional boxing.

Third. It is true, of course, that the trial court's considered judgment on what is necessary to dissipate the effects and prevent recurrence of an adjudged antitrust violation is entitled to much deference from this Court. But by the same token this Court, before it is asked to put its stamp of approval on such a drastic remedy as divestiture, is entitled to have a clear and unambiguous expression of the district court's reasoning in choosing such a course. Especially is this so where, as here, this Court is the sole reviewing authority and in consequence has not had the benefit of an intermediate review of the issues by a Court of Appeals. In my opinion this record leaves much to be desired in this regard. The most I can make of it, taking the case for divestiture most favorably to the Government, is that the District Court would have been justified in reserving that issue for consideration at the time the five-year trusteeship of the Norris and Wirtz stock expired. Certainly no adequate case for a present order of divestiture has been made out. In this view of the matter it becomes unnecessary to discuss at this time the various "options" alternative to divestiture which were rejected by the District Court.

Dissolution

I can find no adequate basis for the order dissolving the two International Boxing Clubs. My difficulty with this aspect of the relief is sufficiently shown by the fact that, as I read the record, it would be permissible for Madison Square Garden and the Norris and Wirtz interests in Chicago to create new corporations carrying exactly the same name as the two present organizations. The only justification offered by the Government for this aspect of the decree is that the two clubs were instrumentalities of the antitrust conspiracy and that their dissolution was but an expedient for insuring that all of their illegal agreements had been put to an end. But since all such agreements, both written and oral, are already canceled by other provisions of the decree, and since there is no suggestion that the sweeping relief granted by the District Court has any loopholes which would permit these organizations to function improperly, this justification is hardly convincing. In these circumstances dissolution appears to me to be not only punitive but futile, something not promotive of sound antitrust law enforcement.

I would remand the case to the District Court with instructions to modify its decree by striking the provisions for compulsory sale of the Norris and Wirtz stock in the Madison Square Garden Corporation, reserving the issue of divestiture for further proceedings at the end of the five-year trusteeship period, and eliminating the requirement of dissolution of the two International Boxing Clubs.

[Settlement Agreement—Order]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: This appeal attacks an order dismissing an action brought by plaintiff[1] praying damages for an alleged violation of the Robinson-Patman Act and other antitrust laws. The court dismissed the case in the following order:

"This matter came on for hearing on November 18, 1957 upon the issue of whether or not the parties hereto, subsequent to the commencement of this action, had entered into a valid and binding agreement of settlement and compromise of all matters in controversy and the Court, upon the submissions of proof, argument, evidence and representations of the plaintiff pro se and of respective counsel for both parties finds that a firm offer of settlement has heretofore been made by plaintiff, was accepted by defendant and was subsequently rejected by plaintiff and a higher figure demanded; and that defendant has, at all times since such agreement was accepted, and still is ready, willing and able to perform. The Court, at said hearing, thereupon stated that unless plaintiff completed the settlement found to have been agreed upon within five (5) days from November 18, 1957, it would summarily dismiss plaintiff's petition.

"The cause coming on for further hearing upon the affidavit of counsel for defendant that tender of defendant's performance under said agreement was again made within said five (5) days to counsel of record for plaintiff and thereafter all items to be delivered by it to plaintiff under said agreement were deposited with the Clerk of this Court with instructions to deliver the same to plaintiff upon receipt of plaintiff's consent to dismissal of this action with prejudice at defendant's costs, upon the report of the Clerk of this Court that the deposit made by defendant remains in his possession, upon exhibition and examination of said deposit by the Court, the Court finds that the tender made by defendant is complete and fulfills all requirements of the agreement of the parties, that defendant has complied with all of the orders of this Court, and that said tender has been refused by plaintiff.

"It Is Therefore Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed, that this cause be, and it is hereby dismissed with prejudice at plaintiff's costs and the Clerk is ordered forthwith to return to defendant the item deposited with him by said defendant; to all of which, plaintiff excepts."

[Dismissal Proper]

It appears that the controlling questions are questions of fact. The District Court's findings are not shown to be clearly erroneous and its conclusions are in accord with the applicable law. The court has inherent power, so long as it retains control of the subject matter and of the parties, to correct that which has been wrongly done by virtue of its process. Gumbel v. Pitkin, 124 U. S. 131, 144, 14 Am. Jur., Courts, Section 171; Arkadelphia Milling Co. v. St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company, 249 U. S. 134. The court has inherent power to punish abuse of its process by dismissal of an action in the interest of orderly administration of justice. See 4 A. L. R. (2d) 348, Dismissal of action for failure or refusal of plaintiff to obey court order. On page 350 of this note are listed cases from eleven states, as well as from this circuit, to the effect that there is inherent power in the court, in the interest of orderly administration of justice, to dismiss an action for disobedience of a court order. Refior v. Lansing Drop Forge Company, 124 Fed. (2d) 440 (C. A. 6), certiorari denied 316 U. S. 671, is closely in point and is controlling. That case held that where a cause had been pending for more than six years at time of dismissal and defendants had done their utmost to obtain a trial without success, and plaintiff was represented by the same nonresident attorney who was familiar with the case during the entire period, dismissal of the cause with prejudice for want of prosecution was not an abuse of discretion. The period involved herein was over five years. The court declared in the Refior case, supra, that a court of equity in the exercise of sound judicial discretion has general authority independent of statute or rule to dismiss a cause for want of diligence in prosecution or for failure to comply with a reasonable order of the court made in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. To the same effect is Colorado Eastern Railway Company v. Union Pacific Railway Company, 94 Fed. 312 (C. A. 8). The court in the Refior case also held that every litigant has the duty to comply with reasonable orders of the court and, if such compliance is not forthcoming, the court has the power to apply the penalty of dismissal.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eight Circuit. No. 15,743. Dated January 13, 1959.

Petition to Review Order of Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act and McCarran-Ferguson Act

Unfair Practices—False Advertising of Insurance—State Regulation of Company's Interstate Mail Order Business—Jurisdiction of Federal Trade Commission—McCarran-Ferguson Act.—A Federal Trade Commission false advertising order against an insurance company, which was licensed to do business in Nebraska and Virginia but which had policyholders in every state, was vacated on the ground that the Commission was without authority to regulate the company's advertising practices. Under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act is applicable to the business of insurance only to the extent that such business is not regulated by state law. The Nebraska "Unfair Competition and Trade Practices" Act, as amended in 1957, expressly prohibits an insurer domiciled in that State from engaging, there or elsewhere, in any "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of the business of insurance." The company transacted all of its business through the mail from its home office in Nebraska. Since its incorporation in 1904, it had been supervised, regulated, and periodically examined by the Insurance Department of Nebraska; therefore, it could not be held that the company's practices in the solicitation of insurance by mail in Nebraska or elsewhere were unregulated by state law. It was of no substantial consequence that the 1957 Nebraska amendment authorizing the Nebraska Director of Insurance to deal with unfair and deceptive trade practices engaged in, in other states, by insurers domiciled in Nebraska, was enacted subsequent to the entry of the Commission's order. The validity of an order on review depends upon the law applicable at that time. Moreover, the court was of the opinion that the Director, at all times involved, had the power to regulate the company's practices in the solicitation of insurance in Nebraska and other states.

Vacating a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6252.

Before SANBORN, JOHNSEN and VOGEL, Circuit Judges.

[Jurisdiction of FTC]

SANBORN, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Travelers Health Association, of Omaha, Nebraska, by a petition to review, challenges the validity of a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission dated December 20, 1956. The order was based upon a determination by the Commission (1) that it had jurisdiction to regulate the advertising practices of the petitioner in the promotion and sale, by mail, of insurance against disability caused by sickness, and (2) that certain of the petitioner's practices were false, misleading and deceptive within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45. The order under review prohibited the petitioner from carrying on the practices found by the Commission to be unlawful.

[McCarran-Ferguson Act]

The petitioner contended before the Commission, and contends here: 1. That the Commission was precluded by the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1011-1015, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1011-1015, from regulating the advertising practices of the petitioner, since its insurance business was subject to State laws "which relate to the regulation * * * of such business."[1] 2. That none of the advertising practices proscribed by the Commission was false, misleading or deceptive.

[1] The pertinent portions of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 59 Stat. 33, as amended, 61 Stat. 448, are as follows:

"That the Congress hereby declares that the continued regulation and taxation by the several States of the business of insurance is in the public interest, and that silence on the part of the Congress shall not be construed to impose any barrier to the regulation or taxation of such business by the several States.

"Sec. 2(a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several states which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.

"(b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law

[Recent Supreme Court Decisions]

The case was first argued and submitted to this Court on November 13, 1957. Decision was deferred pending the disposition by the Supreme Court of the cases of The American Hospital and Life Insurance Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,675], 243 F. 2d 719, and National Casualty Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 6 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,739], 245 F. 2d 883, to review which the Supreme Court granted certiorari on November 12, 1957. 355 U. S. 867. In those cases it was held by the respective Courts of Appeals that, because of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Federal Trade Commission had exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to regulate the advertising practices of the insurers there involved. A reversal of those decisions would have settled the problem of the Commission's jurisdiction in its favor in the instant case. However, on June 30, 1958, the Supreme Court, in a per curiam opinion, affirmed the judgments in both cases. Federal Trade Commission v. National Casualty Co., and Federal Trade Commission v. American Hospital and Life Insurance Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,059], 357 U. S. 560, 78 S. Ct. 1260. In its opinion, the Supreme Court said of the McCarran-Ferguson Act (pages 562-563 of 357 U. S.):

> "* * * An examination of that statute and its legislative history establishes that the Act withdrew from the Federal Trade Commission the authority to regulate respondents' [the insurers'] advertising practices in those States which are regulating those practices under their own laws."

At our direction, the question of the Commission's jurisdiction over the advertising practices of the petitioner in the instant case was reargued and the case finally submitted on September 13, 1958.

[Purpose of McCarran-Ferguson Act]

The obvious purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act was to remove the cloud cast by the case of United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Association [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, upon the right of the States to continue to regulate and to tax interstate insurance business under their own laws, as they had done for some seventy-five years. The history and effect of the Act has already been adequately explained. See Prudential Insurance Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U. S. 408, 429-431; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Cushing, 347 U. S. 409, 413; North Little Rock Transportation Co., Inc. v. Casualty Reciprocal Exchange, 8 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,599], 181 F. 2d 174, 176; American Hospital and Life Ins. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,675], 5 Cir., 243 F. 2d 719; National Casualty Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 6 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,739], 245 F. 2d 883, 887-888; Securities and Exchange Commission v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co. of America, D. C. D. C., 155 F. Supp. 521, 527.

[State Regulation]

The petitioner asserts that its insurance business, including its advertising practices, is regulated by State law within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and that, under Section 2(a) and (b) of the Act, the Commission is clearly without authority to do any additional or supplemental regulating of petitioner's advertising practices.

[Contentions of FTC]

The Federal Trade Commission contends that the Supreme Court, in its decision of June 30, 1958, in the National Casualty Co. and American Hospital and Life Insurance Co. cases, merely held that the States possess ample means to regulate insurance advertising disseminated by companies licensed to do business in those States and represented by agents located within their boundaries; that the Court expressly refrained from ruling upon the applicability of the McCarran-Ferguson Act to the mail order insurance business; that no amount of State regulation of insurance advertising can effectively stop the influx into a State of deceptive advertising material mailed by an out of State company doing a mail order insurance business; that, under the provisc of Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act is applicable to the petitioner's advertising practices; and that the Commission has jurisdiction.

enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Sherman Act. * * * the Clayton Act, and * * * the Federal Trade Commission Act * * * shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law."

[Adequacy of State Regulation]

The Supreme Court, in its opinion of June 30, 1958, in the National Casualty Co. and American Hospital and Life Insurance Co. cases, decided no more than it was required to decide, and confined its opinion to the exact factual situation presented. That court, as the Commission says, was dealing with the advertising practices of insurers operating through agents in States in which the insurers were licensed. In the instant case the petitioner is licensed only in the States of Nebraska and Virginia. It sends letters soliciting insurance by mail throughout the United States. It has policyholders in every State in the Union, and all of its business is transacted through the mail at its home office in Omaha. It pays taxes to Virginia on premiums collected from its insureds in that State, but pays all other premium taxes to Nebraska. Since its incorporation in 1904, the petitioner has been supervised, regulated and periodically examined by the Insurance Department of the State of Nebraska. That the laws of that State are adequate to enable the Nebraska Insurance Department to deal effectively with any unfair advertising practice of the petitioner or of any other insurer domiciled in that State cannot be questioned.

[Unfair Practices Prohibited]

The Nebraska "Unfair Competition and Trade Practices" Act of 1947 (Secs. 44-1501 to 44-1521, Revised Statutes of Nebraska 1943, Reissue 1952) as amended in 1957 (Secs. 44-1501 et seq., Revised Statutes of Nebraska 1943, 1957 Cumulative Supplement) expressly prohibits an insurer domiciled in that State from engaging there or elsewhere in any "unfair or deceptive acts and practices in the conduct of the business of insurance." (§ 44-1503.) The Act empowers the Director of Insurance (1) to prefer charges against any such insurer if he has reason to believe that it has, in Nebraska or elsewhere, engaged "in any unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of such business," and to give the insurer notice of a hearing on the charges (§ 44-1506); (2) to take evidence at the hearing (§ 44-1507); and (3) to issue a cease and desist order if he determines that the insurer has engaged in the wrongful acts and practices with which it is charged. (§ 44-1509.)

[Change in Applicable Law]

At the time the Commission entered the order under review, the Nebraska Act did not expressly authorize the Director of Insurance to deal with unfair and deceptive trade practices engaged in, in other states, by an insurer domiciled in Nebraska. That, we think, is of no substantial consequence. The validity of the order under review depends upon the law presently applicable. A substantial change in applicable law, occurring after the entry of an order or judgment, which alters the rule governing a case will ordinarily be given effect on review. See and compare, Trapp v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., 8 Cir., 70 F. 2d 976, 982, and cases cited. Moreover, we think the Director of Insurance of Nebraska at all times here involved had the power to regulate the practices of the petitioner in the solicitation of insurance in Nebraska and other states.

[Interstate Business Conducted from Nebraska]

It must be kept in mind that the business of the petitioner was all done at or from its home office in Omaha. There its solicitation material originated and was mailed; there the applications for insurance induced by solicitation were received; there all policy contracts were written; and there all premiums were paid. With every activity of the petitioner, in the conduct of its business, subject to the supervision and control of the Director of Insurance of Nebraska, we think that the petitioner's practices in the solicitation of insurance by mail in Nebraska or elsewhere reasonably and realistically cannot be held to be unregulated by State law.

[Practices Beyond FTC's Power]

In our opinion, there is no controlling distinction between the instant case and the National Casualty Co. and American Hospital and Life Insurance Co. cases. We think that the advertising practices of the petitioner are regulated by State law within the letter and spirit of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and that the Act has placed such practices beyond the regulatory power of the Commission.

[Order Vacated]

The order under review is vacated on the ground that the Federal Trade Commission is, and was, without authority to regulate the practices of the petitioner in soliciting insurance.

[Dissenting Opinion]

["Long Distance" Regulation Impractical]

VOGEL, Circuit Judge, dissenting: I do not dispute the majority's contention that "A substantial change in applicable law, occurring after the entry of an order or judgment, which alters the rule governing a case will ordinarily be given effect on review", but I do not believe here that the after-the-fact amendment of the Nebraska Code to include deceptive practices "in any other state" is the kind of regulation by state law Congress had in mind. To force the citizens of other states to rely upon Nebraska's regulation of the long distance advertising practices of the petitioner in the promotion and sale by mail or otherwise of insurance outside the State of Nebraska seems to me impractical and ineffective. This is much too frail a reed upon which to lean. The petitioner's mail order business is not regulated and cannot be regulated by the laws of the states whose citizens are subjected to the mail disseminated advertising. I believe the order of the Federal Trade Commission falls squarely within the purview of the Section 2(b) proviso of the McCarran-Ferguson Act and should be sustained.

[¶ 69,234] Royal Oil Corporation, and Alden C. Jocelyn and Joseph A. Inciardi, individually and as officers of Royal Oil Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7693. Argued October 16, 1958. Decided January 5, 1959.

On Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Character of Product—Failure to Make Material Disclosures—Labelling Motor Oil—Disclosure of Oil's Previous Use—Sufficiency of Labels Marked "Reprocessed Oil."—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an oil company from advertising or selling reclaimed or previously used motor oil without disclosing the fact of the oil's previous use was affirmed. The cans in which the oil was sold were plainly marked "Reprocessed Oil," as required by North Carolina law; however, the Commission had held that the labels did not sufficiently inform the public of the nature of the product. The court rejected the company's contentions (1) that the Commission had no authority to require any disclosure other than that required by the law of North Carolina, (2) that the Commission's order deprived the company of "equal protection of the laws of North Carolina," (3) that in other cases the Commission had indicated its view that the term "reprocessed" alone would be a legally sufficient description of the product, and (4) that the testimony of witnesses who were not experts or who had never purchased used oil was an unfair sampling of "opinion."

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.550, 5105.60.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Jurisdiction of State Authorities—Power of Commission to Declare Practices Unfair Which Are Authorized by State Law.—A Federal Trade Commission ruling that an oil company which sold previously used motor oil in containers labelled "Reprocessed Oil" did not sufficiently inform the public of the nature of the product was affirmed. The company, which sold its products principally in North Carolina, contended that its labels complied with the law of that State, and that the Commission could not require any other disclosure. Although Congress has not specifically designated what disclosures must be made when reclaimed oil is sold in interstate commerce, it has clothed the Commission with the power to enjoin unfair business competition. Upon its general grant of authority, the Commission may, if it determines upon a reasonable basis that certain conduct constitutes an unfair method of competition, order those responsible to cease and desist even if the conduct is authorized by state law. The court found, however, that the Commission's order did not conflict with the North Carolina law. The state statute did not prohibit the use of additional descriptive words on the labels besides "Reprocessed Oil" and the company could readily comply with both the state statute and the Commission's order.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Jurisdiction of State Authorities—"Equal Protection" of State Law—Competition With Intrastate Sellers.—An oil company which was prohibited by a Federal Trade Commission order from selling previously used motor oil without disclosing the fact of its previous use was not "deprived of the equal protection of the North Carolina law." The company contended that it had complied with the law of North Carolina, the place where its products were principally sold, by labelling its previously used motor oil "Reprocessed Oil." The court held, however, that the company, which engaged in interstate commerce, had no ground of complaint if it found itself with less latitude in its methods of competition than the North Carolina law permitted its intrastate competitors. Intrastate commerce is not subject to federal regulation even though it may competitively affect interstate commerce; the Commission, however, does not lose its jurisdiction over interstate commerce merely because such commerce is in competition with intrastate activities beyond the Commission's control.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.317, 5201.361.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Disclosure of Motor Oil's Previous Use—Tendency of Labels to Deceive.—A Federal Trade Commission ruling that labels marked "Reprocessed Oil" on cans of previously used motor oil did not sufficiently inform the public of the nature of the product was affirmed. The company contended that the Commission, in other cases, had indicated its view that "reprocessed" alone would be a legally sufficient description of the product. The court found, however, that nothing in the orders entered in those cases could reasonably be interpreted as affording the oil company encouragement to use the word "reprocessed" with no additional words indicating the oil's previous use. From the testimony of witnesses who had no prior experience with reclaimed oil, it appeared that some of them readily understood that the cans contained oil which had been repurified, while others were uncertain as to the character of the contents. This testimony, coupled with the Commission's own observation of the labels and its experience, was enough for a conclusion that the labels had a tendency to deceive. The court held that neither experts nor customers who have actually been deceived need be produced where the exhibits themselves demonstrate their capacity to deceive.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.341.

For the petitioners: Joseph S. Kaufman and Harry D. Kaufman.

For the respondent: E. K. Elkins, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission (Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, and James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, on brief).

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6702.

Before SOBELOFF, Chief Judge, HAYNSWORTH, Circuit Judge, and BRYAN, District Judge.

[Labelling Motor Oil]

SOBELOFF, Chief Judge [In full text]: The petitioner, Royal Oil Corporation, is engaged in the general petroleum business and, among other activities, reclaims and markets used crank case oil drainings discarded by motorists at service stations. After impurities are removed, the oil is of high viscosity and good quality, comparable to oil that has not been previously used. The finished product is then packaged and sold in cans marked plainly and in large type "Reprocessed Oil." The Federal Trade Commission, however, has ruled that the labels on the cans did not sufficiently inform the public of the nature of the product. Royal and its officers, the individual petitioners, were ordered not to advertise such oil, or offer it for sale, without disclosing that it had been previously used. This proceeding is to review the Commission's order.

[State Legislation]

Twenty-one states have enacted legislation regulating the sale of previously used motor oil. North Carolina has a statute which requires that containers of reclaimed used oil be clearly marked "Reprocessed Oil."[1] While Royal's plant is located in Baltimore, Maryland, and it sells oil in South Carolina, Virginia and Maryland, the words required by the North Carolina statute have been added to its labels because the company sells principally in that state.[2]

I

[Authority of FTC]

The petitioner's position is that since its labels are in compliance with the North Carolina law, the Federal Trade Commission has no authority to require any other disclosure. The company's argument is that Congress has not entered the field of regulation, and that therefore the Commission may not nullify a valid state statute.

[State Law No Defense]

We think this argument unsound for two reasons. First, while Congress has not specifically designated what disclosures must be made when reclaimed used oil is sold in interstate commerce, it has clothed the Commission with the power to enjoin unfair business competition. 15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 45. Unless Congress specifically withdraws authority in particular areas, the Commission, upon its general grant of authority, can restrain unfair business practices in interstate commerce even if the activities or industries have been the subject of legislation by a state. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533 (1944); McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 1011-1015; Federal Trade Commission v. National Casualty Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,059], 357 U. S. 560 (1958); 66 Stat. 632, exempting from the antitrust laws agreements to fix prices made under State Fair Trade Laws, 15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 45(a). If the Commission determines upon a reasonable basis that certain conduct constitutes an unfair method of competition, it may order those responsible to cease and desist even if the conduct is authorized by state law. Chamber of Commerce v. Federal Trade Commission, 13 F. 2d 673, 684 (8 Cir., 1926).[3]

While the existence of a fairly uniform legislative judgment among the states, that the use of certain words sufficiently discloses the nature of a product, would be a circumstance for the Federal Trade Commission to consider, it would not be bound by the judgment prevalent in the states. If the Commission concluded that a more precise description was necessary to avoid public deception, it could lawfully go beyond the states' requirements.

In this case there is not even uniformity of opinion among the states as to which words best disclose the nature of the product. North Carolina is the only state requiring the word "reprocessed." Certainly in such a situation the Federal Trade Commission is not prohibited from requiring a more precise disclosure simply because the petitioner sells a substantial proportion of its product in that state.

[Order Not in Conflict With State Law]

However, we think that the order of the Commission in this case does not in reality conflict with the North Carolina law. The state statute does not prohibit the use of additional descriptive words, and the Commission has indicated that it is not the use of the word "reprocessed" which it considers deceptive, but rather the failure to make the additional specific disclosure that the reprocessed oil had been previously used. The order is clearly not in conflict with the state's requirement, and the petitioner can readily comply with both.

[1] Laws of North Carolina, 1953, Chapter 1137 (Article 2A, Sections 119-13.1, 119-13.2, 119-13.3 of the General Statutes of North Carolina.)

[2] South Carolina and Virginia have no statute requiring disclosure that oil has been previously used. The Maryland statute, (Code of Maryland, Art. 27, Sec. 231(a)) requires no particular words, but provides that it shall be unlawful to ". . . sell, expose for sale or offer for sale in any manner so as to deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser, any lubricating oil. . . . which had been once used for lubrication purposes and subsequently reclaimed, refined or reconditioned, without clearly indicating or setting forth such fact on the container, pump or distributing device used;"

[3] The court said: "But Congress, in the Federal Trade Commission Act, has assumed to legislate concerning 'unfair methods of competition' affecting interstate commerce and if any action by or any rule or regulation of the Chamber has that effect it is certainly subject to that act, no matter what the state has or has not authorized or permitted in that respect. Any action by the state legislature or any decision of the state courts falls blunted if it strikes at this power which Congress vested and had constitutional authority to vest in the Commission."

["Equal Protection"]

Nor is there any merit in the petitioner's contention that he has been "deprived of the equal protection of the North Carolina law." If the petitioner, who engages in interstate commerce, finds himself with less latitude in his methods of competition than the North Carolina law permits his intrastate competitors, this furnishes him no ground of complaint. The Supreme Court has held that intrastate commerce is not subject to federal regulation even though it may competitively affect interstate commerce, Federal Trade Commission v. Bunte Brothers, Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,098], 312 U. S. 349 (1941); but certainly the Federal Trade Commission does not lose its jurisdiction over interstate commerce merely because it is in competition with intrastate activities beyond federal control.

II

[Basis for Commission's Order]

The petitioner next asserts that the record affords insufficient basis for the Commission's order. It is claimed that in other cases the Commission indicated its view that "reprocessed" alone would be a legally sufficient description, and that to overcome the effect of these decisions, the trial examiner attempted in the present proceedings to prove by the testimony of witnesses that "reprocessed" was not a sufficient disclosure. The petitioner asserts that the trial examiner failed in this attempt, because none of the witnesses testified that they were led by the label to believe the petitioner's cans contained new oil.

[Opinions of the Commission]

A. The opinions of the Commission from which the petitioner argues that "reprocessed" was deemed a sufficient disclosure are Pennsylvania Oil Terminal, Inc., 48 F. T. C. 356 (1951) and several cases pending before the Commission when the present case was considered: Double Eagle Refining Co., Docket No. 6432, Salyer Refining Co., Inc., Docket No. 6339, and Mohawk Refining, Inc., Docket No. 6588. Typical of the language upon which the petitioner relies is the following passage from Pennsylvania Oil Terminal, Inc., supra:

> "In the absence of a disclosure on the containers that the oil therein is reclaimed or reprocessed, the general understanding and belief on the part of dealers and the purchasing public is that the oil sold in containers such as are used by respondents is, in fact, new oil and not reclaimed or reprocessed oil."

[Disclosure of Prior Use]

In most of the cases to which the petitioner refers, the containers had no markings to indicate the character of the oil, and the Commission's attention was therefore not focused on the question of the exact language that would constitute a sufficient disclosure of former use. While, in its opinions, the Commission may have failed to follow every reference to "reprocessed" or "reclaimed" with the phrase "from previously used motor oil," an overall reading indicates its view that the failure to disclose the oil's prior use was the core of the unfair and deceptive practice. This impression is certainly confirmed by the Commission's order in each of the cases cited by the respondent.

> "It is ordered that the respondents . . . do forthwith cease and desist from: . . .
> "(2) Advertising, offering for sale or selling, any lubricating oil which is composed in whole or in part of oil which has been reclaimed or in any manner processed from previously used oil, without disclosing such prior use to the purchaser or potential purchaser in advertising and in sales promotion material, and by a clear and conspicuous statement to that effect on the container." (Italics supplied).

[Insufficient Disclosure]

Nothing in these orders can reasonably be interpreted as affording this respondent encouragement to use the word "reprocessed" with no additional words indicating the oil's previous use. In fact, the Salyer case suggested that the use of such a word alone would not be enough. There, after the complaint had been brought, the company added to its label the words "Guaranteed Re-refined" and an explanation that reclaimed used oil was as good as or better than crude oil. The Commission affirmed the hearing examiner's finding that the words "Guaranteed Re-refined" were insufficient to apprise the public that the oil was previously used, and that the explanation of what was meant by that phrase was inconspicuously placed and in such relatively small type that it would almost certainly escape the average purchaser's attention.

It is plain from the Salyer opinion that the Commission was unwilling to accept a disclosure of previous use which appeared less prominently than the disclosure of the process to which the oil had been subjected.

[Witnesses—Label's Tendency to Deceive]

B. At the hearing in this case, five witnesses were asked whether they could tell from petitioner's containers bearing the marking "Reprocessed Oil" if the oil was new or previously used. None of these witnesses had any prior experience or acquaintance with reclaimed used oil. Some, it appears, readily understood that the cans contained used oil which had been repurified, while others were uncertain as to the character of the contents. Although such testimony was not a strong and conclusive indictment of the petitioner's label, it indicated that some prospective purchasers were deceived by its limited disclosure. This, coupled with the Commission's own observation of the labels and its experience in regulation, was enough for a conclusion that the label had a tendency to deceive. E. F. Drew & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 235 F. 2d 735, (2 cir., 1956).

[Capacity to Deceive]

The petitioner stresses that none of the witnesses was an expert or had ever purchased used oil, and on this basis argues that the sampling of "opinion" was unfair. We think, however, that such witnesses are not always necessary. Neither customers who have actually been deceived, nor experts, need be produced where the exhibits themselves sufficiently demonstrate their capacity to deceive. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,252], 143 F. 2d 29 (7 cir., 1944); New American Library of World Literature v. Federal Trade Commission [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,752], 213 F. 2d 143 (2 cir. 1954); Hillman Periodicals, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,411], 174 F. 2d 122 (2 cir., 1949).

The petitioners have advanced several other points which are basically variations of those discussed. We think that the manner in which we have determined the principal issues makes it unnecessary to pass upon the additional arguments.

[Order Affirmed]

The order of the Federal Trade Commission is affirmed.

[¶ 69,235] United States v. Pitney-Bowes, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut. Civil Action No. 7610. Filed January 9, 1959.

Case No. 1430 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief —Compulsory Licensing of Patents—Practices Prohibited.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was ordered by a consent decree to (1) file with the court a list of the patents owned or controlled by it, (2) grant to any qualified domestic applicant a non-exclusive, unrestricted and royalty-free license to make, use, lease, and vend postage meter machines under any of the manufacturer's existing United States patents, (3) grant to any qualified domestic applicant a non-exclusive and unrestricted license to make, use, lease, and vend postage meter machines under any of the manufacturer's future United States patents, and (4) grant to any qualified foreign applicant a non-exclusive and unrestricted license under any of the manufacturer's existing and future patents to make postage meter machines for use, lease or sale in the United States. The manufacturer was enjoined from (1) granting licenses or sublicenses under certain patents except in accordance with the terms of the decree, (2) taking any exclusive right or license under any patent owned or controlled by others unless the manufacturer was also granted the right to grant sublicenses to others, and (3) making any disposition of any patents which deprived it of the power to grant the licenses required by the decree unless the acquiring party consented to be bound by the decree. The manufacturer was also ordered to grant to licensees licensed pursuant to the decree various kinds of technical assistance for certain periods of time and upon specified conditions.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.30.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Compulsory Licensing of Patents—Terms of Licensing Agreements—Royalties—Provisions Permitted.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines, after having been ordered by a consent decree to grant licenses under its various patents to qualified applicants, was prohibited from including in those licenses any restrictions other than those specified by the decree. Licenses issued under the manufacturer's existing United States patents could be non-transferable and they could contain a reasonable provision for marking the machines manufactured, used, leased, or sold under such licenses with the number of the patents covering the machines. As to licenses issued to domestic applicants under the manufacturer's future United States patents, and licenses issued to foreign applicants under the manufacturer's existing and future patents, (1) they could be non-transferable, (2) a reasonable royalty could be charged, (3) periodic royalty reports could be required, (4) reasonable provisions could be made for cancellation upon the licensee's failure to make royalty reports, pay royalties, or permit inspection of its books and records, and (5) reasonable provisions could be made for marking the machines manufactured, used, leased, or sold under such licenses with the number of the patents covering the machines. Also, the licenses must permit cancellation by the licensee at any time after one year from the initial date of the license upon the giving of thirty days' notice.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.30.

Monopolies—Monopolies Under Sherman Act, Section 2—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Patents—Institution of Infringement Suits—Order to Grant Immunity from Infringement Suit.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was prohibited by a consent decree from instituting or threatening to institute any action, suit, or proceeding against any person for any act of patent infringement alleged to have occurred prior to the date of the decree. The manufacturer was also ordered to grant to any qualified domestic applicant licensed pursuant to the decree, with respect to any postage meter machines manufactured in the United States pursuant to such license, a non-exclusive and unrestricted grant of immunity from suit under any foreign patent or application owned or controlled by the manufacturer at the time of the issuance of such license.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.525.

Monopolies—Monopolies Under Sherman Act, Section 2—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Horizontal Integration—Acquiring Stock or Assets of Competitors.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was prohibited by a consent decree from acquiring, for a period of ten years, any of the assets or capital stock of, or financial interest in, any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of postage meter machines. However, such an acquisition could be permitted by the court, upon an application by the manufacturer after the decree had been in effect for five years, and upon a showing by the manufacturer that the effect of such acquisition would not be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of postage meter machines.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.120.

Monopolies—Monopolies Under Sherman Act, Section 2—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Contracts and Agreements Not to Compete—Allocation of Markets and Customers—Distribution Agreements.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of postage meter machines which (1) allocated or divided territories, markets, or customers for the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of postage meter machines, (2) designated the manufacturer as a distributor or agent for the distribution, lease, or sale in the United States of postage meter machines manufactured by others, and (3) designated any other person engaged in the manufacture of postage meter machines as an agent or distributor of the manufacturer. However, the manufacturer was not prohibited from entering into bona fide exclusive distributorship arrangements for designated territories with persons not then engaged in the manufacture or distribution of postage meter machines produced by a person other than the manufacturer.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.240, 2610.300.

Monopolies—Monopolies Under Sherman Act, Section 2—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Foreign Activities and Agreements—Restricting Imports and Exports.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of postage meter machines which restricted, hindered, limited or prevented such person, or any other person, from importing such machines into the United States or exporting them from the United States.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.340.

Monopolies—Monopolies Under Sherman Act, Section 2—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of such machines which fixed any price, or any element of price, for the distribution, sale, or lease of such machines.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Specific Relief—Showing the Existence of Substantial Competition.—A manufacturer of postage meter machines was directed to show, within six months following the expiration of a ten-year period from the date of the decree, that substantial competition then existed with respect to the manufacture, sale, rental, and distribution of postage meter machines in the United States. Such competition should be deemed to exist if persons in each major market area of the United States then had the opportunity, actual and practical in fact, to purchase or rent from persons other than the manufacturer, on reasonably competitive terms, postage meter machines or devices and mechanisms serving purposes equivalent thereto under Post Office Department regulations. If the manufacturer should fail to establish to the satisfaction of the court that such competition then existed, the manufacturer should submit to the court a plan designed to bring about such competition as soon as possible. The decree further provided that the manufacturer could be relieved of its obligations under those sections at any time within ten years by applying to the court for such relief and establishing that a competitor or competitors, in no manner affiliated with it, was then actually engaged in the commercial manufacture, sale, rental and distribution of postage meter machines in the United States.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Permissive Provisions—Acquisition of Stock or Assets.—A consent decree which prohibited a manufacturer of postage meter machines from acquiring any of the assets or capital stock of, or any financial interest in, any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, or leasing of postage meter machines also provided that the manufacturer, upon application to the court at any time after the decree had been in effect for five years, could be permitted to make such an acquisition upon a showing that its effect would not be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The manufacturer was also permitted by the decree to (1) acquire the securities or assets of any of its subsidiaries, (2) form subsidiaries and transfer to them its own assets or those of its subsidiaries, and (3) acquire the stock or assets of its agents or distributors who were not engaged in the manufacture or distribution of postage meter machines not produced by the manufacturer.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

ROBERT P. ANDERSON, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on January 9, 1959, and defendant, Pitney-Bowes, Inc., by its attorneys, having appeared and denied the substantive allegations thereof, and plaintiff and defendant having severally consented to the making and entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission in respect to any issue:

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon consent to the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim against the defendant Pitney-Bowes, Inc. upon which relief can be granted under Section 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Postage meter" shall mean any device or mechanism, and the component parts thereof, which prints, registers and cancels pre-paid postage on mail matter;

(B) "Mailing machine" or "base machine" shall mean any device or mechanism, and the component parts thereof, used to support or facilitate operation of a postage meter, and to feed, moisten, close and seal or stack mail matter impressed with postage by a postage meter;

(C) "Postage meter machine" means any combination of (i) a postage meter and (ii) a mailing or base machine, which combination may be separable into two or more units or complete in itself when actually operated;

(D) "Existing patent" or "existing patents" shall mean any, some or all claims of the following:

(1) United States and foreign Letters Patent owned or controlled by defendant on the date of entry of this Final Judgment;

(2) Applications for United States and foreign Letters Patent, and any Letters Patent which may issue on any such applications, which applications were filed prior to, and are owned or controlled by defendant on, the date of entry of this Final Judgment;

(3) United States and foreign Letters Patent owned or controlled on the date of entry of this Final Judgment by any person other than defendant and under which defendant on such date has the power to grant licenses or sub-licenses to others;

(4) Any divisions, reissues or extensions of the Letters Patent described in clauses (1), (2) and (3) above; relating to postage meters, mailing or base machines or postage meter machines;

(E) "Future patent" or "future patents" means any United States or foreign Letters Patent or applications therefor and patents which may issue thereon (exclusive of existing patents), and any divisions, reissues or extensions of such Letters Patent, relating to postage meters, mailing or base machines or postage meter machines, (i) which may be owned or controlled by defendant during a period of five (5) years after the date of entry of this Final Judgment or (ii) under which defendant may, during such period, acquire the power to grant licenses or sub-licenses to others;

(F) "Person" means any individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other legal or business entity other than the defendant, its directors, officers, employees, agents or subsidiaries;

(G) "United States" means the continental United States, its territories and possessions;

(H) "Qualified domestic applicant" means any person in the United States certified, in writing, by the United States Post Office Department as meeting the qualifications established by said Department to manufacture postage meters or postage meter machines;

(I) "Qualified foreign applicant" means any person outside the United States who (1) represents, in writing, to the United States Post Office Department, its intention to manufacture, outside the United States, postage meter machines to be used, leased or sold in the United States in accordance with applicable rules and regulations of such Department, and (2) is certified, in writing, by such Department as meeting the qualifications established by said Department to manufacture postage meters or postage meter machines for use, lease or sale in the United States;

(J) "Subsidiary" means a corporation more than 50% of whose stock entitled to vote upon election of directors (other than preferred stock entitled to vote upon the failure of the corporation to pay certain dividends) is, directly or indirectly, owned by defendant;

(K) "Defendant" means the defendant Pitney-Bowes, Inc.

III

[Applicability]

(A) The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to the defendant shall apply also to each of its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with such defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise;

[Notice]

(B) Defendant is ordered and directed forthwith to serve a copy of this Final Judgment upon (i) each member of its Board of Directors, (ii) each Vice President who is not a member of its Board of Directors, and (iii) the chief executive officer of each of its subsidiaries, and, within thirty (30) days after the date of entry of this Final Judgment, to file with this Court, and serve upon the plaintiff, an affidavit as to the fact and manner of its compliance with this subsection (B), setting forth in said affidavit the name, position and address of each person upon whom a copy of this Final Judgment shall have been served as herein directed.

IV

[Order to Grant Patent Licenses]

(A) Defendant is ordered and directed, within ninety (90) days after entry of this Final Judgment, to file with this Court, and serve upon the plaintiff, an affidavit showing separately, as of the date of this Final Judgment:

(1) The number, and date of issue (or filing, as to applications) and name of owner, where applicable, of each existing patent;

(2) The number, date of issue (or filing, as to applications) and name of the owner, where applicable, of each existing United States patent owned or controlled by the defendant on the date of this Final Judgment.

(B) Defendant is ordered and directed to grant to any qualified domestic applicant, making written request therefor to the defendant, a non-exclusive, unrestricted and royalty-free license to make (but not to have made—except for component parts), use, lease and vend postage meter machines under any, some or all, as the applicant may request, existing United States patents;

(C) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from including in any license issued pursuant to subsection (B) any restriction or limitation whatsoever except that (i) the license may be non-transferable, and (ii) reasonable provision may be made for marking the postage meter machines manufactured, used, leased or sold by the licensee under such license with the number of the patents covering such machines under which the licensee is licensed.

(D) Defendant is ordered and directed to grant to any qualified domestic applicant making written request therefor to the defendant, a non-exclusive and unrestricted license to make (but not to have made—except for component parts), use, lease and vend postage meter machines under any, some or all, as the applicant may request, future United States patents;

(E) Defendant is ordered and directed to grant to any qualified foreign applicant making written request therefor to the defendant a non-exclusive and unrestricted license under any, some or all, as the applicant may request, existing patents and future patents to make (but not to have made—except for component parts) postage meter machines for use, lease or sale in the United States;

(F) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from including in any license issued pursuant to subsections (D) and (E) hereof any restriction or limitation whatsoever except that:

(1) The license may be non-transferable;

(2) A reasonable royalty may be charged, which royalty shall be uniform and non-discriminatory as among licensees procuring the same rights under the same patents;

(3) Reasonable provisions may be made for periodic royalty reports by the licensee to the defendant and inspection of the books and records of the licensee by an independent auditor or any other person acceptable to both defendant and the licensee, who shall report to the defendant only the amount of the royalty due and payable;

(4) Reasonable provisions may be made for cancellation of the license upon failure of the licensee to make the reports, pay the royalties or permit inspection of his books and records as herein provided;

(5) The license must provide that the licensee may cancel the license at any time after one (1) year from the initial date thereof by giving to the defendant thirty (30) days' notice in writing;

(6) Reasonable provisions may be made for marking the machines manufactured, used, leased or sold by the licensee under such license with the number of the patents covering such machines under which the licensee is licensed;

(G) Upon receipt of a written request for a license under the provisions of subsections (D) and (E) hereof, defendant shall advise the applicant, in writing within thirty (30) days, of the royalty it deems reasonable for the patent or patents to which the application pertains. If such applicant and defendant are unable to agree upon what constitutes a reasonable royalty within ninety (90) days from the date the written application for the license was received by the defendant, either the applicant or defendant may, upon notice to the plaintiff, apply to this Court for the determination of a reasonable royalty. In any such proceeding the burden of proof shall be upon the defendant to establish the reasonableness of any royalty requested. Pending the completion of any such court proceeding, the applicant shall have the right to make (but not to have made—except for component parts), use, lease and vend under the patents to which his application pertains without payment of royalty or other compensation, but subject to the following provisions: defendant may, upon notice to the plaintiff, apply to this Court to fix an interim royalty rate pending final determination of what constitutes a reasonable royalty. If this Court fixes such interim royalty rate, defendant shall then issue and the applicant shall accept a license providing for the periodic payment of royalties at such interim rate from the date upon which the applicant requested the license. If the applicant fails to accept such license or fails to pay the interim royalty in accordance therewith, such action may be grounds for the dismissal of his application for a license; in the case of such dismissal, the applicant shall pay any royalties found by the Court to be due to the defendant. Whether or not an interim royalty is fixed by the Court, a final Court determination of reasonable royalty shall be applicable to the applicant for a license from the date upon which the applicant requested such license, and to any other licensee, at its option, then having the same rights under the same patents from the date of such final determination. If the applicant fails to accept a license pursuant to such Court determination, such applicant shall pay any royalties found by the Court to be due to the defendant;

(H) Nothing herein shall prevent any applicant from attacking, in the aforesaid proceedings or in any other controversy, the validity or scope of any of the patents, nor shall this Final Judgment be construed as imputing any validity or value to any of said patents;

(I) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from (i) granting, after date of this Final Judgment, any license or sublicense under any patents to which this Section IV shall apply, except in accordance with, and pursuant to, the terms of this Final Judgment, and (ii) taking, or accepting, after the date of this Final Judgment, any right or license under any patent owned or controlled by any person other than defendant, which right or license is, by its terms or in fact, exclusive to the defendant unless the defendant is also granted the right to grant sublicenses to others;

(J) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from making any sale or other disposition of any patent which deprives it of the power or authority to grant the licenses required by this Section IV, unless the purchaser, transferee or assignee shall file with this Court, and with the plaintiff, prior to consummation of any such transaction, its consent to be bound by the applicable provisions of this Section IV with respect to each patent;

(K) Defendant is ordered and directed, insofar as it has or hereafter may acquire the power to do so, to grant upon written request and without compensation, to any qualified domestic applicant licensed pursuant to this Section IV, with respect to any postage meter machines manufactured in the United States pursuant to such license, a non-exclusive and unrestricted grant of immunity from suit under any foreign patent or application owned or controlled by the defendant at the time of issuance of such license;

(L) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from instituting or threatening to institute any action, suit, or proceeding against any person for use of or any act of infringement of any patent alleged to have occurred prior to the date of this Final Judgment.

V

[Order to Grant Technical Assistance]

(A) Defendant, for a period of ten (10) years from the date of this Final Judgment, and upon written request therefor from any person licensed under existing or future patents pursuant to Section IV of this Final Judgment, is ordered and directed to furnish to such licensee, for a reasonable charge approximating cost, copies of any technical manuals, books of instruction, drawings, specifications, blueprints, pamphlets, diagrams or other similar documents, which it furnishes generally to its own manufacturing, servicing, repair or maintenance employees relating to the manufacture, repair, servicing or maintenance of postage meter machines commercially produced on the date of this Final Judgment.

(B) Defendant, for a period of five (5) years from the date of this Final Judgment, and upon written request therefor from any person licensed pursuant to Section IV of this Final Judgment, is ordered and directed to furnish to such licensee, for a reasonable charge approximating cost, copies of the patents under which such person is licensed and such of the defendant's technical information as licensee may reasonably need to enable him to utilize the invention or inventions of any of the patents licensed by the defendant to such licensee in such licensee's manufacture, not including, however, the type of documents referred to in sub-section (A) above.

(C) For a period of five (5) years from the date of this Final Judgment, and upon receipt of a written request from any person licensed pursuant to Section IV of this Final Judgment representing that the technical information furnished to such person by the defendant pursuant to subsections (A) and (B) of this Section V is inadequate or insufficient to enable such person satisfactorily to manufacture, operate, maintain, service or repair postage meter machines manufactured under his license from the defendant, the defendant is ordered and directed to make available to such licensee at the expense of the licensee for travel and at reasonable times and for reasonable periods, technically qualified personnel from among its own employees, for consultation with such licensee at the licensee's place of manufacture regarding the licensee's manufacture, repair, servicing or maintenance of postage meter machines. This subsection (C) shall not require the defendant to send any person outside of the United States.

(D) For a period of five (5) years from the date of this Final Judgment, any person licensed by the defendant pursuant to Section IV of this Final Judgment shall, upon written request to the defendant, and at his own expense, be permitted to visit the principal plant of the defendant manufacturing postage meter machines for the purpose of observing, and being advised as to, the methods, processes, machines and equipment then being used by the defendant in its commercial production of postage meter machines; provided, however, that such visits may be restricted as follows:

(1) To not more than 3 officers or employees of the licensee at any one time;

(2) To not more than 4 such visits per year.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(E) The defendant may, as a condition to furnishing the benefits set forth in the foregoing subsections of this Section V, require the licensee, in writing, to agree to maintain any technical information received by such licensee from the defendant in confidence and use such information solely in connection with the manufacture, maintenance, service or repair by or for the licensee of postage meter machines.

(F) In order to accomplish the purposes of this Final Judgment, nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the defendant from providing, upon terms and conditions not inconsistent with the other provisions of this Final Judgment, to any person requesting it, information or assistance not otherwise provided for in this Final Judgment.

(G) The furnishing by defendant of patent licenses and technical assistance pursuant to the requirements of Section IV and V of this Final Judgment shall not, in and of itself, create or constitute as to defendant, any guaranty or warranty as to machines not manufactured by it.

VI

[Acquisition of Stock or Assets]

(A) For a period of ten (10) years from the date of this Final Judgment, the defendant is enjoined and restrained from acquiring, directly or indirectly, through nominees, agents or otherwise, any of the assets or capital stock of or any financial interest in, any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution or leasing of postage meter machines.

(B) Nothing in this Section VI, however, shall be construed to prohibit (i) acquisition by defendant of all or part of the securities or assets of any of its subsidiaries; (ii) formation of subsidiaries by defendant and the transfer thereto of assets of defendant or of its subsidiaries; (iii) acquisition by the defendant of all or any part of the stock or assets of any agent or distributor of defendant's products, who is not engaged in the manufacture or distribution of postage meter machines not manufactured by defendant; (iiii) application to this Court, at any time after this Final Judgment has been in effect for five (5) years from the date thereof, upon notice to the plaintiff, for permission to acquire any or all of the assets or capital stock of or financial interest in, a person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution or leasing of postage meter machines, which may be granted upon a showing by defendant to the satisfaction of the Court, that the effect of any such acquisition will not be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, distribution or leasing of postage meter machines.

[Practices Prohibited]

(A) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, maintaining, or claiming any right under, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any person engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution or leasing of postage meter machines which:

(1) allocates or divides territories, markets or customers for the manufacture, sale, distribution or leasing of postage meter machines;

(2) fixes, determines or adheres to any price, or element of price, for the distribution, sale or lease of any postage meter machines;

(3) restricts, hinders, limits or prevents such person or any other person from importing postage meter machines into the United States or exporting such machines from the United States;

(4) appoints or designates the defendant as a distributor or agent for the distribution, lease or sale in the United States of postage meter machines produced by any person engaged in the manufacture of postage meter machines;

(5) appoints or designates, as a distributor or agent of the defendant, for the distribution, sale or lease of postage meter machines manufactured by the defendant, any person engaged in the manufacture of postage meter machines; provided that the foregoing shall not be construed to prohibit defendant from entering into bona fide exclusive distributorship arrangements for designated territories with any person not then engaged in the manufacture or distribution of postage meter machines manufactured by a person other than the defendant.

VIII

[Promoting Competition]

(A) Within six months following the ten (10) year period from the date of this Final Judgment, upon application by the plaintiff, the defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court that substantial competition then exists with respect to the manufacture, sale, rental and distribution of postage meter machines in the United States. Such competition shall be deemed to exist if persons in each major market area of the United States then have the opportunity, actual and practical in fact, to purchase or rent from other than the defendant on reasonably competitive terms, postage meter machines or devices and mechanisms serving purposes equivalent thereto, under Post Office Department regulations.

(B) If defendant fails to establish to the satisfaction of this Court that such competition then exists, defendant shall submit to the Court a plan, which to the satisfaction of this Court, in light of the conditions then existing, as well as the steps defendant has taken to try and bring about such competition, with full hearing and opportunity for both parties to be heard and present evidence, is designed to bring about such competition as soon as possible. Such plan shall provide for bringing about such competition, in a manner as, by the Court may be deemed necessary or appropriate (1) by substantial assistance to a competitor or potential competitor; or (2) by the establishment of competition by defendant out of its assets, business and properties; or (3) by some other or different method.

(C) Upon such terms as this Court may direct, the defendant may be relieved of its obligations under subsections (A) and (B) of this Section VIII at any time within ten (10) years from the date of this Final Judgment, by (i) applying to this Court, upon notice to the plaintiff, for such relief and (ii) establishing, to the satisfaction of this Court, (a) that a competitor or competitors to the defendant (and in no manner, directly or indirectly, affiliated with the defendant) is or are then actually engaged in the commercial manufacture, sale, rental and distribution of postage meter machines in the United States, and (b) that by reason of the then existence of such competitor or competitors to the defendant, the competition specified in subsection (A) of this Section VIII has then been accomplished.

IX

[Notice of Judgment]

(A) Defendant is ordered and directed, within ninety (90) days from the date of this Final Judgment, to furnish a true and complete copy of this Final Judgment (a) to the Postmaster General of the United States and (b) to each person who makes written request to the defendant for a copy of this Final Judgment.

(B) Defendant is ordered and directed to cause a copy of this Final Judgment to be published not less than once a month for three (3) successive months after the date of this Final Judgment, in a trade publication of general circulation to persons engaged in manufacturing office machines and equipment.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized claim of privilege, (a) reasonable access during the office hours of defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession, custody or control of defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment, and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of defendant, but without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers, directors, agents or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matter. Upon the written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, defendant shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be reasonably necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section X shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the plaintiff, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

XI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

(A) Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling either of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions contained herein, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and the punishment of the violation of any of the provisions contained herein.

(B) Jurisdiction is additionally expressly reserved to enter appropriate orders modifying Section V(A), (C) and (D) hereof, if such orders are consented to by the plaintiff, which consent is not to be unreasonably withheld, with respect to the obligation of the defendant to furnish the technical assistance referred to in Section V(A), (C) and (D) hereof, where the furnishing of same would tend to defeat the objectives of this Final Judgment to assure effective competition between defendant and others in the postage meter machine industry and to avoid undue concentration in such industry.

[¶ 69,236] Crosse & Blackwell Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7719. Argued November 10, 1958. Decided January 5, 1959. Modified, February 5, 1959.

On Petition to Review and Set Aside an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act and Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Price Discrimination—Jurisdiction of Federal Trade Commission and Secretary of Agriculture—Packers and Stockyards Act—Canner Engaged in Preparing Meat and Other Food Products.—A canner of various food products, a small portion of which contained meat, was subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission in its action charging the canner with violating the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act. If the only business of the canner was the preparation and sale of products containing meat, its business would be that of a "packer." Its trade practices, therefore, would be subject to regulation by the Secretary of Agriculture under the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 and would be beyond the reach of the Federal Trade Commission. In view of the language of the Packers and Stockyards Act prior to its amendment in 1958 and in the light of the purposes the Congress in 1921 clearly intended to serve, there seems no doubt that it was never intended that relatively inconsequential activity which might be classified as meat packing should insulate all of the other activities of a corporation from the reach of the Federal Trade Commission. The Act is susceptible to the construction that one engaged in the business of processing meats for sale is subject to regulation in that business as a packer under the Packers and Stockyards Act, while any other business in which he may be engaged is subject to the general restraints of the antitrust laws, and that jurisdiction to enforce the antitrust laws was left in the Federal Trade Commission, except insofar as the businesses of the stockyard and packing industry, as such, were removed from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. A literal interpretation of the exemption of Section 5(a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, prior to its amendment in 1958, must be laid aside for it is plainly at variance with the policy of the legislation as a whole, and if held to grant a more extensive exemption than the Secretary of Agriculture's regulatory power would produce an absurd result. A Commission order against the canner was affirmed by the court.

For the respondent: Carleton A. Harkrader, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission (Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, and James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, on brief).

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6463.

Before SOBELOFF, Chief Judge, HAYNSWORTH, Circuit Judge, and ROSZEL C. THOMSEN, District Judge.

[Issue]

HAYNSWORTH, Circuit Judge [In full text]: We are not persuaded to adopt the literal view that a canner of soups, relishes, preserves and similar products, including a small number containing meat ingredients, is a packer within the meaning of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, 7 USCA §§ 181-195, 221-229, and as such is immune from an order of the Federal Trade Commission when, in connection with its general business, it violates § 2 of the Clayton Act, 15 USCA § 13.

[Petitioner's Business]

Crosse & Blackwell is a well-known canner of soups, marmalades, tomato products, pickles, relishes and other food products. It puts up and markets approximately 150 different products under the brand name "Crosse & Blackwell" and another 35 under the brand name "Keiler," its annual sales amounting to approximately $14,000,000. Among its products there are 14 which contain meat or meat stock as one of the ingredients,[1] and which collectively account for something less than three per cent of the annual sales of all of the products of Crosse & Blackwell. The meat content of these products is derived from cuts which Crosse & Blackwell purchases from slaughter houses and which it then trims, bones, cuts, mixes and cooks for subsequent mixing with other ingredients in the cans. Because it processes meats, Crosse & Blackwell obtained registration from the Department of Agriculture under the Meat Inspection Act, 21 USCA §§ 71-95, as it was required to do, and officials of that Department supervise and inspect Crosse & Blackwell's plant and operations, insofar as they relate to meat products, on an almost daily basis.

[FTC Jurisdiction]

Crosse & Blackwell sells its products through jobbers and wholesalers, or directly, to grocery stores and other retailers of food products. It was charged with having violated § 2 of the Clayton Act by giving credit to certain retailers for advertising Crosse & Blackwell products when such credits were not given or offered to competitors of the favored retailers. For the purpose of this proceeding, Crosse & Blackwell conceded that there would be substantial evidence that it had followed the questioned practice, chose not to stand upon its denial of the charges on the merits and elected to defend solely upon the ground that, because of its processing of meat, it is a packer within the meaning of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921. This contention leads Crosse & Blackwell to the conclusion that exclusive jurisdiction to question its trade practices, with respect to all of its products, is lodged in the Secretary of Agriculture, and that such jurisdiction has been wholly withdrawn from the Federal Trade Commission. The argument is that what Crosse & Blackwell does with meats to be used as an ingredient in some of its products subjects it to the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, 7 USCA § 191, which, by definition of a "packer," regulates activities of "any person engaged in the business * * * (b) of manufacturing or preparing * * * meat food products for sale or shipment in commerce * * *." It contends that its products containing meat are "meat food products," which the Act defines as the edible products of the slaughtering and meat packing industry, and that it is engaged in the business of preparing them for sale and shipment in commerce. Since § 202

[1] These 14 products, with their meat or meat stock content both before and after cooking are as follows:

Name	Raw Percentage	Cooked Percentage
Liver and Beef Paste	50%	39%
Corned Beef Hash	50	35
Ham and Tongue Paste	36	24 of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 (7 USCA § 192) prohibits any packer from engaging in certain unfair trade practices and § 203 (7 USCA § 193) authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, after appropriate proceedings, to prevent the continuance of such unlawful practices, Crosse & Blackwell, concludes that, as a packer, it is subject to the restraints of the Packers and Stockyards Act, and by § 406 of that Act (7 USCA §§ 226-227) as well as by § 5(a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USCA 45(a)(6)) the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture is exclusive and the Federal Trade Commission powerless to proceed against it.[2] The Trial Examiner agreed with Crosse & Blackwell, but the Commission reversed, and Crosse & Blackwell has brought its legal contention here for decision.

[Assumption]

We may start with the assumption that if the only business of Crosse & Blackwell was the preparation and sale of corned beef hash, and its other products containing meat, we would agree that its products were "meat food products," its business that of a "packer," and its trade practices subject to regulation under the Packers and Stockyards Act and beyond the reach of the prohibitive powers of the Federal Trade Commission. United Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,012], 110 F. 2d 473; Trunz Pork Stores, Inc. v. Wallace, 2 Cir., 70 F. 2d 688. Its total activity is not to be finally characterized upon a look at a small portion of the whole, however, and we must inquire whether its general business is the sort which Congress intended to, and did, withdraw from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

[Statutory Construction]

As Mr. Justice Frankfurter has said,[3] this "* * * statute, like other living organisms, derives significance and sustenance from its environment, from which it cannot be sev-

[2] The relevant sections of the several statutes, prior to the 1958 Amendments, are:

§ 2(a)(3). "The term 'meat food products' means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat packing industry—if edible."

§ 2(a)(5). "The term 'livestock products' means all products and by-products (other than meats and meat food products) of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived in whole or in part from livestock * * *."

§ 201. "* * * The term 'packer' means any person engaged in the business (a) of buying livestock in commerce for purposes of slaughter, or (b) of manufacturing or preparing meats or meat food products for sale or shipment in commerce, or (c) of manufacturing or preparing livestock products for sale or shipment in commerce, or (d) of marketing meats, meat food products, livestock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, or eggs, in commerce; but no person engaged in such business of manufacturing or preparing livestock products or in such marketing business shall be considered a packer unless—

"(1) Such person is also engaged in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) of this section, or unless

"(2) Such persons owns or controls, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, by himself or through his agents, servants, or employees, any interest in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) of this section, or unless

"(3) Any interest in such business of manufacturing or preparing livestock products, or in such marketing business is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, by himself or through his agents, servants, or employees, by any person engaged in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) of this section, or unless

"(4) Any person or persons jointly or severally, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, by themselves or through their agents, servants, or employees, own or control in the aggregate 20 per centum or more of the voting power or control in such business of manufacturing or preparing livestock products, or in such marketing business and also 20 per centum or more of such power or control in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) of this section."

§ 202. "It shall be unlawful for any packer or any live poultry dealer or handler to:

"(a) Engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in commerce; or * * *."

§ 406(b). "So long as this chapter remains in effect, the Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this chapter is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary except when the Secretary of Agriculture, in the exercise of his duties hereunder, shall request of the said Federal Trade Commission that it make investigations and report in any case."

Federal Trade Commission Act, § 5(a)(6). "The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks, common carriers subject to the Acts to regulate commerce, air carriers and foreign air carriers subject to the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and persons, partnerships, or corporations subject to the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, except as provided in section 227(b) of Title 7, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."

ered without being mutilated. Especially is this true where the statute, like the one before us, is part of a legislative process having a history and a purpose. The meaning of such a statute cannot be gained by confining inquiry within its four corners. Only the historic process of which such legislation is an incomplete fragment—that to which it gave rise as well as that which gave rise to it—can yield its true meaning. * * *" It behooves us, therefore, to refer briefly to the problem which the Congress sought to resolve and the purpose to be served when the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 was enacted.

[Packers and Stockyards Act]

The Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 has a long legislative history which began with realization of the tremendous potential power of the five great packing companies of that day to control both the prices of livestock and the price to the consumers of meat products. The stockyards and slaughtering centers, controlled by a handful of interests, were a bottleneck through which the livestock had to move on the way to the ultimate consumer, and those in control at the bottleneck were in position to misuse power to the detriment both of the producer and of the consumer. It was thus thought a proper and essential governmental purpose to provide controls of the prices and practices of the stockyards and packers, so that the interests of the producers, who sold their livestock through the established channels, and the purchasing public, who were dependent upon the packers for their supplies of meat, would be protected from the monopolistic power of those in control of the marketing facilities. The problem and the purpose were summarized by Mr. Chief Justice Taft in Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 42 S. Ct. 397, 66 L. Ed. 735, when he said:

"The object to be secured by the act is the free and unburdened flow of live stock from the ranges and farms of the West and Southwest through the great stockyards and slaughtering centers on the borders of that region, and thence, in the form of meat products, to the consuming cities of the country in the Middle West and East, or, still as live stock, to the feeding places and fattening farms in the Middle West or East, for further preparation for the market.

"The chief evil feared is the monopoly of the packers, enabling them unduly and arbitrarily to lower prices to the shipper who sells, and unduly and arbitrarily to increase the price to the consumer who buys. Congress thought that the power to maintain this monopoly was aided by control of the stockyards. Another evil which it sought to provide against by the act was exorbitant charges, duplication of commissions, deceptive practices in respect to prices, in the passage of the live stock through the stockyards, all made possible by collusion between the stockyards management and the commission men, on the one hand, and the packers and dealers on the other. * * *

"The act * * * treats the various stockyards of the country as great national public utilities to promote the flow of commerce from the ranges and farms of the West to the consumers in the East."

The Packers and Stockyards Act would never have been adopted by the Congress if the marketing of livestock and the distribution of meat products did not present problems which, in the view of the Congress, were insufficiently met by the antitrust laws of general application. The problems were peculiar to agriculture, and it was appropriate that the regulatory responsibility be placed upon the Secretary of Agriculture and removed from the Federal Trade Commission. That one enterprise should not be subject to conflicting regulation in the same field, the Congress was careful to provide that the Federal Trade Commission should have no jurisdiction to proceed against any business subject to regulation by the Secretary of Agriculture under the Packers and Stockyards Act, but it is clear that the substance of what was intended to be withdrawn from the controls of the Federal Trade Commission and subjected to regulation by the Secretary of Agriculture were the businesses of the stockyards and of the packers as those industries were known and understood at the time. Doubtless the Congress did not anticipate that a great steel company might attempt to escape the restraints of the antitrust laws by operating a small packing plant, taking the position that it was engaged in the business of a packer and was thus subject, in its steel business, to regulation only by the Secretary of Agriculture under the Packers and Stockyards Act, or that a canner of miscellaneous food items might avoid compliance with the general antitrust laws solely by reason of the fact that it used a relatively small quantity of meat as an ingredient in some of its products, for it did not expressly provide in 1921 that one engaged in parallel businesses, or in peripheral activity, would be subject to regulation as a packer under the Packers and Stockyards Act to the extent that he was engaged in that business and subject to regulation under the general antitrust laws to the extent he was engaged in other businesses. Whatever doubt there may have been on that score has been removed by the adoption of Public Law 909, 85th Congress, approved September 2, 1958. But if we look to the language of the Act prior to the 1958 amendment, in the light of the purposes the Congress in 1921 clearly intended to serve, there seems no doubt that it was never intended that relatively inconsequential activity which might be classified as meat packing should insulate all of the other activities of a corporation from the reach of the Federal Trade Commission.

The language of the Act is susceptible to the construction that one engaged in the business of processing meats for sale is subject to regulation in that business as a packer under the Packers and Stockyards Act, while any other business in which he may be engaged is subject to the general restraints of the antitrust laws, and that jurisdiction to enforce the antitrust laws was left in the Federal Trade Commission, except insofar as the businesses of the stockyard and packing industry, as such, were removed from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. It is the business of a packer which is subjected to regulation under the Act and § 406(b) withdraws from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission only such businesses. That section provides that the Commission "shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this Act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary * * *," which is an exclusion not of persons nor of corporate entities, nor of affiliated enterprises, but of integrated activities which were intended by the Act to be subjected to the regulatory controls of the Secretary of Agriculture.

[FTC Act Exemption]

The difficulty comes from the Federal Trade Commission Act, which prior to the 1958 amendment exempted "persons, partnerships or corporations subject to" the Packers and Stockyards Act, but it is not reasonable to suppose that the Congress intended the limitations upon the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission to be more extensive than the regulatory powers conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture and intended by the Congress to be exercised effectively by him. Harmonious reconciliation of the several statutory provisions can be achieved in the light of the apparent statutory scheme to subject the business of the packer and the stockyard operator to the regulatory control of the Secretary of Agriculture, whose department was particularly concerned with the problem and who had the means of effectively discharging the responsibility, while enforcement of the general antitrust laws, as they applied to other businesses than that of packers and stockyard operators, was left to the Federal Trade Commission, each exercising its particular functions in its own special field where a single corporation was engaged in activities, some of which were and some of which were not subject to regulation under the Packers and Stockyards Act.

We construe the Act, as we must, to effectuate the apparent purpose and intention of the Congress. United States v. Champlin Refining Co., 341 U. S. 290, 71 S. Ct. 715, 95 L. We do not overlook the fact that a retailer or manufacturer of nonedible livestock products was made subject to the Packers and Stockyards Act if he should own more than a twenty per cent interest in a packer or a stockyard. The integration of the operations of stockyards and packers with those of retailers of meat products or of the manufacturers of other livestock products requires extension of the control of the primary regulatory agency. There is much reason for the belief that a vertically integrated business which handles meat through all of the steps from the hoof to the hand of the ultimate consumer may be effectively regulated only if the regulatory responsibility is lodged in one agency. Such beliefs and considerations, however, find no basis in the bare fact that different businesses in parallel may be lodged under the same corporate roof. The business of Crosse & Blackwell may be said to be unitary, but that of a canner of miscellaneous products is so far removed from that of the packing industry, upon which the attention of Congress was focused, that it may be said to have been reached by the Act, if at all, only to the extent it is actually concerned with the processing of meats.

[General Business Conduct]

The proceeding here arose out of the general conduct of the business of Crosse & Blackwell. It concerns credits for advertising its products in general, not just that small proportion of its products which contain meat ingredients. The problem is not one of those associated with the problem sought to be met by the Packers and Stockyards Act, nor is it one with which the Secretary of Agriculture is primarily concerned. It is a problem commonplace to the Federal Trade Commission, one which it has the general responsibility of meeting and which it may handle without prejudice to the effective performance of the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Packers and Stockyards Act.

[Conclusion]

We conclude that Crosse & Blackwell was subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission when charged in the complaint with having given discriminatory advertising credits for its general products, though a small proportion of them contained meat ingredients. Such a construction is required by the apparent purpose and intention of Congress. It avoids having the Secretary of Agriculture saddled with responsibility in areas far beyond the bounds of his concern. It permits the orderly enforcement of the antitrust laws by the particular agency established for that purpose, with only such necessary exceptions as arise from the effective regulatory activity of other agencies.

[Order Enforced]

The petition to review will be denied and the order of the Federal Trade Commission will be affirmed.

Ohio Antitrust (Valentine) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Labor Unions—Application of Ohio Antitrust Law to Provision of Collective Bargaining Agreement Within Subject Matter Controlled by Federal Law—Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts.—The Ohio antitrust law cannot be applied to prevent a teamsters' union and a group of motor carriers from carrying out a provision of a collective bargaining agreement upon a subject matter as to which federal law directs them to bargain. An Ohio court had held that the provision of the agreement, which prescribed terms and conditions regulating the minimum rental and certain other terms of lease when a motor vehicle is leased to a carrier by an owner who drives his vehicle in the carrier's service and which differed substantially from an agreement under which an owner of trucks leased his equipment to motor carriers, violated the Ohio antitrust law. The objective of the provision was to protect a negotiated wage scale against the possible undermining through diminution of the owner's wages for driving which might result from a rental which did not cover his operating costs. The point of the provision was not price fixing but wages, and it constituted a direct frontal attack upon a problem thought to threaten the maintenance of the basic wage structure established by the collective bargaining contract. Under the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts, the carriers as employers were under a duty to bargain collectively with the union as to the subject matter of the provision. The goal of federal labor policy, as expressed in the above acts, is the promotion of collective bargaining. To allow the application of the Ohio antitrust law would wholly defeat the full realization of the congressional purpose. Since the federal law operates here, in an area where its authority is paramount, to leave the parties free, the inconsistent application of state law is necessarily outside the power of the state. It is immaterial that the conflict is between federal labor law and the application of what the state characterizes as an antitrust law.

[Issue]

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]: As the result of multiemployer, multistate collective bargaining with the Central States Drivers Council, comprising local unions of truck drivers affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers, a collective bargaining agreement, the "Central States Area Over-the-Road Motor Freight Agreement," effective February 1, 1955, and expiring January 31, 1961, was entered into by the locals and motor carriers in interstate commerce who operate under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission[1] in 12 midwestern States, including Ohio.[2] Article XXXII of this collective bargaining agreement[3] prescribes terms and conditions which regulate the minimum rental and certain other terms of lease when a motor vehicle is leased to a carrier by an owner who drives his vehicle in the carrier's service.[4] The Ohio courts enjoined the petitioner, Ohio's Teamsters Local 24 and its president, and the respondent carriers, A. C. E. Transportation Company, Inc., and Interstate Truck Service, Inc., Ohio employers, from giving effect to the provisions of Article XXXII. The Ohio courts held that the Article violates the Ohio antitrust law, known as the Valentine Act.[5] The question is whether the fact that the Article was contained in an agreement which was the fruit of the exercise of collective bargaining rights under the National Labor Relations Act[6] precluded the Ohio courts from applying the Ohio antitrust law to prohibit the parties from carrying out the terms of the Article they had agreed upon in bargaining. No claim is made that Article XXXII violates any provision of federal law.

[2] The agreement covers between 3,000 and 3,500 employers and between 45,000 and 50,000 truck drivers. Those covered in Ohio consist of approximately 500 employers and 6,000 drivers. Upwards of 90% of the Ohio drivers drive equipment owned by carriers who operate under I. C. C. certificates or permits. The rest of the covered drivers own their own equipment, usually one vehicle, but since they are not holders of I. C. C. certificates or permits, they lease their equipment to, and drive it for, certificated or permitted carriers.

"As used in sections 1331.01 to 1331.14, inclusive, of the Revised Code:

The Article is in express terms made applicable only to a lessor-driver when he himself drives his vehicle in the business of the lessee-carrier. § 1. The Article, at least in words, constitutes the lessor-driver an employee of the carrier at such times: "The employer [the carrier] expressly reserves the right to control the manner, means and details of, and by which, the owner-operator performs his services, as well as the ends to be accomplished." § 4. His wages, hours and working conditions are then to be those applied to the carrier's drivers of carrier-owned vehicles, and he has "seniority as a driver only." § 2. He must operate his vehicle at such times "exclusively in . . . [the carrier's] service and for no other interests." § 1. The carrier "agrees to pay . . . social security tax, compensation insurance, public liability and property damage insurance, bridge tolls" and various other fees imposed on motor freight transportation, except "that the owner-driver shall pay license fees in the state in which title is registered." § 10. The lessor-driver must be compensated by "separate checks . . . for driver's wages and equipment rental." § 6. The wage payment must be in the amount of "the full wage rate and supplementary allowances" payable to carrier drivers similarly circumstanced who drive carrier-owned vehicles. § 12(a). The equipment rental payment must be in an amount not less than "the minimum rates" specified by the Article which "result from the joint determination of the parties that such rates represent only the actual cost of operating such [leased] equipment. The parties have not attempted to negotiate a profit for the owner-driver." § 12(b). All leases by union members who drive their vehicles for carriers in effect on the operative date of the collective bargaining agreement are to "be dissolved or modified within thirty (30) days" to conform to the terms and conditions of the Article. § 15. The parties declare that "the intent of this clause [the Article] . . . is to assure the payment of the Union scale of wages . . . and to prohibit [a carrier from] the making and carrying out of any plan, scheme or device to circumvent or defeat the payment of wage

"A trust as defined in division (B) of this section is unlawful and void."

[6] Involved are §§ 7 and 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended and re-enacted by the Labor Management Relations Act, 61 Stat. 140, 29 U. S. C. §§ 157, 158. Section 7 is as follows:

"Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, and shall also have the right to refrain from any or all of such activities except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized in section 8(a)(3)."

Sections 8(a)(5) and 8(b)(3) require employers and labor organizations to bargain collectively. Section 8(d), in pertinent part, provides:

"For the purposes of this section, to bargain collectively is the performance of the mutual obligation of the employer and the representative of the employees to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, or the negotiation of an agreement, or any question arising thereunder, and the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached if requested by either party . . . ."

scales provided in this Agreement. . . . [and] to prevent the continuation of or formation of combinations or corporations or so-called lease of fleet arrangements whereby the driver [of his own vehicle] is required to and does periodically pay losses sustained by the corporation or fleet arrangement, or is required to accept less than the actual cost of the running of his equipment, thus, in fact, reducing his scale of pay." § 16.

The respondent, Revel Oliver, a member of the union, is the owner of motor equipment[7] which, at the time the collective bargaining agreement was negotiated, was subject to written lease agreements with the carrier respondents, A. C. E. Transportation Company, Inc., and Interstate Truck Service, Inc. The terms and conditions of the leases, particularly in regard to rental compensation, differ substantially from those provided in Article XXXII.[8]

[State Court Proceedings]

Oliver brought this action on January 20, 1955, in the Court of Common Pleas, Summit County, Ohio, for an injunction restraining the petitioners and the respondent carriers from carrying out the terms of Article XXXII. He obtained a temporary restaining order upon sworn allegations. At the trial the respondent carriers joined with Oliver in making the attack on the Article. The petitioners defended on the ground that the State could not lawfully exercise power to apply its antitrust law to cause a forfeiture of the product of the exercise of federally sanctioned collective bargaining rights. The union justified the Article as necessary to prevent undermining of the negotiated drivers' wage scale said to result from a practice of carriers of leasing a vehicle from an owner-driver at a rental which returned to the owner-driver less than his actual costs of operation, so that the driver's wage received by him, although nominally the negotiated wage, was actually a wage reduced by the excess of his operating expenses over the rental he received. The Court of Common Pleas held in an unreported opinion that the National Labor Relations Act could not "be reasonably construed to permit this remote and indirect approach to the subject of wages," and that Article XXXII was in violation of the State's antitrust law because "there are restrictions and restraints imposed upon articles [the leased vehicles] that are widely used in trade and commerce. . . . [and] preclude an owner of property from reasonable freedom of action in dealing with it." On the petitioners' appeal to Ohio's Ninth Judicial District Court of Appeals that court heard the case de novo and affirmed the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, adopting its opinion. The Court of Appeals entered a permanent injunction perpetually restraining the petitioners and the respondent carriers (1) "from entering into any agreements . . . or carrying out the . . . requirements . . . of any such agreement, which will require the alteration" of Revel Oliver's "existing lease or leasing agreement"; (2) "from entering into any . . . agreement or stipulation in the future, or the negotiation therefor, the . . . tendency of which is to . . . determine in any manner the rate to be charged for the use of" Revel Oliver's equipment; (3) "from giving force and effect to Section 32 [sic] of the Contract . . . or any modification . . . thereof, the . . . tendency of which shall attempt to fix the rates" for the use of Revel Oliver's equipment.[9] Petitioners' appeal to [7] Oliver is rather unusual among Ohio owner-drivers because he owns not one vehicle but a fleet, six trucks and four trailers, each of which is under a lease agreement with one or the other of the carrier respondents. Oliver drove only occasionally, "every month or so for A. C. E. and every 8 months or so for Interstate" and Article XXXII applied to his leases only as to the vehicle he drove on those occasions.

[8] Accordingly, § 15 of Art. XXXII required the carriers to take steps to modify both agreements. The Interstate Truck Service lease with Oliver was for a fixed term, but contained a five-day cancellation clause. The agreement between A. C. E. and Oliver was not for any fixed term and was brought into effect by the issuance of individual waybills and manifests for particular hauls.

[9] The restraints entered by the judgment and order of the Court of Appeals filed September 30, 1957, are:

"(a) That the defendants-appellees, A. C. E. Transportation Co., Inc., Interstate Truck Service, Inc., and defendants-appellants, Local No. 24 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers and each of them, their agents, representatives and successors or persons, acting, by, through or for them, or in concert with each other, are hereby perpetually restrained and enjoined from entering into any agreements one with the other or carrying out the effects, requirements or terms of any such agreement, which will require the alteration, cancellation or violation of plaintiff-appellee's [Revel Oliver's] existing lease or leasing agreement or any such the Ohio Supreme Court was dismissed for want of a debatable constitutional question. 167 Ohio St. 299, 147 N. E. 2d 856. We granted certiorari to consider the important question raised of the interaction of state and federal power arising from the petitioner's claim that the Ohio regulation abridges rights protected by federal statute. 356 U. S. 966.

[History of Article]

Article XXXII did not originate with the 1955 agreement. The carriers and the union have disputed since 1938 the terms of a carrier's hire of a lessor's driving services with his leased vehicle. The usual lease is by the owner of a single vehicle who hires out his services as driver with his vehicle. A carrier's representative who has participated in all contract negotiations since those leading to the 1938 agreement testified to the history. According to him, the nub of the union's position over the two decades has been that the carriers abuse the leasing practice, particularly by paying inadequate rentals for the use of leased vehicles, with the result "that part of the men's wages for driving was being used for the upkeep of their vehicles . . . . They [the union] claimed that the leased people were breaking down the rate structure . . . ." The union's demands for contract provisions to safeguard against the alleged abuse were designed also to "secure a living wage [for the lessor] plus an adequate rental for his equipment." A minimum rental clause first appeared in the 1938 agreement which also contained provisions comparable to §§ 8, 10 and 14 of present Article XXXII. In 1939, after the union claimed that "there was a lot of people that was transferring their title into other people's name to avoid the conditions of the contract," § 3 was added to provide that "certificate and title to the equipment must be in the name of the actual owner." When the dispute brought the parties to the verge of a strike in 1941, the note to § 1 and §§ 13, 15, 16, 17 and 18 came into the agreement. But by 1946 the controversy reached a pitch where the union demanded agreement from the carriers to abolish the leasing practice: "the unions were going to refuse the addition of any individual owners, and the unions also desired to make certain restrictions on the use of owner-operators, again claiming that the . . . company operators were taking advantage of certain provisions of the contract." This demand was compromised by the addition of § 19 restricting leasing to carriers "who will agree to submit all grievances pertaining to owner-operators to joint Employer-Union grievance committees in each respective state"; the section "represented the compromise between the union position that it should abolish all owner-operators and the companies' contention there should be no limitation."

[Subject Matter of Collective Bargaining]

First. The Ohio courts rejected the petitioners' contention that the evidence conclusively established that Article XXXII dealt with subject matter within the scope of "collective bargaining" in which federal law gave petitioners the right to engage. The state courts rested their judgments principally on the minimum rental regulations of § 12 of the Article. The principal discussion occurs in the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas. These regulations were held to constitute the Article a price-fixing arrangement violating the Ohio antitrust law in that they evidenced "concerted action of the Union combining with a non-labor third agreement hereafter renewed or renegotiated and entered into, and party in a formal contract. . . . [the] effect [of which] is to oppress and destroy competition. . . . [and] preclude an owner of property from reasonable freedom of action in dealing with it."

It seems to us that in considering whether the Article deals with a subject matter within the scope of collective bargaining as defined by federal law the Ohio courts did not give proper significance to the Article's narrowly restricted application to the times when the owner drives his leased vehicle for the carrier, and to the adverse effects upon the negotiated wage scale which might result when the rental for the use of the leased vehicle was unregulated at these times. Since no claim was presented to the Ohio courts that the petitioners sought to apply these regulations to Revel Oliver's arrangements with the respondent carriers except on the very infrequent and irregular occasions when Oliver drove one of his vehicles for a carrier, we take it that the Ohio courts' opinions and judgments relate only to the validity of the Article as applied at such times. This would necessarily be the case as the text of the Article, and that text as illumined by its history, conclusively establish that the regulations in no wise apply to the terms of lease of a vehicle when driven by a driver not the owner of the vehicle; the wages, hours and working conditions to be observed by contracting employers of non-owner drivers are governed by the general provisions in that regard found in other articles of the collective bargaining agreement.

In the light of the Article's history and purpose, we cannot agree with the Court of Common Pleas that its regulations constitute a "remote and indirect approach to the subject of wages," outside the range of matters on which the federal law requires the parties to bargain. The text of the Article and its unchallenged history show that its objective is to protect the negotiated wage scale against the possible undermining through diminution of the owner's wages for driving which might result from a rental which did not cover his operating costs. This is thus but an instance, as this Court said of a somewhat similar union demand in another case, in which a union seeks to protect lawful employee interests against what is believed, rightly or wrongly, to be "a scheme or device utilized for the purpose of escaping the payment of union wages and the assumption of working conditions commensurate with those imposed under union standards." Milk Wagon Drivers' Union v. Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,070], 311 U. S. 91, 98-99. Looked at in this light, as on the evidence it must be, to determine its relevance to the collective bargaining rights under the Federal Act, the point of the Article is obviously not price fixing but wages. The regulations embody not the "remote and indirect approach to the subject of wages" perceived by the Court of Common Pleas but a direct frontal attack upon a problem thought to threaten the maintenance of the basic wage structure established by the collective bargaining contract. The inadequacy of a rental which means that the owner makes up his excess costs from his driver's wages not only clearly bears a close relation to labor's efforts to improve working conditions but is in fact of vital concern to the carrier's employed drivers; an inadequate rental might mean the progressive curtailment of jobs through withdrawal of more and more carrier-owned vehicles from service. Cf. Bakery Drivers Local v. Wohl, 315 U. S. 769, 771. It is not necessary to attempt to set precise outside limits to the subject matter properly included within the scope of mandatory collective bargaining, cf. Labor Board v. Borg-Warner Corp., 356 U. S. 342, to hold, as we do, that the obligation under § 8(d) on the carriers and their employees to bargain collectively "with respect to wages, hours and other conditions of employment" and to embody their understanding in "a written contract incorporating any agreement reached," found an expression in the subject matter of Article XXXII. See Timken Roller Bearing Co., 70 N. L. R. B. 500, 518, reversed on other grounds, 161 F. 2d 949. And certainly bargaining on this subject through their representatives was a right of the employees protected by § 7 of the Act.

Second. We must decide whether Ohio's antitrust law may be applied to prevent the contracting parties from carrying out their agreement upon a subject matter as to which federal law directs them to bargain. Little extended discussion is necessary to show that Ohio law cannot be so applied. We need not concern ourselves today with a contractual provision dealing with a subject matter that the parties were under no obligation to discuss; the carriers as employers were under a duty to bargain collectively with the union as to the subject matter of the Article, as we have shown. The goal of federal labor policy, as expressed in the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts, is the promotion of collective bargaining; to encourage the employer and the representative of the employees to establish, through collective negotiation, their own charter for the ordering of industrial relations, and thereby to minimize industrial strife. See Labor Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U. S. 1, 45; Labor Board v. American National Ins. Co., 343 U. S. 395, 401-402. Within the area in which collective bargaining was required, Congress was not concerned with the substantive terms upon which the parties agreed. Cf. Terminal Railroad Assn. v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 318 U. S. 1, 6. The purposes of the Acts are served by bringing the parties together and establishing conditions under which they are to work out their agreement themselves. To allow the application of the Ohio antitrust law here would wholly defeat the full realization of the congressional purpose. The application would frustrate the parties' solution of a problem which Congress has required them to negotiate in good faith toward solving, and in the solution of which it imposed no limitations relevant here. Federal law here created the duty upon the parties to bargain collectively; Congress has provided for a system of federal law applicable to the agreement the parties made in response to that duty, Textile Workers Union v. Lincoln Mills, 353 U. S. 448; and federal law sets some outside limits (not contended to be exceeded here) on what their agreement may provide, see Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797; cf. United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186, 190. We believe that there is no room in this scheme for the application here of this state policy limiting the solutions that the parties' agreement can provide to the problems of wages and working conditions. Cf. California v. Taylor, 353 U. S. 553, 566-567. Since the federal law operates here, in an area where its authority is paramount, to leave the parties free, the inconsistent application of state law is necessarily outside the power of the State. Hill v. Florida, 325 U. S. 538, 542-544. Cf. International Union v. O'Brien, 339 U. S. 454, 457; Amalgamated Assn. v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, 340 U. S. 383; Plankinton Packing Co. v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, 338 U. S. 953. The solution worked out by the parties was not one of a sort which Congress has indicated may be left to prohibition by the several States. Cf. Algoma Plywood & Veneer Co. v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, 336 U. S. 301, 307-312.[10] Of course, the paramount force of the federal law remains even though it is expressed in the details of a contract federal law empowers the parties to make, rather than in terms in an enactment of Congress. See Railway Employes' Dept. v. Hanson, 351 U. S. 225, 232. Clearly it is immaterial that the conflict is between federal labor law and the application of what the State characterizes as an antitrust law. ". . . Congress has sufficiently expressed its purpose to . . . exclude state prohibition, even though that with which the federal law is concerned as a matter of labor relations be related by the State to the more inclusive area of restraint of trade." Weber v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,000], 348 U. S. 468, 481. We have not here a case of a collective bargaining agreement in conflict with a local health or safety regulation; the conflict here is between the federally sanctioned agreement and state policy which seeks specifically to adjust relationships in the world of commerce. If there is to be this sort of limitation on the arrangements that unions and employers may make with regard to these subjects, pursuant to the collective bargaining provisions of the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts, it is for Congress, not the States, to provide it.

[Dissenting Opinion]

Mr. Justice Whittaker, believing that respondent Oliver, while driving his own tractor in the performance of his independent contract with the respondent carriers, was not an employee of those carriers, but was an independent contractor, United States v. Silk, 331 U. S. 704, and that, as such, he was expressly excluded from the coverage of the Labor Management Relations Act by 61 Stat. 137, 29 U. S. C. § 152(3), would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Judicial District of Ohio.

Article XXXII of the Central States Area Over-the-Road Motor Freight Agreement

Owner-Operators

Section 1. Owner-operators (See Note), other than certificated or permitted carriers, shall not be covered by this Agreement unless affiliated by lease with a certificated or permitted carrier which is required to operate in full compliance with all the provisions of this Agreement and holding proper ICC and state certificates and permits. Such owner-operators shall operate exclusively in such service and for no other interests.

(NOTE: Whenever "owner-operator" is used in this article, it means owner-driver only, and nothing in this article shall apply to any equipment leased except where owner is also employed as a driver.)

Section 2. This type of operator's compensation for wages and working conditions shall be in full accordance with all the provisions of this Agreement. The owner-operator shall have seniority as a driver only.

Section 3. Certificate and title to the equipment must be in the name of the actual owner.

Section 4. In all cases, hired or leased equipment shall be operated by an employee of the certificated or permitted carrier. The employer expressly reserves the right to control the manner, means and details of, and by which, the owner-operator performs his services, as well as the ends to be accomplished.

Section 5. Certificated or permitted carriers shall use their own available equipment, together with all leased equipment under minimum thirty-day bona fide lease arrangements, on a rotating board, before hiring any extra equipment.

Section 6. Separate checks shall be issued by the certificated or permitted carriers for driver's wages and equipment rental. At no time shall the equipment check be for less than actual miles operated. Separate checks for drivers shall not be deducted from the minimum truck rental revenue. The driver shall turn in time direct to the certificated or permitted carrier. All monies due the owner-operator may be held no longer than two weeks, except where the lease of equipment agreement is terminated and in such cases all monies due the operator may be held no longer than thirty (30) days from the date of the termination of the operation of the equipment.

Section 7. Payment for equipment service shall be handled by the issuance of a check for the full mileage operated, tonnage or percentage, less any agreed advances. A statement of any charges by the certificated or permitted carrier shall be issued at the same time, but shall not be deducted in advance.

Section 8. The owner-operator shall have complete freedom to purchase gasoline, oil, grease, tires, tubes, etc., including repair work, at any place where efficient service and satisfactory products can be obtained at the most favorable prices.

Section 9. There shall be no deduction pertaining to equipment operation for any reason whatsoever.

Section 10. The Employer or certificated or permitted carrier hereby agrees to pay road or mile tax, social security tax, compensation insurance, public liability and property damage insurance, bridge tolls, fees for certificates, permits and travel orders, fines and penalties for inadequate certificates, license fees, weight tax and wheel tax, and for loss of driving time due to waiting at state lines, and also cargo insurance. It is expressly understood that the owner-driver shall pay the license fees in the state in which title is registered.

All tolls, no matter how computed, must be paid by the Employer regardless of any agreement to the contrary.

All taxes or additional charges imposed by law relating to actual truck operation and use of highways, no matter how computed or named, shall be paid by the Carrier, excepting only vehicle licensing as such, in the state where title is registered.

Section 11. There shall be no interest or handling charge on earned money advanced prior to the regular pay day.

Section 12. (a) All certificated or permitted carriers hiring or leasing equipment owned and driven by the owner-driver shall file a true copy of the lease agreement covering the owner-driven equipment with the Joint State Committees. The terms of the lease shall cover only the equipment owned and driven by the owner-driver and shall be in complete accord with the minimum rates and conditions provided herein, plus the full wage rate and supplementary allowances for drivers as embodied elsewhere in this Agreement.

(b) The minimum rate for leased equipment owned and driven by the owner-driver shall be:

	Per Mile
Single axle, tractor only	9½¢
Tandem axle, tractor only	10¢
Single axle, trailer only	3¢
Tandem axle, trailer only	4¢

75% of the above rates to apply for deadheading, if and when ordered, provided, however, that the 75% rate will apply only on first empty dispatch away from the home terminal; thereafter the full equipment rental rate to apply until driver is redispatched from home terminal; the above rates to be based on 23,000-pound load limit. On load limits over 23,000 pounds, there shall be one-half (½) cent additional per mile for each 1,000 pounds or fraction thereof in excess of 23,000 pounds. There shall be a minimum guarantee of 24,000 pounds for leased equipment owned and driven by the owner-driver. Nothing herein shall apply to leased equipment not owned by a driver.

The minimum rates set forth above result from the joint determination of the parties that such rates represent only the actual cost of operating such equipment. The parties have not attempted to negotiate a profit for the owner-driver.

Section 13. Driver-owner mileage scale does not include use of equipment for pick-up or delivery at point of origin terminal or at point of destination terminal, but shall be subject to negotiations between the Local Union and Company. Failure to agree shall be submitted to the grievance procedure.

Section 14. There shall be no reductions where the present basis of payment is higher than the minimums established herein for this type of operation. Where owner-operator is paid on a percentage or tonnage basis and the operating company reduces its tariff, the percentage or tonnage basis of payment shall be automatically adjusted so that the owner-operator suffers no reduction in equipment rental or wages, or both.

Section 15. It is further understood and agreed that any arrangements which have heretofore been entered into between members of this Union, either among themselves or with the Employer or with the aid of the Employer, applicable to owner-driver equipment contrary to the terms hereof, shall be dissolved or modified within thirty (30) days after the signing of this Agreement so that such arrangements shall apply only to equipment of the owner-driver while being driven by such owner-driver. In the event that the parties cannot agree on a method of dissolution or modification of such arrangement to make the same conform to this Agreement, the question of dissolution or modification shall be submitted to arbitration, each party to select one member of the arbitration board, and the two so selected to choose a third member of said board. If the two cannot agree upon the third within five (5) days, he shall be appointed by the Joint State Committee. The decision of said board to be final and binding.

Section 16. It is further agreed that the intent of this clause and this entire Agreement is to assure the payment of the Union scale of wages as provided in this Agreement and to prohibit the making and carrying out of any plan, scheme or device to circumvent or defeat the payment of wage scales provided in this Agreement. This clause is intended to prevent the continuation of or formation of combinations or corporations or so-called lease of fleet arrangements whereby the driver is required to and does periodically pay losses sustained by the corporation or fleet arrangement, or is required to accept less than the actual cost of the running of his equipment, thus in fact, reducing his scale of pay.

Section 17. It is further agreed that if the Employer or certificated or permitted carrier requires that the "driver-owner-operator" sell his equipment to the Employer or certificated or permitted carrier, directly or indirectly, the "driver-owner-operator" shall be paid the fair true value of such equipment. Copies of the instruments of sale shall be filed with the Union and unless objected to within ten (10) days shall be deemed satisfactory. If any question is raised by the Union as to such value, the same shall be submitted to arbitration, as above set forth, for determination. The decision of the arbitration board shall be final and binding.

Section 18. It is further agreed that the Employer or certificated or permitted carrier will not devise or put into operation any scheme, whether herein enumerated or not, to defeat the terms of this Agreement, wherein the provisions as to compensation for services on and for use of equipment owned by owner-driver shall be lessened, nor shall any owner-driver lease be cancelled for the purpose of depriving Union employees of employment, and any such complaint that should arise pertaining to such cancellation of lease or violation under this section shall be subject to Article X.

Section 19. (a) The use of individual owner-operators shall be permitted by all certificated or permitted carriers who will agree to submit all grievances pertaining to owner-operators to joint Employer-Union grievance committees in each respective state. It is understood and agreed that all such grievances will be promptly heard and decided with the specific purpose in mind of

(1) protecting provisions of the Union contract;

(2) prohibiting any and all violations directly or indirectly of contract provisions relating to the proper use of individual owners;

(3) p hibiting any attempts by any certificatec or permitted carrier in changing his operation which will affect the rights of drivers under the terms of the contract, and generally the certificated or permitted carriers agree to assume responsibility in policing and doing everything within their power to eliminate all alleged abuses in the use of owner-drivers which resulted in the insertion of Section 19 (Article XXXIII) in the original 1945-47 Over-the-Road contract;

(4) owner-driver operations to be terminal to terminal, except where no local employees to make such deliveries or otherwise agreed to in this contract;

(5) the certificated or permitted carriers agree that they will, with a joint meeting of the Unions, set up uniform rules and practices under which all such cases will be heard;

(6) it shall be considered a violation of the contract should any operator deduct from rental of equipment the increases provided for by the 1955 Amendments or put into effect any means of evasion to circumvent actual payment of increases agreed upon effective for the period starting February 1, 1955, and ending January 31, 1961.

(b) No owner-operator shall be permitted to drive or hold seniority where he owns three or more pieces of leased equipment. This provision shall not apply to present owner-operators having three or more pieces of equipment under lease agreement, but such owner-operator shall not be permitted to put additional equipment in service so long as he engages in work covered by this Agreement or holds seniority. Where owner-operator drives, he can hold seniority where he works sixty (60) per cent or more of time.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Exclusive Dealing—Tying Arrangements—Manufacturer-Dealer Advertising Agreement—Elements of Unlawful Arrangement—Sufficiency of Complaint.—An automobile dealer's complaint alleging that an automobile manufacturer tied the sale of its automotive products with the sale of advertising in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act was properly dismissed. The complaint had alleged that a dealer's advertising fund was organized, with the consent of the manufacturer, for the purpose of advertising the manufacturer's automobiles, and that dealers were required to become members of this organization and make contributions to it at the rate of $25 for each car purchased. The arrangement was entirely different from the tying agreements that had been held illegal per se in other cases. No facts were alleged which tended to show that the amounts spent on advertising through the organization restrained trade in automobiles or in advertising. It was not alleged that the manufacturer owned or controlled the advertising organization. Neither the manufacturer nor the advertising organization was selling advertising; both of them were buying advertising. All agencies and all media had the right to compete for the advertising purchased by the organization, and the manufacturer did not require dealers to use the organization's advertising exclusively. The dealer, in addition to its participation in the organization's advertising, spent thousands of dollars for local advertising which it selected itself.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.175, 4009.840.

Monopolies—Dealership Contracts—Monopoly in Sale of Products Manufactured and Sold Under One's Own Trade-Mark—Relevant Market—Market Represented by One's Own Franchise Dealers.—An automobile dealer's complaint alleging that sales and advertising agreements entered into between an automobile manufacturer and its dealers contained provisions which permitted the manufacturer to monopolize the market for automobiles, parts, and accessories in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act was properly dismissed. It was not alleged that the manufacturer monopolized or attempted to monopolize the market for automobiles, parts, or accessories generally, but only the market represented by the manufacturer's own franchise dealers. The power which automobile manufacturers have over their trade-marked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Also, the dealer did not allege that it was forced to purchase any parts or accessories which it did not want.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510, 2540, 2580.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Tie-in Sales—Manufacturer-Dealer Advertising Arrangement—Legality—Existence of Unreasonable Restraint of Trade and Public Injury.—An automobile dealer's complaint alleging that an automobile manufacturer used its right to terminate dealerships and other provisions in sales agreements with its dealers to control and dominate the business of its dealers in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act was properly dismissed. The dealer alleged that the manufacturer required it to contribute $25 for each car purchased to an advertising organization which spent the money principally for national television advertising programs which were not received in the dealer's area. The dealer also alleged that, as a result of an unlawful conspiracy between the manufacturer and the advertising organization, the dealer's sales agreement with the manufacturer was cancelled because of the dealer's unwillingness to contribute to the advertising organization. However, no facts were alleged which tended to show that the amounts spent on advertising through the organization restrained trade in automobiles or advertising. It was not alleged that the manufacturer owned or controlled the advertising organization; the manufacturer was not using its economic position to invade and dominate the advertising business. The court held that it could not sustain a complaint which did not allege, with reasonable definiteness, facts from which it could infer conduct in restraint of trade of the kind prohibited by the antitrust laws, and from which an inference of public injury could reasonably be extracted.

[Sales and Advertising Agreements]

THOMSEN, District Judge [In full text]: This is another private antitrust action against Ford Motor Company in which a franchise dealer claims that the sales agreements and advertising agreements which he was forced to sign in order to retain his dealership violated both the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. In Miller Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Company [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,937], 252 F. 2d 441, this court held that under the evidence in that case Ford's requirement that the dealers contribute a certain amount per car to LMDA, a non-profit corporation organized for Lincoln-Mercury dealer advertising, did not violate the Sherman Act, and that Miller's claim under the Clayton Act, which was based upon the required purchase of parts and accessories, was barred by limitations.

[Alleged Antitrust Violations]

In the instant case plaintiffs are appealing from an order dismissing their amended complaint. Plaintiffs contend that the complaint sufficiently alleges a violation of the antitrust laws, in that: the sales agreements and advertising agreements taken together constituted an attempt to monopolize under sec. 2 of the Sherman Act; that the requirements that the dealers contribute $25 per car to LMDA advertising was a tying arrangement which was illegal under sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, and was an unreasonable restraint of trade under sec. 1 of the Sherman Act; and that the cancellation of plaintiffs' sales agreements violated the antitrust laws.

In September, 1953, plaintiff partnership was formed to take over the business of a corporation which had been a Lincoln-Mercury dealer since December, 1946. The predecessor corporation assigned to plaintiffs the sales agreements and the other agreements which it had entered into with Ford, including the Lincoln-Mercury Dealer Advertising Fund Agreement.

[Monopoly]

Plaintiffs contend that these agreements contained provisions which permitted Ford "to monopolize the market for cars, parts and accessories presented by the many thousands of dealers who entered into such agreements", in violation of sec. 2 of the Sherman Act. However, as the Supreme Court noted in United States v. DuPont & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377, 393, the power which "automobile or soft drink manufacturers have over their trade-marked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly". Plaintiffs do not allege that Ford monopolized or attempted to monopolize the market for automobiles, parts or accessories generally, but only the market represented by its own franchise dealers. And plaintiffs do not allege, as Miller did, that they were forced to purchase any parts or accessories which they did not want. Cf. 149 F. Supp. 790, at 807; 252 F. 2d 441, at 448.

[Right to Terminate Dealership]

The complaint alleges that Ford's right to terminate a dealership at will on sixty days notice, together with other provisions contained in the agreements, permitted Ford to control and dominate the business of its dealers in violation of sec. 1 of the Sherman Act, and to coerce plaintiffs and other dealers into courses and methods of conducting business which they as independent businessmen would not otherwise have pursued. Plaintiffs' principal complaint is that they were required by Ford to contribute $25 per car to LMDA, which spent the money principally for national TV advertising programs which plaintiffs allege were not received in the Greenville, South Carolina, area, and which "did not, in the opinion of the plaintiff, assist plaintiff in its sales as greatly as would a program of local advertising purchased by plaintiff with the same funds". The complaint also alleges that in 1953 plaintiffs spent $37,550.82 for advertising, of which $13,300.00 was paid for LMDA advertising and the remaining $24,250.82 for local advertising.

The facts alleged in the complaint in the instant case with respect to LMDA are essentially similar to the facts proved in the Miller case, where this court said: "Even if we accept plaintiff's argument that LMDA's are a creation of the Ford Motor Company, organized solely to raise advertising funds for its products, the action would nevertheless fail. It is not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove a cooperative effort between Ford and LMDA, but it must be shown that the combination has the objectionable features which the act is designed to prevent."

Like Miller, this case is distinguishable from the GMAC case, U. S. v. General Motors Corp., 7 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,139], 121 F. 2d 376, upon which plaintiffs strongly rely. (1) In that case the indictment charged and the evidence showed that General Motors Corp., General Motor Sales Corp., and General Motors Acceptance Corp. conspired to restrain unreasonably interstate trade and commerce in General Motors cars, and that their purpose was to control the financing essential to the wholesale purchase and retail sale of General Motors cars. GMAC was owned by General Motors; the conspirators had identical interests: to make money for the General Motors family. In this case, however, the interests of Ford and LMDA are not identical. It is not alleged that Ford owned or controlled LMDA; it is composed of Lincoln-Mercury dealers, who are interested in promoting the sale of Lincolns and Mercurys against all other automobiles, including Fords. (2) The scheme to require GMAC financing bore no relation to the good will of General Motors or its line of cars, whereas the advertising of Lincoln and Mercury automobiles has a most important bearing on the good will of defendant and its line of cars. (3) GMAC was selling financing and was in active competition with other finance companies. Neither Ford nor LMDA is selling advertising; both of them are buying advertising. It is not alleged that Ford had any interest in the advertising agency used by LMDA except to obtain effective advertising service from it. All agencies and all media had a right to compete for the advertising purchased by LMDA. (4) General Motors required dealers to promise to use GMAC financing exclusively. Ford did not require Lincoln-Mercury dealers to use LMDA advertising exclusively or to promise to use it exclusively. (5) General Motors was reaching out to monopolize the business of financing the resale of automobiles which it manufactured. Ford was not using its economic position as an automobile manufacturer to invade and dominate the advertising business.

[Tying Agreements]

The arrangement is entirely different from the tying agreements held to be illegal per se in International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, and in Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,961], 356 U. S. 1. See Times-Picayune v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594; Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 9 Cir. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,007], 255 F. 2d 214; Turner, Tying Arrangements, 72 Harv. L. R. 50, 72.

[Restraint of Trade]

No facts are alleged by plaintiffs which tend to show that the amounts which they spent on LMDA advertising restrained trade in automobiles. Miller Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., supra.

Moreover, the facts alleged show no restraint of trade or commerce in advertising. Some advertising agencies or advertising media may lose some dealer advertising as a result of co-ordinated LMDA advertising; that is true of advertising by any association. But advertising by associations does not violate the Sherman Act unless it restricts competition or tends to create a monopoly to an extent far beyond anything alleged in the amended complaint. In addition to their LMDA advertising, plaintiffs spent many thousands of dollars for local advertising which plaintiffs themselves selected. Except that participation in LMDA was required by Ford, the LMDA plan differs little from other cooperative advertising plans, which are "beneficial to the industry and to consumers". Maple Flooring Mfrs. Ass'n v. United States, 268 U. S. 563, 566, 45 S. Ct. 578, 579, 69 L. Ed. 1093.

[Public Injury]

Finally, plaintiffs argue that the cancellation of plaintiffs' sales agreements "was the result of a coercive and unlawful conspiracy resulting from plaintiffs' protests against and unwillingness to continue to make the contributions to LMDA * * *." Miller made a similar argument in the district court, but abandoned it on appeal. Plaintiffs here, like Miller, refer to the facts developed by Congressional committees which studied the automobile industry in 1955 and 1956. The reports of those committees are discussed in the district court's opinion in Miller, 149 F. Supp. at 810-811, and in a footnote to the opinion on appeal, 252 F. 2d at 451. The Congressional committees concluded that the antitrust laws did not afford automobile dealers a remedy against inequitable and oppressive use of the manufacturers' superior economic power, citing Judge Parker's opinion in Ford Motor Co. v. Kirkmyer Motor Co., 4 Cir., 65 F. 2d 1001. Congress found it necessary to "supplement the antitrust laws of the United States" by adopting the "Automobile Dealer's Day in Court" statute, 15 U. S. C. A. (1958 Supp.) 1221, et seq. That statute does not apply in this case. We cannot sustain a complaint which does not allege with reasonable definiteness facts from which the court may infer conduct in restraint of trade of the kind prohibited by the antitrust laws, and from which an inference of public injury may reasonably be extracted. Alex. Milburn Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 4 Cir., 15 F. 2d 678, 680; Floyd v. Gage, 4 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,946], 192 F. 2d 137, 139. See Radovich v. Nat. Football League [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,628], 352 U. S. 445, 453; Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, supra.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Dismissal Affirmed]

The district court did not err in granting defendant's motion to dismiss the amended complaint. Affirmed.

[¶ 69,239] Sperry Products, Inc., et al. v. Aluminum Company of America and Electro Circuits, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 31,352. Filed January 5, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Refusal to Sell Patented Device—Legality.—A company's refusal to sell its patented devices for detecting flaws in metal parts to its competitors in the commercial testing business was not unlawful under the antitrust laws. While it was conceded that a patent is the grant of the right to exclude others from using the invention, it was argued that a refusal to sell the invention for the purpose of preventing competition with the patent owner in its use is an unlawful enlargement of the grant. The argument rested in the presupposition that by its exclusive use of the patented devices in its commercial testing business, the company obtained an unfair advantage over its competitors in such business. However, the advantage that the company enjoyed was the result of a right conferred upon it by the Constitution and statute and takes nothing from its competitors to which they were entitled under the law. The company simply reserved to itself its own patented devices for its own use in the commercial testing business; it did no more than what it had the right to do, that is, to be free from competition in the practice of its invention. That the company's lawful advantage had no substantial effect upon its competitors was evidenced by the fact that it did less than one per cent of the commercial testing business in the United States.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2580.30, 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Accumulation of Patents—Legality.—A company's accumulation of patents concerning ultrasonic devices for detecting flaws in metal parts was not shown to have been unlawful under the antitrust laws. The company had no policy of acquiring patents from others, particularly competitors, to block the entry of anyone into the field of ultrasonic flaw detection. Its ownership of the basic patents was the result of the patentee's attempt to interest another company in his invention, and the suggestion by that company that the patentee submit a proposal to the instant company. As a matter of course, the company acquired rights in subsequent patents covering improvements. The company had its own staff of engineers and inventors, and its patent committee followed the policy of filing applications only on its inventions which could be put to use. Also, the company did not have the majority of the patents in the field and was using more than one-third of its patents, which was higher than the national average of thirty per cent. A patentee of an invention has no obligation either to use or grant its use to others, and the mere accumulation of patents, no matter how many, is not in and of itself illegal.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.200; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.500.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Name Plates on Patented Devices—Listing Patents Not Embodied in Such Devices—Legality.—A company's use of name plates on its patented devices which listed patents in addition to those embodied in such devices was not shown to have been unlawful under the antitrust laws. There were different types of patented accessories and additional patents covering methods that could be used with the devices. The selection of accessories and methods to be used with the devices was determined by the various needs and wishes of the purchaser. The listing of all such patents on the name plate was a time and labor-saving expedient. Also, the practice had been adopted by many other companies. The contention that anyone reading the list of fifty patents "obviously would be frightened at the cost of investigating and would very likely go no further" was not supported by the evidence.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Sending Notices of Infringement—Legality.—The sending of notices of infringement by a company could not be regarded as threats of suit which constituted an integral part of a plan to violate the antitrust laws. During a fifteen-year period, the company sent a total of five written notices of infringement. None resulted in litigation. The patent laws provide that "no damages shall be recovered by the patentee in any action for infringement except upon proof that the infringer was notified of the infringement." In notifying infringers, the company was merely complying with the requirements of the law, and there was no evidence that the company did not act in good faith in sending such notices.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Licensing Agreements—Restriction on Use of Patented Device—Legality.—A provision in patent licensing agreements restricting the use of a patented device by railroads to the inspection of their rolling stock was not unlawful under the antitrust laws. An owner of a patent may lawfully restrict his license to the manufacture and sale of patented inventions for use in only one or some of several distinct fields in which it is useful, excluding it from the others.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.560; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.550.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Agreement Between Patentee and Alleged Infringer—Imposition of Tying Arrangement.—A company did not impose a tying arrangement on an alleged infringer of its patents when the company agreed that it would forbear instituting suit for infringement provided the alleged infringer sold its product for use only in conjunction with the company's product. In only one instance did the company sell a patented product that was to be used with the alleged infringer's product. In that case, the company imposed no condition upon the use of its product but merely agreed that in addition to its use in the usual manner the purchaser might also use the product in conjunction with the alleged infringer's product. The other sales of the alleged infringer's product were made by it to owners of the company's product, and the company merely consented to the use of its invention in the above manner. At no time did the company attempt to enlarge its lawful monopoly under its patents. Cases in which a patent owner was misusing his patent to enforce the sale of unpatented products were not in point.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.500; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Monopolies—Practices—Patents—Institution of Infringement Suit—Legality.—A company's institution of a patent infringement suit was not shown to have been for the purpose of obtaining a monopolistic control of a market over and above the rights granted to it under its patents. The facts showed that the company was forced to sue for infringement in order to protect its rights. The company had given the alleged infringer ample time to convert its product and avoid the infringement action, and suit was not instituted until long after the alleged infringer embarked upon a deliberate program of infringement.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.525.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Patents—Foreign Patent Licensing Agreements—Legality.—A company's foreign patent licensing policy was not illegal under the antitrust laws because it was not shown that the company's foreign licenses had a direct and substantially harmful effect on interstate commerce or on the foreign commerce of the United States. The company's primary purpose in entering into foreign license agreements was to obtain income from royalties on its foreign patents, which had been a source of continuing and increasing expense and produced little or no income. It had granted an exclusive license under its foreign patents to an independent organization, which was given full power to grant sub-licenses. This organization negotiated sub-licenses with companies in various foreign countries with the company's approval. Sub-licensees were required to acknowledge the validity of the company's foreign patents and to agree not to contest the validity of such patents. Some of the sub-licenses contained a provision for the grant back of improvements and an exchange of technical information, and an agreement by the company not to engage in manufacturing in Europe. While the legality of other restrictive covenants in the foreign licenses was challenged, there was no evidence that any public injury resulted from the company's foreign licensing policy. The contention that the company expanded its rights under United States patents by its foreign patents covering the same inventions was rejected. Foreign patents covering the same inventions can neither restrict nor enlarge the rights acquired under patents issued by the United States Government. Foreign patents create rights separate and distinct from those created by patents issued in the United States.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.275.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Treble Damage Counterclaim—Injury to Plaintiff—Causal Relation—Sufficiency of Proof.—In a patent infringement action, a counterclaim for treble damages was dismissed on the ground that the counterclaimant did not show that it was injured in its business or property by any violation of the antitrust laws. The principle which governs in private suits applies with equal force to alleged violations of the antitrust laws asserted by a counterclaiming defendant. In the instant case, there was no evidence of any antitrust violation as well as no evidence of any injury to the business or property of the counterclaimant. Among other things, it was pointed out that there was no showing of a causal relation, either proximate or remote, between certain alleged damages and the alleged antitrust violation.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275, 9009.350, 9046.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violation as Defense—When Antitrust Violations May Not Be Available as Defense—Abandonment of Illegal Practice.—Even if the restrictive leasing of a patented device was improper, the abandonment of the practice removed any impediment to the plaintiff's right to proceed with a suit for infringement of the patent. The contention that since the alleged improper practice was in effect at the time the infringement suit was instituted and for some time thereafter, it was too late for the plaintiff to purge itself, was rejected.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9043.05.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violation as Defense—Patent Infringement Suit—Antitrust Violation Relating to Patents Not in Suit.—In a patent infringement action where the plaintiff was charged with misusing its patents, it was held that the defense of misuse is available only where there has been a misuse of the patents in suit.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9042.175.

Opinion

McNamee, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: This is an action for infringement of four patents of plaintiff, Floyd A. Firestone, Nos. 2,280,226, 2,398,701, 2,467,301 and 2,592,134, which will be referred to sometimes hereinafter as Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. All of the patents relate to flaw detection apparatus and the use thereof. The Claims of the patents which it is alleged were infringed are Patent No. 1, Claims 2, 3, 4, 10 and 11; Patent No. 2, Claims 7, 16, 19, 20, 25, 26, 29 and 32; Patent No. 3, Claims 1, 2 and 3; Patent No. 4, Claim 2.

The Parties

The plaintiffs are: Floyd A. Firestone, inventor of all four patents in suit and the owner of the legal title to Patent No. 1; Sperry Products, Inc., a New York corporation, the exclusive licensee under Patents 1 and 2, and the owner of Patents 3 and 4; United Aircraft Corporation, a Delaware corporation, the owner of Patent No. 2, and present here as an involuntary party plaintiff.

The defendants are: The Aluminum Company of America (hereinafter called Alcoa), a Pennsylvania corporation, with a place of business at Cleveland, Ohio, where it has used the accused apparatus known as an Immerscope; and Electro Circuits, Inc., maker and supplier to Alcoa of such apparatus. Electro Circuits is a California corporation, having no place of business in the jurisdiction of this Court but became a party by the voluntary filing of an Answer and Counterclaim.

The Pleadings

The Complaint alleges infringement of the Claims enumerated above. The Answer denies infringement and alleges invalidity of the patents on several grounds, including alleged misrepresentations to the Patent Office, lack of invention, anticipation by prior patents and publications, ambiguity, failure to fully disclose invention and misuse of the patents. A counterclaim filed by Electrocircuits for treble damages alleges that damages were sustained by that defendants as a result of the violation by plaintiffs of the antitrust laws. The affirmative defenses alleged in the Answer and the alleged violation of the antitrust laws set forth in the Counterclaim of Electrocircuits are denied by plaintiffs. Thus, the principal issues are: Invalidity, infringement, alleged misuse of the patents and alleged violation of the antitrust laws.

Preliminary Statement

The devices described by the patents in suit which are sold under the trade name "Reflectoscope" are instruments that use the pulse echo ultrasonic method in the detection of flaws in metal parts. By this method ultrasonic sound waves having a higher frequency than that audible to the human ear and capable of penetrating solid, liquid or gaseous material are propagated into a metal part. The waves travel through the part at a known speed of propagation characteristic of the material of the part under inspection. When the waves reach the opposite end of the part or when they encounter discontinuities or flaws therein their echoes are reflected back to the face of the part. The reflections from flaws nearest the entering end of the part arrive at that point before the reflections from discontinuities farther away and sooner than the reflections from the opposite end of the part. As these various reflections reach the entering end of the part they are amplified and by means of a sweeping motion of a beam of cathode rays they are registered on a cathode ray oscilloscope in a manner that permits the determination of the time of travel of the waves and the location of flaws in the part. In order to measure accurately the time of travel of the waves to and from the reflecting surfaces, it is necessary to propagate them in short bursts or pulses to permit the reception of the reflected echo prior to the propagation of a subsequent pulse, hence the term "pulse echo."

In the early 1950's Donald Erdman, a former president and founder of Electro Circuits, developed a so-called Wide Band Converter. This device had the circuitry necessary to produce ultrasonic vibrations as high as 25 megacycle frequency and the apparatus to amplify and receive the electrical impulses generated by the returning echoes. The wide band converter was used primarily for detecting flaws in parts by placing the part to be inspected under water. In 1952, when Electro Circuits was ready to place its device on the market, Richards, then president of Electro Circuits, conferred with Farwell, president of Sperry, with the view of effecting an arrangement that would enable Electro Circuits to sell its apparatus without being sued for infringement by Sperry. Richards proposed that Sperry license the Firestone patents to Electro Circuits or, in the alternative, that Electro Circuits sell its apparatus to Sperry for resale by the latter. Both proposals were rejected by Sperry. Later an agreement was reached by the terms of which Sperry agreed to permit Electro Circuits to sell its device but only upon condition that each wide band converter would be used in conjunction with a Sperry Reflectoscope. Under this arrangement the only part of the Reflectoscope that was used was the cathode ray oscilloscope. All other functions of the dual apparatus were performed by the wide band converter, the Reflectoscope being 80% useless. This arrangement was effective for but a substantially short time, after which Electro Circuits placed the accused Immerscope on the market.

Some of the accused devices were sold to the defendant Alcoa and used by it in its plant in Cleveland, Ohio. This suit followed. Electro-Circuits was unable financially to defend this action and entered into a contract with Curtiss-Wright Aircraft Company, by the terms of which Curtiss-Wright agreed to finance the defense of the litigation. As a part of this agreement Curtiss-Wright was granted the right to manufacture and sell Immerscopes upon the payment of royalties to Electro-circuits. The Immerscope is a device used primarily in underwater inspection of metal parts but it is used also for flaw detection where the part to be inspected is not submerged. It is plaintiff's claim that the Immerscope is in all respects the equivalent of the device described in the claims of the Firestone patents in suit.

Defendants direct their heaviest fire against the validity of the patents, about 80% of their voluminous brief being devoted to a discussion of that issue. Their defense against the charge of infringement is generally that the Immerscope follows the prior art rather than the teachings of the Firestone patents. Additionally they rely upon a number of separately stated grounds to avoid infringement of some of the many claims in suit.

The issues raised by the defense of misuse of the patent and Electrocircuits' counterclaim based upon an alleged violation of the antitrust laws have been dealt with in separate briefs. Accordingly, in this opinion the issues of validity and infringement will be discussed in that order and will be followed by an inquiry into the merits of the allegations of misuse of the patents and those relating to the alleged violation of the antitrust laws.

INFRINGEMENT

To summarize, Claims Nos. 2, 3, 4, 10 and 11 of Patent No. 2280226, Claims Nos. 16, 20, 25, 26, 29 and 32 of Patent No. 2398701, Claims Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of Patent No. 2467301, and Claim No. 2 of Patent No. 2592134 are valid and infringed. Claim No. 7 of Patent No. 2398701 is held to be invalid but, if valid, would be infringed.

DEFENSE OF MISUSE OF THE PATENTS AND THE COUNTERCLAIM BASED ON ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS

The defense and the counterclaim rest upon the same facts but the defense of misuse is asserted by both defendants whereas the antitrust counterclaim is asserted only on behalf of Electro Circuits.

The defense of misuse and the counterclaim are predicated broadly on defendants' contention that Sperry's purpose in instituting this suit for infringement was to obtain a monopolistic control of the market for ultrasonic pulse echo devices for flaw detection over and above the limited monopoly embraced within the terms of the patents.

In support of such contention defendants direct a multiplicity of charges against Sperry's general policies and practices in relation to the patents in suit and its foreign patents in the field of ultrasonics. Standing alone, many of defendants' allegations are devoid of merit and warrant but scant consideration. It is defendants' claim, however, that, considered as a whole, the challenged practices demonstrate Sperry's consistent purpose to enlarge its monopoly beyond the scope of the grants of the Patent Office and unlawfully to suppress competition. It is Sperry's position that in the use, manufacture and sale of the patented devices and method, and in the institution of this suit for infringement it was motivated by no other purpose than the protection and preservation of its lawful right to exclude others from making, using or selling the inventions disclosed by the patents in suit. An outline of defendants' several complaints is set forth in the Statement of Facts which will be supplemented to the extent necessary in the discussion of the various charges.

The Sperry Corporation was organized in 1928 by Dr. Elmer G. Sperry, a noted inventor, who died within a few years after the organization of the company. At the outset, the corporation's efforts were directed to developing and marketing the inventions of its founder. Throughout the ensuing years Sperry has expanded its operations along the same general line, engaging in research, developing, manufacturing and marketing of a number of inventions of members of its own staff and others. The company has prospered generally and is now a medium-sized corporation, having about 450 employees and 8 branch offices in the United States. The shares of the corporation are closely held by the heirs of Dr. Sperry except for a small interest held by J. B. Farwell, President of the corporation.

At an early date in its history, the company established the Sperry Rail Service for the detection of flaws in the tracks of the railroads. Such inspection is done by the use of railroad cars with trained crews who make inspections of thousands of miles of tracks by the induction method of flaw detection. Today Sperry maintains a fleet of 19 cars for this purpose. Although Sperry does about 70% of all rail testing in the United States, its actual and potential competitors, including the railroads, have a total of 22 cars designed and used for rail testing. As a result of its experience in rail testing, Sperry became interested in the detection of flaws in materials used in industry and, for a period of over ten years and at considerable expense, attempted to develop a satisfactory method of inspecting metal parts. The company was unsuccessful in this regard until it learned of and acquired the rights under the Firestone patents in suit. Since that time Reflectoscopes embodying the features of these patents have been sold by Sperry in the approximate number of 1100, about 136 of which were sold to the railroads.

Sperry is also engaged in the commercial testing business. This is a service by which the company uses its patented devices and other instruments in testing materials for others either in various manufacturing plants or in Sperry testing laboratories. There are about 150 individuals and corporations engaged in the business of commercial testing. The most recent information on the subject shows that the gross annual volume of such business by the 60 largest companies engaged therein is approximately $37,000,000. Sperry does only about one percent of all commercial testing. Sperry refuses to sell its patented devices for pulse echo ultrasonic testing to its competitors in the commercial testing business. Such refusal is the basis of one of the defendants' many charges of misuse and antitrust violation.

During the years, Sperry has acquired about 65 patents and has 25 pending applications for patents in the field of ultrasonics. This accumulation is also one of the practices against which defendants inveigh. On the name plates of the Reflectoscopes manufactured by Sperry appears the statement "manufactured under one or more of the following patents." Listed thereunder are the numbers of many patents, some of which have no application to the device in question. Defendants assail this practice as an "attempt to scare off competition." In the 15 years since Sperry acquired the first Firestone patent, it has sent five notices of infringement to others. None has resulted in litigation. Defendants regard these notices as threats of suit which constitute an integral part of a plan to violate the antitrust laws.

Sperry also manufactures a special patented transducer known as an Angle Beam Search Unit. This transducer is covered by Patent No. 2527986, which is not one of the patents in suit.

Originally this unit was sold with a tag affixed, bearing the legend "licensed only for use at 36°." This practice was discontinued at the end of 1952. Thereafter, for about three years, these instruments were licensed under a form of lease which limited the use of the search units to those not engaged in commercial testing and in the case of the railroads, to the inspection of their rolling stock. At the end of 1955 the licensing of the units was abandoned. Defendants contend that the original practice of attempting to restrict the use of the search units that were sold as well as Sperry's subsequent practice of restricting the use of such units under the leasing arrangement was unlawful. Defendants contend further that, inasmuch as the search units are used only in connection with Reflectoscopes covered by the patents in suit the restricted use of such units is in effect a restriction on the use of the Reflectoscope and constitutes a misuse of the patents in suit.

Reference was made at the outset of this opinion to the course of dealing between Sperry and Electro Circuits in connection with the manufacture and sale by the latter of a Wide Band Converter which is used for underwater testing of materials by the pulse echo ultrasonic technique. As hereinafter noted, an arrangement was effected by which Electro Circuits was permitted by Sperry to sell its Wide Band Converter but for use only in conjunction with Sperry Reflectoscopes. After the arrangement had been in effect for several months, Electro Circuits incorporated a B Scan device in the wide band converter. This was considered by Sperry to be a breach of the agreement of the parties and an infringement of Sperry patents and Sperry so informed Electro Circuits. The events that followed which culminated in Electro Circuits' decision to manufacture and sell Immerscopes and risk an infringement suit by Sperry will be recited in a discussion of the defendants' charge that Sperry misused the patent and violated the antitrust laws in its dealings with Electro Circuits.

After obtaining patents in the United States, Sperry, and in some instances Dr. Firestone, applied for and obtained patents in several European countries. For a while Sperry attempted, through its Sales Department, to market its products abroad and to obtain royalties by licensing its foreign patents. These efforts, however, were not successful and in March 1954 Sperry entered into an agreement with Resources and Facilities Corporation (hereinafter Refac). By the terms of the agreement, Refac was granted an exclusive license under Sperry's foreign patents with full power to grant sub-licenses for the use of the ultrasonic devices covered by such patents. Refac negotiated sub-licenses with various companies in Germany, France, Belgium, Italy and other European countries as well as an agreement with T. K. S. of Tokyo, Japan, all with the approval of Sperry. In addition to the payment of royalties, the sub-licenses provide for an exchange of patent rights and technical information between Sperry and the sub-licensees. Some of the licenses contain covenants by the licensees not to contest Sperry's foreign patents or applications therefor and to assign to Sperry the rights of the licensees in any future patents or applications. Additional relevant facts will appear in the discussion of defendants' charge that such licenses by their terms violate the antitrust laws of the United States and constitute a misuse of the patents in suit.

Finally, it is charged by defendants that the institution of this suit for infringement "was intended to do away with any and all domestic competition."

Refusal to Sell Reflectoscopes for Commercial Testing

It is difficult to understand the logic of defendants' position in respect of Sperry's refusal to sell Reflectoscopes to its competitors in the commercial testing business. Sperry manufactures and sells Reflectoscopes to others for use by the purchasers in testing their own products. All such sales are made without restriction. Sperry is also engaged in the commercial testing business, in the operation of which it uses testing instruments available to all. In addition, Sperry also uses its own Reflectoscopes, which are covered by the patents in suit, for testing by the pulse echo ultrasonic technique. Defendants concede that a patent is the grant of the right to exclude others from using the invention but they advance the novel argument that a refusal to sell the inventions for the purpose of preventing competition with the patent owner in their use is an unlawful enlargement of the grants. Merely to state the argument is to expose its fallacy. The argument rests on the presupposition that by its exclusive use of the patented devices in its commercial testing business, Sperry obtained an unfair advantage over its competitors in such business. However, the advantage that Sperry enjoys is the result of a right conferred upon it by the Constitution and statute, and takes nothing from its competitors to which they were entitled under the law. The monopoly of a patent is distinguishable from a monopoly, as that term is used generally, and in the antitrust laws. The distinction was delineated by the Supreme Court in United States v. Dubilier Condenser Corp., 289 U. S. 178, 186-187, as follows:

> "Though often so characterized, a patent is not, accurately speaking, a monopoly, for it is not created by the executive authority at the expense and to the prejudice of all the community except the grantee of the patent. Seymour v. Osborne, 11

Wall. 516, 533. The term monopoly connotes the giving of an exclusive privilege for buying, selling, working or using a thing which the public freely enjoyed prior to the grant. Thus a monopoly takes something from the people. An inventor deprives the public of nothing which it enjoyed before his discovery, but gives something of value to the community by adding to the sum of human knowledge."

Defendants add no force to their contention by citing out of context excerpts from authorities holding that the possession of a patent gives the patentee no exemption from the provisions of the antitrust laws. United States v. Line Material Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,225], 333 U. S. 287. It is settled law that a patentee may not enlarge the scope of his grant by tying other products, patented or unpatented, to the sale or use of the patented device. Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,201], 320 U. S. 661; Hartford-Empire Co., et al. v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,319], 323 U. S. 386. Nor may the patentee use the patent as a means of controlling resale prices or restricting customers. United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707. It is axiomatic that a patent may not be used to restrain competition or to monopolize trade in goods not covered by the patent. All of defendants' citations are wide of the mark. Sperry does not sell to some testing laboratories and discriminate against others. Sperry has no agreements with any of its competitors calculated to restrain competition or unlawfully monopolize any part of the business of commercial testing. It simply reserves to itself its own patented devices for its own use in the commercial testing business. Sperry does no more than the Supreme Court, in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., supra, said a patent owner had the right to do, i. e. "to be free from competition in the practice of his invention." In Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, supra, the Supreme Court stated the rights of a patent owner thus:

"A patent owner is not in the position of a quasi-trustee for the public or under any obligation to see that the public acquires the free right to use the invention. He has no obligation either to use it or to grant its use to others. If he discloses the invention in his application so that it will come into the public domain at the end of the 17-year period of exclusive right he has fulfilled the only obligation imposed by the statute. This has been settled doctrine since at least 1896."

And, as said in United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. O'Donnell Rubber Products Co., 84 F. 2d 383 (6th Cir.)

"It has long been settled that, in the United States, exclusion of competitors is the very essence of the right conferred by a patent."

See also Byers Machinery Co. v. Keystone Driller Co., 44 F. 2 283.

That Sperry's lawful advantage had no substantial effect upon its competitors is evidenced by the fact that Sperry does less than one percent of the commercial testing business in the United States. Notwithstanding Sperry's policy of not selling to its competitors, it was shown that Magnaflux Corporation, a competitor, has obtained and was using two Reflectoscopes in its laboratory. These devices were procured from original vendees of Sperry and were being used without any protest or objection by Sperry. There is no evidence that any competitor in the commercial testing business was sued or threatened with suit by Sperry nor has it been shown that defendants have suffered any injury by reason of the practice of which they complain. I hold there was no misuse of the patents in suit, or any violation of the antitrust laws in Sperry's refusal to sell its patented devices to its competitors in the commercial testing business.

ACCUMULATION OF PATENTS

Defendants attack Sperry's accumulation of patents as being motivated by the purpose to secure an unlawful monopoly of the pulse echo ultrasonic method of non-destructive testing. Sperry has 65 patents in the field of ultrasonic testing, with 25 applications pending. In addition, it received 16 applications from sub-licensees of its foreign patents but this number had dwindled to 2 applications, with only one claim allowed. It has also received other rights from its Belgian licensee but these relate to specific types of transducers rather than to pulse echo systems of flaw detection. Sperry has no policy of acquiring patents from others, particularly competitors, to block the entry of anyone into the field of ultrasonic flaw detection. Its ownership of the basic Firestone patent covering the pulse echo method is the result of Firestone's attempt to interest the Sperry Gyroscope Company in his invention and the suggestion by that company that Firestone submit a proposal to plaintiff Sperry Products Company. Upon acquiring this basic patent it followed as a matter of course that Sperry acquired rights in the subsequent Firestone patents covering improvements on the original invention. Many of its other patents in this field cover various types of transducers and other auxiliary equipment. Sperry has its own staff of engineers and inventors. Its patent committee meets several times a year and follows the policy of filing applications only on its inventions which can be put into use. Of over 300 inventions submitted to the committee only 136 were found to conform to the above policy and applications filed. Magnaflux Corporation, with a different flaw detection system, has 57 patents and 20 pending applications. Defendant Electro Circuits has 4 patents, one of which covers that defendant's F-M system of ultrasonic flaw detection, which the defendant does not use. There are 44 patents on ultrasonic flaw detection devices owned by others. Sperry is currently using more than one-third of its patents, which is higher than the national average of 30%. As said in Hartford Empire Co. v. United States, supra, a patentee of an invention "has no obligation either to use or grant its use to others."

Defendants have not shown any illegal purpose in the size of Sperry's patent portfolio. In Automatic Radio Manufacturing Co., Inc. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,634], 339 U. S. 827, the Supreme Court said "the mere accumulation of patents, no matter how many, is not in and of itself illegal." Defendants have failed to show that Sperry's accumulation of patents is unlawful, or that either defendant has sustained any injury by reason thereof.

Markings on the Name Plates

Defendants contend there is a misuse of the patents in suit in the practice of placing on the name plates of the Reflectoscopes a list of patents in addition to those embodied in such devices. Manifestly there is no misuse of the patents in suit by listing them on the name plates of the Reflectoscopes. "Misuse which constitutes a defense is a misuse of the patents in suit." Apex Electrical Mfg. Co. v. Altorfer Bros. Co. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,550], 238 F. 2d 867.

Lipschutz, patent attorney for Sperry, testified that he was responsible for the listing of patents on the name plates and that he followed the practice adopted by many other corporations, including General Electric Company, from whose name plates he copied the words "Manufactured under one or more of the following patents." Lipschutz also submitted a sound and reasonable explanation of the practice. There are about 20 different types of patented accessories and additional patents covering methods that can be used with Reflectoscopes. The selection of accessories and methods to be used with the Reflectoscopes is, of course, determined by the various needs and wishes of the purchasers of such instrument. The listing of all such patents on the name plates is a time and labor-saving expedient which nevertheless fully informs any potential competitor of the extent of Sperry's patent holdings. According to Lipschutz, the alternative to the above practice would be "to sit down with an engineer and salesman each time an instrument was sold and make a separate and different name plate for such instrument." The practice followed by Sperry is an old one. See National Folding-Box & Paper Co. v. Elsas, 86 Fed. 917 (1898); also see Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. v. Hughes Tool Co., 192 F. 2d 620 (1951). Defendants' suggestion that anyone reading the list of 50 patents "obviously would be frightened at the cost of investigating and would very likely go no further," finds no support in the evidence. Electro Circuits was not frightened, nor was Alcoa. Cline, who was in charge of standardizing equipment purchases for Alcoa, said he never looked at the name plates. Defendants have not sustained their claims of misuse, or antitrust violation in Sperry's use of the name plates, nor has either defendant sustained any injury by reason of such practice.

Notices of Infringement

During the period of fifteen years, Sperry sent a total of five written notices of infringement. Section 287, Title 35 U. S. C. A., provides that "no damages shall be recovered by the patentee in any action for infringement except upon proof that the infringer was notified of the infringement." In notifying infringers, Sperry was merely complying with the requirements of the statute. There is no evidence that Sperry did not act in good faith in sending such notices. In Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., etc., 227 U. S. 8, the Supreme Court said:

> "Patents would be of little value if infringers of them could not be notified of the consequences of infringement or proceeded against in the courts."

Defendants' claims in this connection are without substance and there is no evidence of any injury to either defendant by reason of Sperry's notices to infringers.

Angle Beam Search Unit

Although the patent covering the angle beam search unit is not one of the patents in suit, defendants contend that because the search units are used with Reflectoscopes which are covered by the patents in suit, the restriction on the use of the former is in effect a restriction on the use of the latter. However, this falls far short of showing that the patents in suit were used to restrict the use of the angle beam search unit. In a further effort to connect the patents in suit with the restrictions in the lease, defendants assert that a plastic wedge on the bottom of the angle beam search unit serves as a delay member as taught by Patent No. 2467301, which is one of the patents in suit. However, no witness testified that the plastic wedge serves the purpose now claimed for it by defendants. But even if it did, this would not establish that one of the patents in suit was used to enforce the restrictions in the leases of the search units. It is not essential to the effective use of the invention covered by Patent No. 2467301 that it be used with the angle beam search unit. Defendants also contend that in restricting the use of the search units by the railroads to inspection of their rolling stock, Sperry suppressed its ultrasonic patents in order to enable it to "maximize its income from its induction rail service." In support of this contention, they advance the argument that "Sperry was afraid that the railroads might hit upon a way of applying ultrasonics to rail testing and thus did not wish to give the railroads the angle beam search unit which might have made the adaptation of the Reflectoscope to rail testing possible." Even if this were a correct surmise of Sperry's motive, it would not serve to invalidate the restriction. During the time the practice of restrictive licensing was in effect neither Sperry nor the railroads had developed a technique of inspecting rails by the use of Reflectoscopes and the only use to which the search units could be put in this connection was an experimental one. Sperry was using the angle beam search units for such purposes and as the owner of the patent it had the right to be free from competition in this field of use. Sperry also was acting within the scope of its lawful authority under the patent in restricting the use of the search units to those who were not engaged in the commercial testing business. Indeed, in view of Sperry's policy of refusing to sell Reflectoscopes to its competitors in such business, the restriction was of little or no significance. Obviously, if its competitors in commercial testing business were unable to purchase Reflectoscopes they would have no need of the angle beam search units.

The Supreme Court of the United States has approved the practice of restrictive licensing of inventions. In General Talking Pictures v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124, it was held that:

> "The owner of a patent may lawfully restrict his licensee to the manufacture and sale of patented inventions for use is only one or some of several distinct fields in which it is useful, excluding him from the others." (Headnote No. 1)

On p. 124 of the opinion, the Court said:

> "The practice of granting licenses for restrictive use is an old one. See Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 788, 789, 800; Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Co. v. Brookman, 14 F. 255. So far as appears its legality has never been questioned."

In Hartford-Empire v. United States, supra, the court, in discussing the provisions of the decree of the District Court, said:

> "Paragraph 29 should be amended to permit any appellant, corporate or individual . . . to license with restrictions any patent hereafter applied for or acquired."

See also Williams v. Hughes Tool Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,785], 186 F. 2d 278, 285.

In view of the foregoing authorities, it must be held that the restrictions in the leases were valid. Even if this were not so, and if it were held that such restrictions constituted a misuse of the patents in suit, defendants would have no cause for complaint. As shown above, the practice of leasing was discontinued at the end of 1955 and since that time the angle beam search units have been sold without restriction.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The reason for the abandonment of said practice was stated by Manning, assistant to the president of Sperry, as follows: "We found that it just wasn't worth the bother. Of course our interest in leasing in the beginning was to protect a very substantial investment in the research and development applying to this rail and we concluded this just wasn't worth the bother and we were willing to open it up to anybody." Manning testified further that the search units were easy to make and were being made by many people. If, contrary to the views hereinabove expressed, it were held that the restrictive leasing of the search units was improper, the abandonment of such practice would remove any impediment to plaintiffs' right to proceed with their suit for infringement. Defendants argue that since such practice was in effect at the time this suit was instituted and for some time thereafter, it is too late for Sperry to purge itself. This is not the law. In White Cap Co. v. Owens-Illinois Glass Co. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,476], 203 F. 2d 694 (6th Cir.) the Court said:

> "However, the master held that the plaintiff had purged itself of the illegal practice. The fact that the objectionable provision was cancelled during the pending proceedings does not establish that the holding is erroneous. Campbell v. Mueller (6th Cir.) (159 F. 2d 803. See also Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S., at p. 161, . . . in which the illegal clauses were cancelled a short time before the entry of the decree."

To the same effect are Sylvania Industrial Corp. v. Visking Corporation [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,255], 132 F. 2d 947; Air Products, Inc. v. Boston Metals Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,926], 98 F. Supp. 719; Eastern Venetian Blind Co. v. Acme Steel Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,819], 188 F. 2d 247.

For the reasons hereinabove stated, it is held that defendants have not established a misuse of the patents in suit or any violation of the antitrust laws or that any damage resulted to either of them by reason of Sperry's practices in connection with the angle beam search unit.

Relations Between Sperry and Electro Circuits

Defendants charge that Sperry misused the patent in suit by "the imposition of a tying arrangement." They also assert that Sperry enticed Electro Circuits into the field of ultrasonic pulse echo testing and subsequently attempted to expel Electro Circuits therefrom. It requires no more than a statement of the salient facts to demonstrate that both contentions are groundless. Electro Circuits was organized in California in 1951. It commenced active operations in that state in July 1951. Its first development was a weld inspection apparatus which was followed by the development of a Wide Band Converter and the Immerscope. These devices operate on the principle of the pulse echo method of ultrasonic testing. At the time of its first development Electro Circuits attempted to secure a license under the Sperry patents in return for its agreement to purchase from Sperry unpatented sub-assemblies of the latter's patented devices. Sperry rejected this proposal. When Electro Circuits was ready to market its Wide Band Converter, Richards, the president of that company, had a conference with the officials of Sperry with a view of securing an agreement that would permit Electro Circuits to manufacture and sell its Wide Band Converter without being sued for infringement. Richards proposed that Sperry grant a license to Electro Circuits or, in the alternative, that Electro Circuits sell its Wide Band Converter to Sperry for resale by the latter. Sperry rejected both proposals. It was agreed between the parties, however, that Sperry would forebear instituting suit for infringement provided Electro Circuits sold its Wide Band Converter for use only in conjunction with Sperry's Reflectoscopes. The Wide Band Converter was designed so that it could be "plugged in" to a Reflectoscope. Under this arrangement of joint use, only the display portion of the cathode ray oscilloscope of Sperry's instrument was used. All other functions of the dual apparatus were performed by the Wide Band Converter. The agreement remained in effect for about 9 months, during which time Electro Circuits sold 8 Wide Band Converters to owners of Reflectoscopes and one Wide Band Converter to a customer who agreed to its use with a Reflectoscope to be purchased from Sperry. In March 1953 Farwell, president of Sperry, learned through an advertisement in a trade journal that Electro Circuits was making a B Scan display in connection with its Wide Band Converter. Farwell considered this a breach by Electro Circuits of its agreement and an infringement of Sperry's patents, and notified Electro Circuits to this effect. Thereafter officials of Electro Circuits went to New York and there conferred with representatives of Sperry.

At this time Electro Circuits was negotiating with the Magnaflux Company with a view of engaging the latter to act as its distributor. In making the trip to New York, Richards stopped in Chicago and informed Magnaflux of Sperry's notice of infringement. On May 6, 1953 Richards held a series of conferences with Sperry in New York, at which time many proposals were made and rejected. It was finally agreed, however, that Electro Circuits might continue selling its Wide Band Converter and B Scan for use with the Reflectoscopes for a period of six months, after which time Electro Circuits would convert its equipment to the F-M system of ultrasonic inspection, on which it held a patent. Before returning to California, Richards again stopped at Chicago and saw the officers of the Magnaflux Company. On this occasion he learned that Magnaflux had received an opinion from a firm of patent lawyers that the Sperry patents probably were invalid. When he arrived back in California Richards requested a firm of patent attorneys in San Francisco to submit opinions on two questions: (1) whether its F-M system infringed the Sperry patents, and (2) whether the Sperry patents were invalid. The opinions received were to the effect that the F-M system did not infringe and that the Sperry patents probably were invalid. Thereafter, at the end of the six months period, Electro Circuits did not convert its equipment to the F-M system—instead it incorporated a cathode ray oscilloscope in its wide band converter and called the new self-operating unit an Immerscope. In only one instance did Sperry sell a Reflectoscope that was to be used with the Wide Band Converter. In that case Sperry imposed no condition upon the use of its instrument but merely agreed that in addition to its use in the usual manner the purchaser might also use the Reflectoscope in conjunction with the Wide Band Converter. The other eight sales of Wide Band Converters were made by Electro Circuits to owners of Reflectoscopes and Sperry merely consented to the use of its invention in the manner described above. At no time in connection with any of the transactions did Sperry attempt to enlarge its lawful monopoly under its patents. As counsel for plaintiff aptly observed, Electro Circuits "might have had something to talk about" if Sperry had acceded to the request of Electro Circuits and sold its unpatented assemblies to the latter. The cases cited by defendants are not in point. Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; Carbice Corp. v. American Patent Developments Co., 283 U. S. 27 and Morton Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Co., 243 U. S. 502 are cases in which the patent owner was misusing the patent to enforce the sale of unpatented products. Black v. Magnolia Liquor Co., 355 U. S. 24 and Distilled Brands v. Dunnigan, 222 F. 2d 867, involved tie-in sales of liquor dealers. Patents were not involved in those cases. The excerpts quoted from U. S. v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100 and U. S. v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 are not pertinent under the facts of this case.

Electro Circuits' claim that Sperry enticed it into the pulse echo ultrasonic testing business is repudiated completely by the facts. Electro Circuits was an active and successful petitioner of concessions from Sperry that would enable it to manufacture its Wide Band Converters free of the threat of a suit for infringement. After receiving notice that it infringed the Sperry patents by incorporating a B-scan in the Wide Band Converter, Electro Circuits succeeded in persuading Sperry to defer the institution of suit for a period of 6 months upon Electro Circuits' promise to convert to its F-M system at the end of that time. Thereafter, in violation of its promise, Electro Circuits proceeded to manufacture and sell the accused Immerscope.

I find no basis in the evidence for the charge of enticement nor do I find any evidence of a misuse of the patents in suit or a violaiton of the antitrust laws in Sperry's dealings with Electro Circuits.

PLAINTIFF'S PURPOSE IN FILING THIS SUIT

An examination of the above captioned subject is made at this point because of its close relation to the events referred to in the subject last discussed. It is the contention of defendants that Sperry's purpose in instituting suit was to obtain monopolistic control of the market over and above the rights granted to it under its patents. In support of this contention defendants refer to Sperry's policy of asserting its patent rights against infringers, Sperry's alleged improprieties in its relations with Electro Circuits and Sperry's alleged attempt to reserve the United States market to itself through its foreign license agreements.

As noted above, Sperry was doing no more than asserting its right under the patents in sending notices to infringers. It has also been determined above that in its relations with Electro Circuits, Sperry was guilty of no impropriety and that such charge is entirely without merit. The implication in defendants' argument that Sperry's policy of licensing its foreign patents was a part of an alleged unlawful purpose to monopolize will be hereinafter discussed. It is enough to say at this point that there is no relation between Sperry's licensing of its foreign patents and this action for infringement of the United States patents in suit. Defendants also refer to testimony that statements were made by salesmen of Sperry in 1955 to customers of Electro Circuits that the Aluminum Company of America had standardized on Sperry equipment. Defendants assert that such statements were designed to "stampede" customers of Electro Circuits into using Sperry equipment. This testimony was hearsay, and there is no evidence tending to prove that, if made, such statements had any effect on the customers of Electro Circuits. By such testimony defendants seek to establish that in its relations with Electro Circuits Sperry followed a policy of forwarding improper notices to the trade. They fail in their purpose on two grounds—the testimony is incompetent—and it is entirely lacking in probative value. Defendants also refer to the testimony of Buckman, now with Curtiss-Wright, that while he was employed by Thompson Products in 1955, Smack, of Alcoa, said to him that the Immerscope could not operate at a certain speed, whereupon Buckman demonstrated that it could. It is difficult to believe that defendants are serious in their claim that this unimportant incident is related to the question of improper trade notices. Buckman's testimony in this regard is entitled to no weight. Defendants also refer to the fact that Farwell expressed the opinion on several occasions that the market for ultrasonics was only large enough for one manufacturer. It is implied that such statements evidence an unlawful monopolistic purpose. The statements were made by Farwell on the occasion of the conference in May 1953 between representatives of Sperry and Electro Circuits. Richards, president of the latter company, testified that Farwell made such statements in explanation of Sperry's policy not to grant licenses because the field was not large enough for two companies. According to Richards, Farwell added that in view of its patents it was Sperry's right "to have exclusive use of the field." I am unable to read any unlawful intent in Farwell's statement of Sperry's purpose to exercise its lawful right to exclude others from using its inventions.

The matters above referred to lend no strength to defendants' major contention that in filing this suit Sperry was motivated by a purpose to enlarge the scope of the monopoly granted by the Patent Office. The facts in the record lead inescapably to the conclusion that Sperry was forced to sue for infringement in order to protect its rights under the patent. Although Sperry served Electro Circuits with a notice of infringement in March 1953, and its agreement of May 1953 to defer action for six months terminated in November of that year, it was not until ten months later, and long after Electro Circuits embarked upon its deliberate program of infringement, that this action was filed. Sperry had done more than make good on its promise to give Electro Circuits ample time to convert to its F-M system and avoid the infringement action. Sperry's conduct, which is now assailed, was regarded quite differently by Electro Circuits when it was promoting the sale of its stock during the period within which it was to convert to the F-M system of flaw detection. In a prospectus filed with the Investment Department of the Division of Corporations of the State of California, on October 6, 1953, Electro Circuits, among other things, made the following statements:

> "There is some question as to whether or not, in the absence of the working agreement mentioned above, the B-scan and wide band converter infringe patents held by Sperry and relating to pulse modulation ultrasonic inspection. To avoid any possible conflict on this matter, the Corporation decided to convert its instruments to phase, frequency or other modulation mode clearly differing from the pulse mode. The Corporation owns United States Patent 2,593,865, directed to frequency modulation system of ultrasonic flaw detection. The patent firms of Hill, Sherman, Meroni, Gross & Simpson of Chicago"—"and Lippincott and Smith of San Francisco, have independently given opinions that conversion of the present pulse modulated instrument to a mode of modulation as described in said patent, will avoid any question of infringement of the Sperry owned patents. The Corporation has recognized for some time the advantages of phase or frequency modulation, particularly with respect to improved resolution and diversification of applications. The cost of conversion, however, has not been heretofore justified. Sperry has indicated continued cooperation during the period required for the Corporation to effectuate this conversion."

Sperry's cooperation was given in full measure but Electro Circuits recanted on its promise to convert and infringed the Sperry patents.

During the period of the so-called "working agreement" Electro Circuits sold 8 Wide Band Converters while Sperry sold but one Reflectoscope for use with a Wide Band Converter. Both instruments sold for about the same price, and it is obvious that the benefits realized by Electro Circuits under the arrangement were many times greater than those realized by Sperry. Electro Circuits suffered no loss through any alleged improper conduct of Sperry.

Electro Circuits relies heavily on Kobe v. Dempsey [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,312], 198 F. 2d 416 as authority supporting its claim that the filing of this suit was an integral part of Sperry's alleged purpose to unlawfully monopolize the pulse echo system of flaw detection. The Kobe case, however, is of no aid to defendants. In the cited case, the Court of Appeals found that in March 1933 Kobe and Rodless Pump Company, competitors in furnishing hydraulic pumps to the oil industry, entered into an agreement which provided that a third corporation, known as Roko, would be created for the purpose of holding title to patents assigned to a pool. The new corporation had no other function than holding the pooled patents, acquiring other patents and granting licenses. Kobe and Rodless assigned all their patents to Roko for a period of 25 years. Subsequently Roko acquired all of the patents covering inventions of hydraulic pumps and Kobe became the sole licensee of Roko.

In 1948 suit was filed by Kobe against Dempsey. At the time of filing Kobe had no concrete information that the Dempsey pump infringed any of Kobe's patents. The court found that upon the filing of the infringement action Kobe sent notices to the trade which were veiled threats that purchasers might be involved. The notices resulted in an almost complete boycott of the Dempsey pump. In holding that the institution of the infringement action was an integral part of Kobe's unlawful monopoly, the court found that the Kobe-Rodless agreement of 1933, which created Roko, was the beginning of an arrangement to corner the hydraulic pump business for oil wells. Among other things, the court said:

> "The purposes of the original contract creating the monopoly were illustrated by the activities of Kobe when Dempsey appeared on the market and became the definite prospect for competition in the hydraulic field. Until then there had been no need for Kobe to display its monopolistic power. A reading of the communications between the company and the sales agents and the testimony as to the activity of different representatives of Kobe can leave no other inference than that the monopolistic purpose of this original arrangement was to be continued if possible. This suit was no more than a part of the original plan and was designed to nip this competitive threat in the bud." P. 423-4. (Emphasis supplied)

As shown by the findings of the Court of Appeals, Kobe's suit against Dempsey was an attempt to maintain and continue in effect the unlawful monopoly created by Kobe's contract with Rodless 15 years before the infringement suit was filed. No comparable situation is to be found in the case at bar. The defendants ignore this basic distinction between the two cases and take no account of the striking contrast between the facts of Kobe and those of the instant case. Accusations and imputations of reprehensible conduct, such as were present in Kobe, are poor substitutes for the missing proof of similar conduct by Sperry. The evidence in this case admits of no other rational conclusion than that Sperry was forced to sue for infringement to protect its lawful rights under its patents. Cole v. Hughes Tool Co. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,857], 215 F. 2d 924; United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,436], 110 F. Supp. 295; *International Visible Systems Corp. v. Sperry's Foreign Licenses

There can be no doubt that Sperry's primary purpose in entering into foreign license agreements was to obtain income from royalties on its foreign patents. Sperry had attempted for some time to market its products abroad but with little success. It had decided that the limited market abroad did not warrant the substantial investment necessary to establish manufacturing plants in foreign countries. Some of the European countries impose taxes on patents, particularly those covering inventions not used commercially. Sperry's foreign patents were therefore a source of continuing and increasing expense and were producing little or no income. In an effort to correct and improve this unprofitable condition, Sperry entered into an exclusive license agreement with Refac in March 1954. Sperry has no financial interest in Refac, which is an independent organization specializng in assisting American corporations in the handling of their foreign business. The original license was amended in September 1955 to separate those patents in which Dr. Firestone has an interest and Sperry's other patents. The term of the amended license was for 5 years and Refac was granted the right to terminate the agreement at any time upon 6 months' notice. Refac was authorized to sub-license others, with Sperry's approval, in consideration of the payment of royalties, part of which were to be retained by Refac and the balance remitted to Sperry. Refac negotiated and executed 13 sub-licenses with 12 European companies and one with TKS of Tokyo, Japan. Eleven of such licenses are in effect and, with the exception of the license to TKS, all of such licenses are non-exclusive. The sub-licensees are authorized to manufacture and sell the devices and accessories covered by the patents in specified territories. The territory of several of the licensees extends into countries in which Sperry has no patent rights. There was also an overlapping of territories in many of the licenses. In addition to the payment of royalties, the licensees were required to acknowledge the validity of Sperry's foreign patents, both present and future, and to agree not to contest the validity of such patents or future applications. In six of the licenses provision is made for "grant backs" of improvements and an exchange of technical knowledge and know-how. Three of such licenses contain agreements by Sperry not to engage in manufacturing in Europe. The terms of the licenses vary in respect of termination rights. Some of the licensees were granted the right to cancel their agreements in 1957, others in 1958, and still others in 1963 and 1965. The original exclusive license to TKS contained a provision requiring the licensee not to manufacture or sell ultrasonic equipment for a period of five years after the termination of the license no matter which party caused the termination. This provision was modified by an amendment on November 20, 1957. The amendment limited the scope of the obligation of TKS not to engage in the manufacture or sale of ultrasonics after termination of the license by excepting therefrom the manufacture and sale of such inventions as "shall have become public knowledge by publication or patenting within the licensed area."

In discussing defendants' contentions in respect of the foreign licenses, the claims of antitrust violation in the counterclaim of Electro Circuits will be separated from the claim of both defendants that the patents in suit were misused.

To make out a case of antitrust violation, the counterclaiming defendant must show that Sperry's foreign licenses had a direct and substantially harmful effect on interstate commerce or on the foreign commerce of the United States. Defendant Electro Circuits contends that "the primary purpose of Sperry's foreign licensing policy was to reserve to Sperry the American market." In support of this contention the defendant asserts that Sperry has obtained almost all patents owned by foreign manufacturers most likely to compete with it in the United States markets. Defendant, however, takes no account of the actual number of patents received by Sperry or their value. The fact is that Sperry has received very little by way of assignments from its foreign licensees. Of the 10 assigned applications from Krautkramer, of Germany, 6 have been abandoned, 2 others are about to be abandoned and only one claim has been allowed on the 2 remaining applications. Sperry has also received rights under 6 patents from A. C. E. C. of Belgium, but these relate to various types of transducers and are of doubtful value. No assignment of any application or patent covering ultrasonic pulse echo apparatus has been received. It is the teaching of Transparent Wrap Machine Co. v. Stokes & Smith [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,532], 329 U. S. 637, that "The inclusion in a license of a condition requiring the licensee to assign improvements is not per se illegal and unenforceable." See also Hart- ford Empire v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,319], 323 U. S. 386, 422, 423. Where a challenged practice is not per se illegal, an examination of all relevant market factors and their economic consequences is required to determine whether the assailed practice is within the ban of the Sherman Act. Defendant has insisted throughout that the relevant market here is that of ultrasonic pulse echo testing instruments. Yet it is not shown whether the applications and patents received by Sperry from its licensees are competitive or merely complementary, nor has it been established that there has been any illegal acquisition of patent rights from the licensees. Moreover, no attempt has been made to show any adverse economic consequences arising from the "grant backs." Defendant also contends that the foreign licenses have had a harmful effect on the import trade of the United States. In support of such contention defendants point to a few instances where corporations in the United States were unable to buy pulse echo equipment from Krautkramer, one of Sperry's foreign licensees. However, the most reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is that such purchases were prevented by Sperry's lawful exercise of its rights under its United States patents and Krautkramer's unwillingness to infringe such patents. It is not claimed that any other purchases from abroad were prevented by Sperry's foreign licenses. That such licenses were without effect on this country's import trade is indicated by the fact that Kelvin Hughes and Glass Developments, two large English corporations who are competitors and not licensed under the Sperry foreign patents, do not sell ultrasonic devices in the United States. It also appears that none of the foreign licensees did business in the United States prior to the time they were licensed under Sperry's foreign patents. The conclusion is inescapable that the inability of a few American corpoartions to buy pulse echo equipment from Krautkramer was due to Sperry's ownership of the United States patents on such equipment and its exercise of its lawful right to exclude other from selling such equipment in this country.

In an effort to show that the export trade of the United States was harmed by the foreign licenses defendants assert that in order to obtain concessions from its licensees Sperry agreed not to compete in certain areas of the world. There are no such express agreements with the licensees. It is true that Sperry agreed with three of its licensees not to manufacture in Europe. However, it is shown that since such license agreements were executed Sperry's export trade has increased. While some of Sperry's export shipments were made to countries where it has no foreign patents, such countries are within the territories assigned to the licensees with whom such agreements were made. Sperry's freedom to export American manufactured products has not been restricted. There is no evidence tending to show that the export trade of Sperry, or any one else, including Electro Circuits, has been injuriously affected by the foreign licenses. Sperry has granted a license to T. K. S. In effect this was an assignment of its patent rights in Japan to the licensee. There is no evidence showing that such license had any detrimental effect on this country's export trade.

Defendant also attacks the legality of practically all of the other restrictive covenants in the foreign licenses but offers no evidence to show that any or all of such covenants had any harmful effect on the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States. It is unnecessary, therefore, to extend this discussion to a consideration of the various claims of the defendant in this regard. Defendant has failed to prove any public injury resulting from Sperry's foreign licensing policy. There is also a complete failure of proof that the foreign licenses have caused any injury to the counterclaiming defendant. The real question on this branch of the case, therefore, is whether Electro Circuits has any right of action under the antitrust laws.

THE COUNTERCLAIM OF ELECTRO CIRCUITS

Section 15 of Title 15 U. S. C. A., in its pertinent part, reads:

> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States * * * and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

The courts have held uniformly that it is a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action under the antitrust laws by a private suitor that the plaintiff prove that he was damaged as a direct result of defendant's violation of the Sherman Act. Studio Unions v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,953], 193 F. 2d 51; Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,104], 224 F. 2d 678; Hunter Douglas Corp. v. Lando Products [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,386], 235 F. 2d 631; E. V. Prentice Machinery Co. v. Associated Plywood Mills, Inc. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,930], 252 F. 2d 473; Peller v. International Boxing Club [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,202], 227 F. 2d 593; Mason City Tent & Awning Co. v. Clapper [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,553], 144 F. Supp. 754. The principle which governs in all private suits under the statutes applies with equal force to alleged violations of the antitrust laws asserted by a counterclaiming defendant. In order to maintain its counterclaim it is therefore incumbent upon the defendant to show that it has been injured in its "business or property" by the wrongful acts of Sperry. This, the counterclaiming defendant has failed to do. As already shown, there is no evidence of any antitrust violation by Sperry in the conduct of its business in the United States. It is clear that in respect of all its acts and practices in this country Sperry was acting within the ambit of its lawful monopoly under the patents in suit. The defendant contends, however, that it sustained damage as a result of Sperry's alleged practice of requiring each purchaser of a Wide Band Converter to buy a Sperry Reflectoscope. This argument is based upon a false premise. Sperry did not require any purchaser of a Wide Band Converter to buy a Reflectoscope. It was Electro Circuits who insisted that the purchasers of its Wide Band Converters use them only in connection with a Reflectoscope in order to avoid infringing the Sperry patents. In all but one of the sales made under the "working agreement" Electro Circuits sold its equipment to customers who already owned Reflectoscopes. One Reflectoscope was sold to the du Pont Company with premission to use it in conjunction with a Wide Band Converter but no other sales of Reflectoscopes were made for the same purpose. Moreover, Electro Circuits never purchased any Reflectoscopes and its claim of damages as a result of the "working agreement" between the parties is entirely devoid of merit.

Defendant also contends that it was damaged by reason of expenses incurred in investigating the validity of the Sperry patents; that it sustained further damage in the expenditure of time and capital in an effort to design devices that would avoid Sperry's patent claims even though it considered the validity of such claims to be questionable. However, these alleged injuries were self-inflicted and are in no way attributable to any wrongful act of Sperry. Defendant contends further that it sustained a loss of profits by reason of this suit for infringement because of its inability to offer satisfactory indemnity agreements to its potential customers prior to the time the Curtiss-Wright Corporation agreed to underwrite the expense of defending this suit. Also claimed as an item of damage is the alleged loss of profits resulting from defenadnts' agreement with Curtiss-Wright. These contentions represent no more than claims for damages resulting from the suit for infringement. They rest upon the erroneous presupposition that Sperry's action in filing suit was in the furtherance of an unlawful monopoly. This is contrary to the fact determined above that Sperry was forced to institute suit to protect its lawful rights under the grants from the Patent Office. To justify such claims for damage defendant again seeks to assimilate the facts of Kobe v. Dempsey, supra, to the facts of this case, but, as already shown, there is no parallel between that case and the facts of this one. Defendant also cites and relies upon the following statement of the court in Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251, 265, 266:

> "The most elementary conceptions of justice and public policy require that the wrongdoer shall bear the risk of the uncertainty which his own wrong has created. * * * The constant tendency of the courts is to find some way in which damages can be awarded where a wrong has been done. Difficulty of ascertainment is no longer confused with right of recovery for a proper invasion of the plaintiff's rights."

The quotation from Bigelow is unquestionably a correct statement of the law but it has no application here. Defendant has not shown any invasion of its rights by any wrongful act of Sperry. Defendant embarked upon a deliberate program of infringement by manufacturing and selling Immerscopes in full knowledge that it was risking, if not inviting, a suit for infringement. This Court has found that defendants did infringe the Sperry patents. It would be a strange paradox indeed if Electro Circuits were permitted to escape the consequences of its own tortious conduct and recover damages from Sperry, who was merely asserting its lawful rights under its patents.

Electro Circuits has also failed to establish any damage to itself or its property directly resulting from Sperry's licensing of its foreign patents. The only testimony offered by Electro Circuits in this connection is that of its president, Richards, who testified his company had signed a contract with a foreign sales representative in San Francisco but did not aggressively attempt to sell abroad until 1954; that such efforts were discontinued on November 17, 1955 without any foreign sales being made. There was not the slightest suggestion by the witness that Sperry's licensing policy abroad had any effect whatever on Electro Circuits' failure to sell in foreign markets. The reasons for its lack of success in this field are unstated by the defendant and unknown to the Court. It is clear, however, that there is no showing of a causal relation, either proximate or remote, between Electro Circuits' failure to make sales abroad and Sperry's licensing policy in foreign countries. The record is barren of any proof that Sperry's licensing policy abroad or its acts and practices in the operation of its business in this country resulted in any pecuniary injury to the counterclaiming defendant.

For the reasons indicated, it is held that Electro Circuits is not entitled to maintain its counterclaim, and that the same must be dismissed.

Alleged Misuse of the Patents in Suit

This issue may be disposed of with brief comment. By specific findings this Court has held that Sperry did not misuse the patents in suit in any of its acts or practices of which defendants complain that relate to the conduct of Sperry's business in the United States. Such findings are hereby reaffirmed. All of Sperry's foreign licenses were granted under its foreign patents. Hence there was no use, and consequently no misuse, of the United States patents in suit in connection with Sperry's foreign licensing policy. Defendants recognize that the defense of misuse is available only where there has been a misuse of the patents in suit. However, they attempt to relate Sperry's United States patents to its foreign licensing policy. Defendants advance the argument that Sperry's rights under the patents in suit were expanded by its foreign patents covering the same inventions and that Sperry used its foreign patents to expand its rights under its United States patents "beyond anything contemplated by law." The implication of such argument seems to be that the patents in suit as expanded by the foreign patents covering the same inventions were misused by Sperry in connection with its foreign licensing policy. The argument is unsound. Foreign patents create rights separate and distinct from those created by patents issued in the United States. Foreign patents covering the same inventions as United States patents can neither restrict nor enlarge the rights acquired under patents issued by the United States Government. An excellent statement of the applicable principles is found in the Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Antitrust Laws (1955) where it is said (p. 96):

> "We point out, however, that a patent is a grant from the sovereign and therefore has no force beyond that sovereign's territorial limits. Thus, a United States patent creates rights coextensive only with United States laws. Similarly, a British patent, covering the same invention as an American patent, is governed by British law co-extensive with British territory. This means that patent rights in the same invention may differ in scope and effect in the respective territorial limits of the country of issuance."

The doctrine of misuse rests upon the principle that the holder of an exclusive privilege granted in the furtherance of public policy may not claim protection of his grant by the courts where it is being used to subvert that policy. Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488, 494. Sperry seeks no protection of the patents granted by foreign countries and it is not shown that the patents in suit were used to subvert the public policy of the United States as expressed in the Constitution and patent laws.

An order may be entered dismissing the counterclaim of the defendant Electro Circuits and granting plaintiffs the injunctive relief and the accounting prayed for in their amended and supplemental complaint.

This opinion constitutes Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law pursuant to Rule 52(a).

[¶ 69,240] United States v. Standard Oil Company of California; The Texas Company; Richfield Oil Corporation; General Petroleum Corporation; Tidewater Associated Oil Company; Union Oil Company of California; Shell Oil Company; and Conservation Committee of California Oil Producers.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Southern Division. No. 11584-C Civil. Dated October 21, 1958.

Case No. 1024 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Mootness.—An oil conservation committee's motion for a summary judgment of dismissal on the ground of mootness was granted. The committee had been composed of employees of the other defendants in the action and of people from other segments of the oil industry. The membership of the committee was not static but was changing. An injunction against the committee, in view of its changing complexion, would be an idle act. A decree against the other defendants would accomplish far more than a decree against an illusory committee that could disband and reorganize under a new name and with different personnel and do all that the old committee had done. Furthermore, the presence of the committee as a defendant would not assist the other defendants or the Government in the trial of the action.

Transcript of Proceedings

[Summary Judgment]

The Court [JAMES M. CARTER, District Judge, In full text]: In view of the Rule about issues of fact being sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment, it is hard for me to imagine a case with ingenious counsel where you can't have some issue of fact.

We judges in the Southern District of California have sat around the table with Judge Fee at lunch time discussing summary judgment—and I know that he will not take offense if he reads what I have to say—and he has put the fear of God in us about summary judgments. His view of summary judgments is such that you have to think twice about granting motions for summary judgment.

[Committee as Defendant—Mootness]

As far as the motion of the Conservation Committee on its second ground is concerned, the motion is denied.

As to the motion of the Conservation Committee on its first ground, on the ground of mootness, I was inclined to take this matter under submission, but maybe in view of Mr. Morton's remarks urging a decision on it I had better dispose of that end of it, too.

One factor that seems to me very important in passing on that motion is the character of this Committee. The Committee in the past has been composed, in part, of employees of the defendants and in part of people from other segments of the oil industry. The Committee is not static; it is changing. The Committee one day consists of certain people, and another day of others. Reading the affidavits as to how these young men who have studied engineering have progressed from trainee capacity to chief petroleum engineer, you see why the Committee is a changing body. Time goes on.

I begin to realize how old I am when I read about these fellows graduating in engineering in 1937 and 1939 and now being chief of this unit or chief of that unit. I think back on my days of schooling which precede that by a whole decade.

So the Committee of necessity has to be a committee composed of different people at different times, and the present group on the Committee, with few exceptions, are not the people who were on the Committee at earlier times. An injunction against this Committee, in my mind, to a very large extent would be an idle act. The very nature of the changing complexion of the Committee and the fact that if there are illegal activities—I might say a big if—if there are illegal activities, it is the activities of the defendants operating through their agents and employees that make this possible.

Therefore, a decree against the defendants, if that is the way the case ever turns out, accomplishes far more than a decree against an illusory committee that could lie down and die tonight and tomorrow a new committee with a new name composed of different personnel could or could not do all that the old committee could do.

I don't think it is going to further the trial of this case to have the committee around. I don't think it is going to assist the defendants or the Government. The Government still has a right to show that past activities of the Committee, if they can produce that proof, were illegal. A judgment of dismissal as to the Committee will not affect the scope of the Government's proof. It will merely remove from our presence a very agreeable and, according to his own statement, underpaid counsel —in which respect he differs from all other counsel in the case, from my understanding of the situation. And if the Government makes out this case against the defendants at a trial and the Committee was still in the case, I would think that my decree would be fashioned against the defendants and not against the Committee in which some of the defendants have participated.

Furthermore, the Government concedes that the Committee has a usefulness. The Government concedes that it doesn't want the Committee dismembered. That doesn't bathe the Committee in a complete shower of righteousness, but it shows that this Committee stands in a different situation than the seven major defendants do in this case. And I would think, therefore, if the case were tried and the Government made out its case and I found there had been a conspiracy and that the Committee, namely, as it existed in those days, had participated in the unlawful activities on the basis of sitting here and hearing the testimony of 70 or 90 of these people who might tell what the Committee had done since May, 1950, I do not have much doubt in my mind that my decree wouldn't run against the Committee.

Therefore, I am going to grant the motion for summary judgment on the ground of mootness as to the Committee.

I am not satisfied with these findings that are prepared. I want new findings drawn other than as proposed by the defendant. In particular I notice, for instance, there is a Finding 23: "There is no conspiracy now existing . . ."

Mr. Morton: I think, your Honor, that Mr. Haddock and I can agree on a form of order that will cover the situation.

The Court: And Finding 25: "There is no monopoly . . ." speaking of the present.

I would ask, therefore, that the counsel confer on the preparation of a set of findings.

I was going to take this under submission, but I don't know that I would have come to any other conclusion. I have read your briefs as they came in. I read your brief on intent in criminal conspiracies, Mr. Haddock. I read Mr. Lasky's when it came in. I have been looking these over from time to time. I read a lot of this material when it first came in. Last night I thumbed through a number of the affidavits and I found your tabulation of what the affidavits consist.

I am just as certain in denying the motion on the second ground as I am in granting it on the first ground. If there are issues of fact, they could not be disposed of on this motion.

Nothing I have said here indicates that I think the defendants are guiltless or guilty of the charges against them—it has nothing to do with this part of the case, and as I see it, unless somebody convinces me to the contrary, evidence of activities as to the Conservation Committee may be shown in evidence notwithstanding the fact that the Conservation Committee is not here present. If anybody disputes that, they had better get busy writing a brief, because I don't think dismissal of the Conservation Committee affects the rest of the case.

[¶ 69,241] United States v. Beatrice Foods Company, Roberts Dairy Company, and Alamito Dairy Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska. Criminal No. 0351. Dated December 11, 1958.

Case No. 1411 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictment—Defendants' Pleas of Nolo Contendere.—In a criminal action against three dairies, the court ruled that it should not have previously accepted pleas of nolo contendere tendered by two of the dairies, in view of the allegations and information set forth in a Government memorandum with respect to the imposition of sentences and in showings on the behalf of the two dairies, and particularly in view of the fact that the third defendant tendered a plea of not guilty which was accepted by the court. It is within the sound discretion of the court to accept such pleas. One of the reasons why the dairies tendered pleas of nolo contendere was the recognition that a trial would be time consuming and expensive; however, under the circumstances justice would not be served by the acceptance of the pleas, which for the purpose of imposition of sentence would have to be treated as pleas of guilty.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.860.

For the plaintiff: James Mann, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Edwin Cassem and Robert K. Adams, Omaha, Neb., for Roberts Dairy Co.; and Alfred C. Munger, Omaha, Neb., for Alamito Dairy Co.

Before Honorable Richard E. Robinson, Chief Judge, at Omaha, Nebraska, on December 11, 1958 [In full text].

Mr. Mann: May it please the Court, this matter is before the Court on the matter of sentence of the Roberts Dairy and Alamito Dairy, as you will recall, on a plea of nolo contendere on September 25th. They are both represented here. Both the dairies are represented by counsel. Would you care to have them make their appearances known in the record?

By the Court: Yes, I think for the purpose of the record that should be done.

Mr. Munger: Alfred C. Munger, 1110 First National Bank Building, for Alamito Dairy.

Mr. Cassem: Edwin Cassem, 830 City National Bank Building, and Robert K. Adams, of the same address, for Roberts Dairy Company.

[Rejection of Pleas]

By the Court: I think before proceeding further in this matter, the Court should make an announcement.

Since the pleas of nolo contendere were entered by the Defendant Alamito Dairy Company and Roberts Dairy Company, the Court has been furnished, through the office of the Probation Officer, with so-called factual memoranda of the Government with respect to the imposition of sentences on the Defendants, and likewise with showings on behalf of Roberts Dairy Company and Alamito Dairy Company. In view of the allegations and information set forth in the respective showings, and particularly in view of the fact that there is a third Defendant, Beatrice Foods, which has tendered a plea of not guilty, which was accepted by the Court, the Court has concluded it probably should not have accepted the pleas of nolo contendere which were tendered on behalf of the Defendants Roberts Dairy Company and Alamito Dairy Company. The Court appreciates that it is merely within the sound discretion of the Court to accept such pleas, but for the purpose of imposition of sentence those pleas are tantamount to pleas of guilty. Now then, if the information as set forth by the Government is correct and true, that is one thing. If the information as set forth in the respective showings of the Defendants Roberts Dairy Company and Alamito Dairy Company is true, then an indictment should never have been returned in this case. In other words, the two showings just can't stand together. One must be true and one must be untrue.

The Court recognizes that both of the Defendants are responsible business firms in this community and I feel, under the circumstances, that if neither one is guilty of the offenses charged then they should not be tarnished with the stigma of having the Court find them guilty.

So, at this time on the Court's own motion, I am setting aside the pleas of nolo contendere entered by the Defendant Roberts Dairy Company and the Defendant Alamito Dairy Company and shall enter a plea of not guilty as to each of said Defendants, giving the Defendants the right within ten days, if they so desire, to tender such other plea as they may want to make.

Mr. Mann: I would like to say for the Government that we concur 100% with Your Honor's ruling. We think that that would be a very proper thing to do. Since we are going to have to try the case against Beatrice Foods, we will try the case against all of them.

By the Court: I appreciate that at least one of the announced reasons why the respective Defendants tendered their pleas was because of the recognition that a trial would be a long trial and time consuming, and I don't doubt expensive to both Defendants, but under the circumstances I don't think that justice would be served by the Court taking the pleas of nolo contendere which for the purpose of imposition of sentence would have to be treated as pleas of guilty.

Mr. Mann: I think the Government can assure the Court this will not be a long trial. I think it is one we can be very happy to expedite, at least for the Government to put its evidence in, so that the Defendants should be assured of that fact. If they wish to stand trial, the Government will do everything possible to expedite matters, and we can almost assure them it will not be a long drawn-out trial at all, as far as the Government's evidence is concerned, and we are very happy with the ruling the Court has made, and we do hope the Defendants do stand trial and do give us an opportunity to prove the charges.

By the Court: Does Counsel for the respective Defendants have anything to say at this time?

Mr. Cassem: I wish to say, Your Honor, the sole reason for the Defendant Roberts Dairy Company entering a plea of nolo contendere was the information and advice of Counsel that an Anti-Trust Case of this kind would inevitably last a very considerable period of time, during which time employees of the Company at all levels will be taken from attendance upon their usual duties and the business of the Company greatly disrupted. The experience in that connection which the Company had during the several sessions of the Grand Jury was so bad from the standpoint of disruption of its business that we felt a trial of the case simply could not be justified from that standpoint, and for that reason, although we asserted that we are not guilty and believe that a conviction could not be obtained, we did enter a plea of nolo contendere and entered it solely for that reason.

Mr. Munger: We concur in the same reasoning as Counsel for Roberts.

I also have a question for the Attorney for the Department of Justice, if the Court approves.

Would it be proper for a motion for a bill of particulars to be filed at this time in view of the change of the situation?

By the Court: The Court will certainly grant you that right to file a motion if you so desire.

Mr. Munger: We should like to file a motion in view of this change in the situation.

By the Court: Very well. It will be so ordered. You may prepare and file your motion.

Mr. Mann: We have no objection, Your Honor, principally because the Defendant Beatrice has a motion pending before this Court for a bill of particulars, so we will, after their motions are filed, set down a date for hearing on all of them at the convenience of the Court.

[¶ 69,242] In the Matter of the Application to Enforce an Administrative Subpoena Duces Tecum of the Federal Trade Commission v. Waltham Watch Company.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Investigation—Access to Documentary Evidence—Validity of Subpoena Duces Tecum Returnable Before Investigator.—A Federal Trade Commission subpoena directing a corporation to produce books, papers, and documents was not invalid where it was made returnable before a representative of the Commission investigating alleged violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act by the corporation and not before an independent hearing examiner as defined by the Administrative Procedure Act. The Administrative Procedure Act deals only with adjudicative and rule-making proceedings before an administrative agency. While imposing strict requirements for independence on the hearing examiner in the case of an adjudicative proceeding, the Act recognizes the different nature of the investigative function. The investigation being conducted was not in any sense an adjudicative or adversary proceeding as defined by the Administrative Procedure Act or as contemplated in the Federal Trade Commission Act which requires the taking of testimony by an independent hearing examiner. Also, there is no limitation in Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act on the use of an examiner to conduct an investigation, nor need an examiner be appointed as "an independent hearing examiner" in order to do so. The action taken by the Commission in making the subpoena returnable before the investigating examiner was in compliance with the Commission's rules.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.55.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Investigation—Access to Documentary Evidence—Validity of Subpoena Duces Tecum—Claimed Use of Investigatory Subpoena To Obtain Evidence for Pending Adjudicative Proceeding.—A Federal Trade Commission subpoena directing a corporation to produce books, papers, and documents before a representative of the Commission investigating alleged violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act by the corporation was not being used improperly to obtain additional evidence to support an adjudicative proceeding which was pending against the corporation. A Commission hearing examiner had been appointed to take testimony and receive evidence in the adjudicative proceeding which was pending at the time the subpoena was served. Even assuming that the investigation did embrace the same subject matter as the pending adjudicative proceeding, there is nothing in the Federal Trade Commission Act which limits or circumscribes the investigatory functions of the Commission during the course of an adjudicative proceeding. Nor is there anything in the Administrative Procedure Act which so provides.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8701, 8741.55.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Investigation—Access to Documentary Evidence—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Commission Denial of Motion To Quash Subpoena Without Hearing.—The Federal Trade Commission's denial of a corporation's motion to quash an investigatory subpoena duces tecum without affording the corporation a hearing did not constitute a denial of due process. There is no requirement in the Administrative Procedure Act or the Federal Trade Commission Act that a hearing must be granted on a motion to quash an investigatory subpoena issued by an administrative agency. Nor do the rules of the Commission require a hearing in such cases. There can be no denial of constitutional due process by the failure of the Commission to grant a hearing on the motion to quash. The subpoena is enforcible only on application to the court, and the respondent is entitled to a full hearing there.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.55.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Order Denying Motion To Quash Subpoena—Order Signed by Secretary of Commission.—The contention that an order denying a motion to quash an investigatory subpoena was not valid because it was signed by the Secretary of the Commission rather than by the Commission itself was rejected. The order denying the motion was issued by the Commission and signed by its secretary in strict conformity with Section 5 of the Commission's rules, which provides that "all orders of the Commission are signed by the secretary."

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.91.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Investigation—Access to Documentary Evidence—Validity of Subpoena Duces Tecum—Relevancy of Material Sought—Trade Secrets.—A Federal Trade Commission subpoena directing a corporation to produce certain books, papers, and documents before a representative of the Commission investigating alleged violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act by the corporation was enforced, where it was contended that the material sought was irrelevant and immaterial to the investigation and concerned matters beyond the scope of the Commission's regulatory power. The material sought was plainly relevant to the subject matter of the investigation. The subpoena was authorized by Congress, was issued for a purpose which Congress could authorize, and the material sought was relevant to the authorized inquiry. The documents were adequately specified, and there was nothing to indicate that the burden of producing them was in any way unreasonable. The fact that some of the material sought dealt with matters which may contain so-called trade secrets is no reason for refusing their production.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.55, 8741.70.

For the petitioner: Jno. W. Carter, Jr., Acting Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission; Carleton A. Harkrader, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission; and Paul W. Williams, United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

For the respondent: B. Paul Noble, Washington, D. C., and Irving Stolz, New York, N. Y.

Opinion

[FTC Subpoena]

BRYAN, District Judge: [In full text]: This is an application by the Federal Trade Commission, pursuant to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 49, to enforce an administrative subpoena duces tecum issued by the Commission and served upon the respondent.

The subpoena, issued on April 24, 1958 and served on April 28, required the respondent Waltham to appear before "Miss Charlotte Maskey, Attorney and Examiner for the Federal Trade Commission at Room 511C, United States Court House, Foley Square, in the City of New York, New York, on the 8th day of May, 1958 * * * to testify in connection with the F. T. C.'s investigation (No. 5823282) to determine whether or not Waltham Watch Company has been using false and misleading advertising or has engaged in other deceptive acts or practices violative of Section 5 of the F. T. C. Act (15 U. S. C. A. 45) in connection with the sale or offering for sale of watches". It was issued after a request by letter for the data sought had proved ineffective.

[Material Sought]

The subpoena contained seven specifications of books, papers and documents to be produced which may be roughly classified as follows:

(1) Advertising and sales promotional material; (2) price lists, tags, tickets, labels, bulletins and directives; (3) specimen copies of guarantees on watches and correspondence and records relating to Waltham's performance of such guarantees; (4) diagrams, reports and other records describing the functioning, performance and construction of watches represented by Waltham as "shockproof", "shock-protected", "waterproof" or "water-protected"; (5) diagrams and specifications as to the composition of watch cases and records of tests disclosing such composition; (6) invoices and other records showing sales of watches and net sales prices to customers; and (7) contracts and agreements between Waltham and Hallmark, Inc.

All specifications except 6 cover the period July 1, 1957 through March 31, 1958. Specification 6 covers the period December 1, 1957 through January 31, 1958.

[Compliance Refused]

On May 5, 1958 Waltham filed with the Commission a motion to quash the subpoena. The Commission denied the motion on May 7, 1958 without hearing or argument.

On May 8, 1958 Waltham appeared by attorney before Examiner Maskey and stated on the record that it refused to comply with the subpoena upon the same grounds on which it now resists its enforcement. As a result the Commission petitioned this court for an order of enforcement.

[FTC Powers]

The Federal Trade Commission Act confers broad powers on the Commission to prevent unfair and deceptive acts and practices in Interstate Commerce which are made unlawful. (Section 5; 15 U. S. C. § 45(a).) In the exercise of its powers the Commission "may, by one or more of its members, or by such examiners as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States". (Section 3; 15 U. S. C. § 43.) It has power "to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce * * *". (Section 6; 15 U. S. C. § 46.)

The Commission is given the authority to require, by compulsory process, the attendance and testimony of witnesses relating to any matter under investigation. The Commission, or its agents, have the "right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against" and may "require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation". (Section 9; 15 U. S. C. § 49.)

In the event of disobedience to a subpoena the Commission is authorized to apply to the United States Courts for its enforcement (Section 9; 15 U. S. C. § 49) as it has done here.

[FTC Contentions]

The Commission asserts that the subpoena duces tecum directed to Waltham was fully authorized by the Act, was properly issued in pursuance of an investigation which it was lawfully empowered to conduct, calls for production of adequately specified documents relevant to such inquiry, and that therefore it should be enforced by the court. See Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U. S. 186; United States v. Morton Salt Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,561], 338 U. S. 632; Federal Trade Commission v. Crafts [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,830], 355 U. S. 9, reversing Crafts v. Federal Trade Commission, 9 Cir. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,641], 244 F. 2d 882; Federal Trade Commission v. Scientific Living, Inc., D. C. M. D. Penn. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,673], 150 F. Supp. 495, aff'd 3 Cir., 254 F. 2d 598, cert. den. 355 U. S. 940; Federal Trade Commission v. Hallmark, Inc., D. C. N. D. Ill., No. 58-C-855, Sept. 11, 1958 [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,148].

[Person Conducting Investigation]

Waltham, on the other hand, urges that the subpoena is invalid and should not be enforced for four separate reasons each of which bears some discussion.

1. Waltham contends that the subpoena served upon it is invalid because it was made returnable before the representative of the Commission investigating the alleged violations referred to in the subpoena and not before an independent hearing examiner as defined by the Administrative Procedure Act.

This contention fails to recognize the distinction between the investigative and adjudicative functions of the Commission.

The Administrative Procedure Act deals only with adjudicative and rule-making[1] proceedings before an administrative agency. Adjudication is defined by Section 2(d) of the Act (5 U. S. C. § 1001(d)) as "agency process for the formulation of an order". " 'Order' means the whole or any part of the final disposition * * * of any agency in any matter other than rule making but including licensing".

In an adjudicative proceeding all testimony relating to the matters in issue must be taken by an independent hearing examiner who shall not be "responsible to or subject to the supervision or direction of any officer, employee, or agent engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for any agency". Administrative Procedure Act, § 5(c) (5 U. S. C. § 1004(c)). But the Administrative Procedure Act, while imposing strict requirements for independence on the hearing officer in the case of an adjudicative proceeding, itself recognizes the different nature of the investigative function.

The Federal Trade Commission has both adjudicative and investigative powers. Cf. Section 5(b) and Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, (15 U. S. C. §§ 45(b), 46). The investigation of the "business, conduct, practices and management of any corporation engaged in commerce" by the Commission is expressly authorized. Federal Trade Commission Act, § 6(a), (15 U. S. C. § 46(a)). In aid of such investigation the Commission or its agents may copy any documentary evidence of "any corporation being investigated" and may subpoena documentary evidence "relating to any matter under investigation". Federal Trade Commission Act, § 9, (15 U. S. C. § 49).

The subpoena which the Commission seeks to enforce in this proceeding was issued in the course of an investigation by the Commission as to possible violations of Section 5 by Waltham and so states on its face. The investigation is for the purpose of determining whether or not facts exist upon which an adjudicative proceeding, as defined by the Administrative Procedure Act, and contemplated by Section 5(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, should be commenced by the filing of a complaint. An investigation does not lead to the issuance of a cease and desist order, nor is it a part of any final disposition of the rights or duties of the respondents. It may well be that the investigation will disclose that there are no facts which would justify the filing of a complaint.

The investigation being conducted of Waltham is not in any sense an adjudicative or adversary proceeding as defined by the Administrative Procedure Act or as contemplated in the Federal Trade Commission Act which requires the taking of testimony by an independent hearing examiner. Such a requirement is in no way applicable to the present investigation.

The argument made by Waltham that Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, by providing that "members and examiners of the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence" requires that subpoenas must be returnable before an independent hearing examiner, has no substance. Miss Maskey, before whom the subpoena is returnable, is an examiner of the Commission as well as its representative. There is no limitation in Section 9 on the use of an examiner to conduct an investigation, nor need an examiner be appointed as "an independent hearing examiner" in order to do so. In fact, to so construe the word "examiner" would nullify the first part of Section 9 which provides that "the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall * * * have access to, for the purpose of examination, * * * any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against. * * *" Congress manifested no intention so to circumscribe the broad investigative powers which it granted to the Commission.

Moreover, the action taken by the Commission in making the subpoena returnable before the investigating examiner is in strict compliance with its Rules of Practice, Procedures and Organization which spell out in detail the procedure to be followed. (§§ 1.31-1.35.)[2]

The comprehensive opinion of Chief Judge Murphy of the Middle District of Pennsylvania in Federal Trade Commission v. Scientific Living, Inc., supra, and the numerous authorities there cited, make it abundantly clear that there is no merit to petitioner's contention. See, also, Federal Trade Commission v. Hallmark, Inc., supra. Cf. Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, supra; Durkin v. Fisher, 7 Cir., 204 F. 2d 930, cert. den. 346 U. S. 897, rehearing denied 346 U. S. 928; *Porter v. "(b) Investigational hearings may be held before the Commission, one or more of its members, or a duly designated representative, for the purpose of hearing the testimony of witnesses and receiving documents and other data relating to any subject under investigation. [Use of Investigation Process]

2. A related contention is that the subpoena served upon Waltham, purportedly issued in aid of a Commission investigation,[3] is in fact being used improperly to obtain additional evidence to support an adjudicative proceeding which is pending against it before the Commission. It is urged that such use of an investigative subpoena is in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U. S. C. § 1001 et seq., and of constitutional due process.

On October 23, 1957 an adjudicative proceeding was commenced before the Commission by the filing of a complaint which charged Waltham and certain of its officers with specific violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[4] The violations charged were that respondents had engaged in unfair and deceptive practices in the sale of watches involving representations as to the number of jewels in such watches, the genuineness of certain of the jewels and the place of manufacture of the watches.

A commission hearing examiner was appointed to take testimony and receive evidence in the proceeding which was pending at the time the subpoena was served.

The investigation being conducted "to determine whether or not Waltham Watch Company has been using false and misleading advertising or has engaged in other deceptive acts or practices violative of Section 5" does not necessarily embrace the same subject matter as the pending adjudicative proceeding.

Some of the specifications of the subpoena relate to material which does not appear to be relevant to that proceeding in any way, for example, specification 4 relating to shockproof and waterproof watches and specification 5 relating to the metal composition of watch cases. On the other hand specifications 2 relating to pricing bulletins and directives, 6 relating to sales prices and 1 relating to advertising and sales promotional material may well deal with matters some of which bear a relationship to the violations which are presently being adjudicated.

But assuming this to be so, there is nothing in the Federal Trade Commission Act which limits or circumscribes the investigatory functions of the Commission during the course of an adjudicative proceeding. Nor is there anything in the Administrative Procedure Act which so provides.

The broad powers of investigation granted to the Commission by Congress, which embrace all unfair or deceptive practices of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce, should not be held in abeyance merely because complaints charging specific and limited violations have been filed against it. Such a theory would leave the corporation free, once it had been charged with a violation, to engage in unchecked violations of the Act in other directions until the pending proceeding was finally disposed of.

In Bowles v. Bay of New York Coal & Supply Corp., 2 Cir., 152 F. 2d 330, it was argued that an administrative agency should not be permitted to issue an investigation subpoena during the course of a suit by it against the person subpoenaed. It was argued that only discovery proceedings under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure should be permitted in such cases and the investigative powers of the administrative agency with respect to matters which might be related to the suit should be suspended. The court rejected this argument and held that (p. 331):

> "* * * the various statutes granting the power of subpoena must control its limits * * *. The necessity of 'prompt and effective use of the subpoena power' in administrative investigations has been stressed, Perkins v. Endicott Johnson Corp., supra, 2 Cir., 128 F. 2d 208, 216; and we think it would be unduly hampering of the Administrator's duties to import a condition here against the broad terms of the statute * * *."

See, also, Bolich v. Rubel, 2 Cir., 67 F. 2d 894; Bowles v. Abendroth, 9 Cir., 151 F. 2d 407; Porter v. Mueller, supra.

There is no basis here for limiting the broad powers of investigation which Congress saw fit to grant to the Federal Trade Commission by importing a condition that it may not conduct such investigations as it deems necessary even though such investigations may cover ground which is already the subject matter of an adjudicative proceeding.

[4] F. T. C. Docket No. 6914.

[Denial of FTC Hearing]

3. Waltham's contention that the denial by the Commission of its motion to quash the subpoena constitutes denial of administrative due process because it was not granted a hearing or argument on its motion merits little discussion.

There is no requirement in the Administrative Procedure Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, or otherwise, that a hearing must be granted on a motion to quash an investigatory subpoena issued by an administrative agency. Nor do the rules of the Federal Trade Commission require a hearing in such cases.

Of course there can be no denial of constitutional due process by the failure of the Commission to grant a hearing on the motion to quash. The subpoena is enforcible only on application to the court and the respondent is entitled to a full hearing there. See Federal Communications Commission v. W. J. R., 337 U. S. 265; Sun Oil Company v. Federal Power Commission, 5 Cir., 256 F. 2d 233.

There is equal lack of merit in the contention that the motion was denied by the Secretary of the Commission rather than by the Commission itself. The order denying the motion to quash was issued by the Commission and signed by its secretary in strict conformity with Section 5 of the Commission's rules which provides that "all orders of the Commission are signed by the secretary".

4. Finally, Waltham contends that specifications 2, 6 and 7 of the subpoena should not be enforced because the documentary material sought is irrevelant and immaterial to the investigation being conducted and concerns matters beyond the scope of the Commission's regulatory power.

Specification 2 calls for the production of price lists, price tags, tickets and labels, and bulletins and directives relating to the practices of Waltham in pricing its watches at wholesale and retail. Specification 6 concerns invoices, purchase orders, credit memoranda and other records, relating to sales of watches and respective net sales prices. Specification 7, which relates to contracts between Waltham and Hallmark, Inc. is said by respondents to represent "the crystallization of demand expressed in paragraph 6" of the Commission's earlier request asking for shipping and billing invoices, and therefore apparently also relates to sales practices.

All of these matters seem to me to be plainly relevant to an investigation as to whether Waltham "has been using false and misleading advertising or has engaged in other deceptive acts or practices" in the sale of watches in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. They bear on such questions as whether or not fictitious prices were charged, how the watches were represented and described, what representations were made in connection with their distribution, and what information Waltham is placing in the channels of commerce which might mislead the public as to the customary selling price of its watches. Moreover, the material would aid in a determination as to whether Waltham, as it claims, sells only to wholesalers or whether distributors holding themselves out as wholesalers are actually retailers. Cf. Macher v. Federal Trade Commission, 2 Cir., 126 F. 2d 420.

This is all within the scope of the power granted to the Commission by Congress to prevent the use of "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" in interstate commerce. (Section 5, Federal Trade Commission Act.) The subpoena fully meets the tests of Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, supra, since it is authorized by Congress, is issued for a purpose which Congress may authorize, and the documents sought are relevant to the authorized inquiry.

Waltham's reliance on such cases as Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U. S. 298 and Federal Trade Commission v. Baltimore Grain Co., D. C. Md., 284 Fed. 886, is misplaced. The Commission seeks no such unlimited right of access to Waltham's papers as was sought in such cases and the subpoena is not a general warrant to roam at will through the papers, the books and the records of the respondent corporation "in the hope that something may turn up". The documents are adequately specified and there is nothing to indicate that the burden of producing them is in any way unreasonable.

Moreover, even if, as Waltham claims, some of the specifications deal with matter which may contain so-called trade secrets, that is no reason for refusing their production. Federal Trade Commission v. Tuttle, 2 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,669], 244 F. 2d 605, cert. den. 354 U. S. 925.

[Subpoena Enforced]

The petition of the Commission to enforce the subpoena will therefore be granted and an order will be entered on notice requiring the respondent Waltham to comply therewith.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Exclusive Dealing—Dealership Franchises—Manufacturer's Cancellation of Dealers' Franchises for Dealing in Competitors' Products—Existence of Restrictive Agreement—Refusal To Deal.—A complaint alleging that a manufacturer and distributor of home and automobile supplies violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by a "course of dealing" in which the manufacturer cancelled the franchises of dealers who handled competing products was dismissed. The complaint contained no allegation that the manufacturer actually leased, sold, or contracted to sell any commodities on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the dealers should not deal in the goods of the manufacturer's competitors. There is a fundamental difference between refusing to deal with a customer and prohibiting that customer, by contract, from dealing with another. The dealers could not have been under any restriction imposed by the manufacturer when they ceased to have a franchise from it. Refusals to deal and the right of customer selection on the part of a single trader have been upheld even though the refusal was prompted by the motive of securing exclusive dealers. It made no difference that a distributor of competing products joined the disenfranchised dealers in the complaint and alleged that its sales were curtailed by the manufacturer's policy against its dealers' handling of competing products.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.175, 4009.420.

Exclusive Dealing—Tying Arrangement Between Manufacturer and Dealers—Tying "Readily Salable" Items to Less Popular Items—Existence of Agreement.—A complaint alleging that a manufacturer and distributor of home and automobile supplies violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by tying the sale of its "readily salable" items to its less popular items was dismissed for failure to allege the existence of any tying agreement.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.175.

Exclusive Dealing—Effect on Competition—Determination of Unlawful Effects—Factors—Adverse Effect Upon Interstate Commerce—Substantial Lessening of Competition—Tendency to Create a Monopoly.—A complaint alleging that a manufacturer and distributor of home and automobile supplies violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by cancelling the franchises of dealers who handled the products of competing distributors was held deficient for failure to allege facts which demonstrated an adverse effect upon interstate commerce. Section 3 of the Clayton Act requires that the prohibited contract, sale, or lease have the potential effect to "substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." No facts were alleged to demonstrate such a possible effect.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4007.275, 4007.300.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Monopoly in Sale of Products Manufactured and Sold Under One's Own Brand or Trade-Mark.—A complaint which, in reality, charged a manufacturer and distributor of home and automobile supplies with monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the market for its own products was dismissed. Every manufacturer has a monopoly on its own brand name, and such a natural monopoly does not violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510, 2580.

Monopolies—Monopoly Power—"Dominance" of Home and Automobile Supply Business—Annual Business Volume—Size.—A complaint charging a manufacturer of home and automobile supplies with monopolizing or attempting to monopolize trade was dismissed since there was no allegation that the manufacturer monopolized the home and automobile supply business in any relevant market. The dealers' allegation that the manufacturer was "dominant" in that field was not sufficient, for dominance is not the equivalent of monopoly power. The manufacturer distributed its products at retail through some 350 company-owned stores and at wholesale to some 3,600 associate stores located throughout the United States. It operated seven company-owned stores, and had 91 associate stores, in South Carolina. Mere allegations of annual business volume or total number of outlets were totally insufficient. No allegations in the complaint demonstrated that the manufacturer either possessed market control or engaged in acts and practices so approaching monopoly control as to create a dangerous probability thereof.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2530.40.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Attempt to Monopolize—Cancellation of Dealers' Franchises for Dealing in Competing Products—Existence of Specific Intent to Monopolize.—A complaint in which a manufacturer of home and automobile supplies was charged, by its retail dealers and by a wholesale distributor of competing products, with engaging in a scheme or plan by which the manufacturer "intended to monopolize or attempted to monopolize certain lines of trade in interstate commerce" was held deficient under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for failure to allege any act or conduct evidencing intent to abuse, maintain, or exercise monopoly power, or to allege facts demonstrating the existence of a specific intent to monopolize. The dealers alleged that their franchises were cancelled by the manufacturer because they insisted on purchasing some items not distributed by the manufacturer. The cancellation of the franchises demonstrated no more than a permissible refusal to deal on the part of the manufacturer. Since the manufacturer possessed the legal right to terminate the franchises for reasons sufficient to itself, the exercise of that right was not a violation of the Sherman Act.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.400, 2515.40, 2610.300, 2610.720.

Order

[Treble Damage Action]

ASHTON H. WILLIAMS, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant has moved to dismiss the amended complaint on the ground that it fails to state claims upon which relief can be granted. The amended complaint seeks treble damages for alleged violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. A. 2) and Section 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. 14) as authorized by Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. 15).

THE PARTIES

The defendant Western Auto Supply Company is engaged in the business of selling tires, tubes, batteries, auto accessories, sporting goods, home appliances, etc., at retail through some 350 company-owned stores and at wholesale to some 3600 Associate Stores located throughout the United States. As of December 31, 1956, it operated seven company-owned stores and had 91 Associate Stores in South Carolina.

The plaintiffs, except McElhenney Co., Inc., were, prior to 1954, five owners and operators of their respective Associate Stores in various towns in South Carolina. Each alleges that at various dates between 1954 and 1956 his franchise from the defendant was cancelled but that he continued to operate either independently or by an affiliation with Firestone. Plaintiff McElhenney Co., Inc., from February 1954 to October 1956, had the exclusive franchise for the distribution at wholesale of Sylvania radio and television sets and parts in South Carolina.

THE ALLEGATIONS OF THE AMENDED COMPLAINT

The amended complaint alleges that the defendant did business with its Associate

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Stores, including the former dealers suing as plaintiffs herein, by means of a franchise. The Associate Store franchise is a vendor-purchaser contract by which defendant Western grants to the Associate the right to use the name "Western Auto Associate Store" in conjunction with the proprietor's name and agrees that it will sell the Associate merchandise on the same terms as all other Associate Stores. The Associate retains ownership, management and control of his store and only agrees under certain conditions to buy a stated amount of merchandise from Western for the opening stock of his store. The franchise is terminable by either party at any time on 60 days' written notice. Nothing in the franchise requires the Associate to deal exclusively with Western.

[Exclusive Dealing]

Plaintiff-retailers contend that their franchises were cancelled because they insisted upon purchasing some items of "outside" merchandise, i. e., merchandise not distributed by defendant. Plaintiff McElhenney, the former Sylvania distributor, asserts that defendant's alleged policy against its Associate Stores handling "outside" merchandise curtailed its sales of Sylvania products to Western Auto Associate Stores in South Carolina, all to its loss and damage.

[Antitrust Violations Alleged]

Plaintiffs' contentions are that the above alleged facts manifest an unlawful exclusive dealing arrangement in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act and an unlawful attempt to monopolize or monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Defendant, on the other hand, contends that the above allegations manifest no more than the exercise of the defendant's legal right to terminate the franchises of dealers who it deems do not adequately represent it. Judgment is sought by plaintiffs in the amount of $2,241,000 and costs and a reasonable attorney's fee.

Discussion

[Necessary Averments]

It is fundamental that the purpose for the enactment of the federal antitrust laws, including the Sherman and Clayton Acts, was to protect the public interest from the evils of monopolies and unreasonable restraints of trade in interstate commerce. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 236 U. S. 165 (1915). Accordingly, to recover in a private antitrust suit the plaintiff must allege facts from which it can be determined that there has been a violation of the antitrust laws together with damage to the plaintiff as a consequence of such violation. Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,062]; 72 F. 2d 885 (4th Cir. 1934); Schwing Motor Company v. Hudson Sales Corporation [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899 (D. C. Md. 1956), affirmed 239 F. 2d 176 (4th Cir. 1956) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,564]; Nelligan v. Ford Motor Company [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,086], 161 F. Supp. 738 (D. C. S. C. 1958). See also Shotkin v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,341], 171 F. 2d 236 (10th Cir. 1948); Feddersen Motors v. Ward [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519 (10th Cir. 1950); Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation, 26 F. Supp. 824 (D. C. Md. 1937); Neumann v. Bastian-Blessing Co. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,531], 70 F. Supp. 447 (N. D. Ill. 1947).

If the amended complaint herein does not allege facts from which it can be ascertained that the defendant has violated the antitrust laws with injury to the plaintiffs, defendant's motion to dismiss must be sustained.

Section 3 of the Clayton Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 14, provides as follows:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, ware, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract for sale on such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

[No "Exclusive Dealing" Agreement]

The amended complaint contains no allegations that the defendant actually leased, sold or contracted to sell any goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities on the condition, agreement or understanding that the plaintiffs or anyone else should not use or deal in the goods of a competitor of the defendant.

["Course of Dealing"]

The plaintiffs contend that the defendant terminated the franchises of the retailer-plaintiffs on account of their handling of products not approved by the defendant and that this "course of dealing" constitutes a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. The defendant contends that nothing more is involved than a permissible refusal to deal by a single trader acting unilaterally and not in concert with any competitor or anyone else, pursuant to the right reserved to it in its franchise agreements and in the exercise of its sound business judgment.

[Cases Discussed]

In Nelson Radio and Supply Co. v. Motorola, Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386], 200 F. 2d 911 (5th Cir. 1952), cert. den. 345 U. S. 925 (1953), a closely parallel situation was presented. There the plaintiff, a wholesaler of communications equipment, alleged that it had distributed defendant's products for several years prior to February 10, 1949. The contract under which the plaintiff operated contained a specific termination date but it also provided that it continued after that date subject to termination by written notice of either party. Prior to January 2, 1948, the defendant submitted to the plaintiff an agreement for the year 1948 and at the same time informed the plaintiff that it could not sell communications equipment manufactured by defendant's competitors. The plaintiff alleged that it signed the 1948 contract under coercion and further that during the period November 1947—February 10, 1949, the defendant notified it that it was not permitted to sell competing products. In November and December 1948 the parties sought to renew the 1948 agreement but the plaintiff insisted on the right to sell products manufactured by others than the defendant. The defendant resisted and the plaintiff's franchise was cancelled effective February 10, 1949. Holding these allegations to be insufficient to state a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act and affirming the dismissal of the complaint, the court said (pp. 915-16):

> "Section 3 of the Clayton Act, by its express terms, covers only leases, sales or contracts actually made on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor of the lessor or seller. There is nothing whatever in the Act to suggest that it covers a situation where the manufacturer refuses to make a sale or enter into a contract, and it has been stated time and again that a manufacturer has the unquestioned right to refuse to deal with anyone for reasons sufficient to himself. [citations] For that matter, a review of all of the cases decided by the Supreme Court involving Section 3 of the Clayton Act, reveals that in each of them there was an agreement and not a mere refusal to deal. There is a real difference between the act of refusing to deal and the execution of a contract which prevents a person from dealing with another. The plaintiff has not been injured as the result of a contract, either express or implied, which sought to prevent him from dealing in the goods of any competitor of the defendant.
> "The judgment of the District Court dismissing the amended complaint was right and it is hereby affirmed."

The Motorola case was followed by Leo J. Meyberg v. Eureka Williams Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,834], 215 F. 2d 100 (9th Cir. 1954), cert. den. 348 U. S. 875 (1954). This was also an action under Section 3 of the Clayton Act charging that the defendant refused to continue business relations with the plaintiff because the latter insisted upon handling competing products. According to the allegations of the amended complaint in that case, the plaintiff was engaged in the wholesale distribution of electric vacuum cleaners, including the defendant's Eureka brand. In 1952 the defendant notified the plaintiff that unless the plaintiff ceased handling a competing line of cleaners, the Hoover brand, the defendant would cancel all business relations with the plaintiff, stating that "Hoover factory rebuilt cleaners at their special sale prices and Eurekas just can't live together in the same house any longer * * *." The District Court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim and the Court of Appeals affirmed, stating (p. 100):

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"The complaint herein alleges a violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 14, by reason of the refusal of appellee to continue business relations with appellant unless appellant would agree to deal exclusively in the product of appellee. That section of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful to enter into any lease, sale, or contract conditioned upon the lessee or purchaser not dealing in the goods of a competitor, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract may be to substantially lessen competition or create monopoly. The contract (of 1944) previously existing between the parties was, by its terms, terminable at will, and contained no provision violative of § 3 of the Clayton Act. In July, 1952, appellee terminated the contract by telegram for the reason heretofore stated, because appellant was continuing to deal in the product of a competitor of appellee.

"Prior to July, 1952, the contract between the parties did not forbid appellant to deal in products of a competitor of appellee. After July, 1952, there was no contract, lease or sale between the parties at all. It is manifest that there could be no violation of said § 3 by entering into an illegal lease, sale or contract.

"The judgment of the district court dismissing this case must therefore be, and it hereby is, affirmed."

[Specific Prohibitions]

The Court of Appeals for this Circuit has recently pointed out that the proscriptions of Section 3 are specific and prohibit only leases, sales or contracts for sales based on the condition that purchaser or lessee not deal in the goods of the competitor. Allied Equipment Co. v. Weber Engineered Products [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,502], 237 F. 2d 879 (4th Cir. 1956). The court there state (p. 883):

"The final question involves Allied's claim for treble damages arising out of Weber's alleged breach of the antitrust laws. It is Allied's contention that Weber, by attempting to use the threat of cancellation to force Allied to enter into an illegal exclusive-dealing contract, engaged in unfair competition which was the proximate cause of pecuniary damage to Allied. Under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, upon which this claim is based, it is unlawful to enter into any lease, sale or contract which is conditioned upon the lessee's or purchaser's not dealing in the goods of a competitor, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract may be substantially to lessen competition or to create a monopoly. There can be no violation of the Act unless there is a contract, sale or lease.

"Allied faces a dilemma on the point. If there was no contract denying it the right to handle products competitive to Weber, there was no violation of the antitrust laws. If there was such a contract, as we have already pointed out the breach was by Allied and so no damages accrued to it."

["Single Trader"]

Refusals to deal and the right of customer selection on the part of a single trader have been upheld by the courts even though the refusal was prompted by the motive of securing exclusive dealers. Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,343], 59 F. Supp. 429 (M. D. Pa. 1945), affirmed 155 F. 2d 99 (3rd Cir. 1946) [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,459], Camfield Mfg. Co. v. McGraw Elec. Co. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,570], 70 F. Supp. 477 (D. C. Del. 1947); Dublin Distributors v. Edward and John Burke, Ltd. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,398], 109 F. Supp. 125 (S. D. N. Y. 1952). See also United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300 (1919); Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594 (1953); Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat Co., 227 Fed. 46 (2nd Cir. 1915). Nor can it make any difference that complaint is also made by a distributor of competing products as well as by disenfranchised dealers. Camfield Mfg. Co. v. McGraw Electric Co., supra.

[Refusal to Deal Not Prohibited]

The antitrust laws do not prohibit a manufacturer or distributor from selecting dealers who will devote their time and energies to selling the former's products and a manufacturer or distributor is not compelled to retain dealers having divided loyalties adverse to the interests of the said manufacturer or distributor. Under these circumstances Western was within its legal rights in discontinuing business relations with the plaintiff-retailers herein and announcing in advance the terms upon which it would continue to do business with them.

The basic fallacy inherent in plaintiff's contention is that so long as they handled "outside" merchandise while keeping a franchise from the defendant they were permitted to handle such merchandise. When they ceased to have a franchise from the defendant it is quite apparent they could have been under no restriction imposed by the defendant. There is a fundamental difference between refusing to deal with a customer or potential customer and prohibiting that customer by contract from dealing with another. As long as the customer has a choice between dealing with his immediate supplier and dealing with others he may act of his own free will. If his immediate supplier determines that for reasons known only to himself, whether they be because of inadequate representation, unsatisfactory relationships, or others, he may terminate the relationship, then the dealer is free to deal with all other suppliers. It follows that at no point has there been a contract or agreement which prohibits the purchaser from dealing in the goods of another.

In the present case the amended complaint makes it clear that the defendant imposed no legal obligation on plaintiff-retailers to refrain from handling "outside" merchandise. It seems that the defendant objected to its Associate dealers handling a few articles of competitive merchandise which were also offered to them by defendant. However, defendant had afforded the plaintiff-retailers the benefit of its name and national advertising. It is not strange that defendant was unwilling to share its benefits with manufacturers and wholesalers of brands not handled by the defendant. Consequently, there is no inference to be drawn from defendant's urging upon the plaintiff-retailers that they restrict their operations to whatever extent possible to handling the goods and merchandise of defendant.

The cases relied upon by plaintiffs, United States v. Richfield Oil Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,878], 99 F. Supp. 280 (S. D. Cal. 1951), aff'd per curiam, 343 U. S. 922 (1952) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,262], and Carter Carburetor Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,306], 112 F. 2d 722 (8th Cir. 1940), are clearly distinguishable. Richfield, supra, was a companion case to United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,269], 78 F. Supp. 850 (S. D. Cal. 1948), aff'd 337 U. S. 293 (1949) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], and involved essentially the same question of the validity of requirements contracts under both Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act. The only type of agreement in the Richfield case not previously adjudicated in the Standard Stations case involved L-O Stations and as to these Richfield expressly admitted that it had agreements with the station operators requiring them to deal exclusively in Richfield products, its defense to this arrangement being that the operators were agent or employees of Richfield and consequently the arrangement was not within the purview of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. This defense was not sustained and the agreements were held illegal.

The Carter Carburetor case, supra, dealt with a situation wherein the defendant attempted the total destruction of a specific competitor by the use of preferential discounts which made the handling of the defendant's products unprofitable to non-exclusive dealers. This was a patent violation of Section 3 because discounts and rebates are specifically prohibited by the statute.

[Tying Agreements]

Plaintiffs further suggest that the amended complaint may be sustained under Section 3 of the Clayton Act with reference to the doctrine of the "tying" cases, taking the position that the defendant tied the sale of its allegedly "readily salable" items such as its tires and batteries, to the sale of its allegedly less popular items such as its appliances. Plaintiffs, however, have singularly failed to allege the existence of any tying agreement and the essentials of a tying contract are not present herein. See Judson L. Thomson Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,399], 150 F. 2d 952 (1st Cir. 1945); International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392 (1947); Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594 (1953); Nelligan v. Ford Motor Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,086], 161 F. Supp. 738 (W. D. S. C. 1958).

[Interstate Commerce]

The amended complaint is further deficient in that plaintiffs have not demonstrated any adverse effect upon interstate commerce. Section 3 of the Clayton Act requires that the prohibited contract, sale or lease have the potential effect to "substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly * * *." No facts are alleged to demonstrate such a possible effect.

[Private Controversy]

The gist of plaintiffs' grievances is merely that the defendant, for reasons sufficient to itself, exercised its undoubted and reserved right to terminate the franchises of the plaintiff-retailers. This is purely a private controversy and one not cognizable under Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

[No Violation Alleged]

The amended complaint does not allege a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides as follows:

> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

[Relevant Market]

Paragraph 3 of the second count of plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges that the defendant engaged in a "scheme and plan by which defendant intended to monopolize or attempt[ed] to monopolize certain lines of trade in interstate commerce." Paragraph 19 of the amended complaint defines the market involved as "the sale and distribution of [defendant's] various products manufactured by it * * *." Defendant in reality is charged with monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the market for its own products. But every manufacturer has a monopoly on its own brand name and such natural monopoly does not violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The principle is well stated by Judge Chesnut in Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corp., 26 F. Supp. 824 (D. C. Md. 1937), where he said (p. 828):

> "* * * Every manufacturer has naturally a complete monopoly of his particular product especially when sold under his private brands, and no private controversy with a distributor could legally tend to increase that type of a natural monopoly. The Sherman Act is, therefore, clearly not really involved."

The Supreme Court had recent occasion to pass upon the same question in United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377 (1956), where duPont produced approximately 75% of all cellophane manufactured in the United States. This was held not to violate the antitrust laws because cellophane competed with other flexible wrapping materials and duPont did not possess market control over the entire market involved. The court said (p. 393):

> "* * * Thus one can theorize that we have monopolistic competition in every non-standardized commodity with each manufacturer having power over the price and production of his own product. However, this power that, let us say, automobile or soft drink manufacturers have over their trademarked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in terms of the competitive market for the product."

Accord: Packard Motor Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,682], 243 F. 2d 418, 420 (D. C. Cir. 1957); Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, 902 (D. C. Md. 1956), aff'd 239 F. 2d 176 (4th Cir. 1956) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,564].

[Monopoly Power]

There is no allegation in the amended complaint that the defendant monopolizes the home and auto supply business in any relevant market. The most that can be said is that plaintiffs allege that the defendant is "dominant" in that field. This is not sufficient, for dominance is not the equivalent of monopoly power. United States v. Aluminum Company of America [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,646], 91 F. Supp. 333, 346 (S. D. N. Y. 1950); United States v. duPont de Nemours [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,633], 118 F. Supp. 41, 207 (D. C. Del. 1953).

No allegations in the amended complaint herein demonstrate that the defendant either possessed market control or engaged in acts and practices so approaching monopoly control as to create a dangerous probability thereof. Hence there is no factual predicate for the application of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Mere allegations of annual business volume or total number of outlets are totally insufficient. Mackey v. Sears Roebuck & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,519], 237 F. 2d 869, 873 (7th Cir. 1956). See also United States v. Columbia Steel Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,260], 334 U. S. 495, 533 (1948).

[Intent to Monopolize]

Plaintiffs' claim under the Sherman Act is further deficient in failing to allege any act or conduct evidencing intent to abuse, maintain or exercise monopoly power or facts demonstrating the existence of a specific intent to monopolize as is required to sustain the offenses charged. United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100 (1948); American Tob. Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781 (1946); Swift and Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375 (1905). The acts and conduct alleged as shown in the discussion of plaintiffs' claim under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, supra, demonstrate no more than a permissible refusal to deal on the part of the defendant. Since the defendant possessed the legal right to terminate the franchises of its dealers for reasons sufficient to itself, the exercise of this right is not a violation of the Sherman Act or Clayton Act. See Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co., supra; Dublin Distributors v. Edward and John Burke, Ltd., supra. See also ABC Distributing Co. v. Distillers Distributing Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,844], 316 P. 2d 71 (Cal. App. 1957).

[No Violation Alleged]

The amended complaint does not allege a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

CONCLUSION

[Complaint Dismissed]

It is concluded that the amended complaint does not allege any violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act or Section 2 of the Sherman Act. It does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted under the antitrust laws. The motion to dismiss the amended complaint is hereby granted.

Sherman Antitrust Act and Interstate Commerce Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Applicability of Sherman Act to Common Carriers—Regulated Industries—Jurisdiction of District Court and Interstate Commerce Commission.—In a motor carrier's treble damage action charging railroads with conspiring to destroy the motor carrier's business, a Federal district court ruled that it was not required to refer to the Interstate Commerce Commission the issue of whether rate reductions by the railroads were immune from the operation of the antitrust laws under Section 5a of the Interstate Commerce Act. It is the governing rule that the issue of the intent and effect of a rate reduction claimed to have been taken pursuant to procedures set forth in agreements approved by the Commission under that section of the Act must, in a case where such issue is the sole or dominant issue, be referred to the Commission prior to a court determination of whether such rate reduction violates the antitrust laws. The rate reduction was not, however, the sole or dominant issue of the instant case, but was only one of several overt acts alleged. Referral of that issue to the Commission would have resulted in undue delay and would have been a waste of time and effort. No degree of immunity under the Interstate Commerce Act could remove the rate reduction from the prohibitions of the Sherman Act if it should be proved that the rate reduction, as one of several overt acts, was made for the purpose of excluding the motor carrier as a competitor of the railroads. Since a lawful act may be alleged as forming a part of a conspiracy for an unlawful purpose, the rate reduction could still be alleged as one of the means used to effect a conspiracy, regardless of the Commission's decision. Referral of the rate reduction issue to the Commission was also denied as to certain railroads which contended that the rate reduction issue was clearly the dominant issue as to them because they were neither the prime movers nor the principal beneficiaries of the other aspects of the alleged conspiracy. However, a lesser role in a conspiracy may bring about liability equal to that of the prime movers. There was sufficient basis in those railroads' own statements to connect them, to some degree, with aspects of the alleged conspiracy other than the rate reduction issue.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2039.70; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9007.50, 9007.60.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Elements and Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Degree of Participation—Liability of Member for Acts of All Conspirators.—In a motor carrier's treble damage action charging railroads with conspiring to destroy the motor carrier's business, certain of the railroads contended that they were neither prime movers nor principal beneficiaries of certain aspects of the alleged conspiracy. Despite the conflicting assertions as to how much or how little those railroads might have been involved in the issues raised by the complaint, there was sufficient basis in those railroads' own statements to connect them, in some degree, with the activities charged. Even if the evidence should show that they took only a small part in the alleged conspiracy, if they did so with knowledge of the conspiracy and consented to take part in it, then they assumed equal responsibility for the acts of all the conspirators. Even a lesser role may bring about liability equal to that of the prime movers. When one enters a continuing conspiracy after its inception, one becomes liable for the acts of all the conspirators since the conspiracy is, in effect, renewed each day of its existence.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.410.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Trade Associations—Association Membership as a Means of Trade Restraint—"Mute Membership" in Association Charged With Unlawful Conspiracy.—In a motor carrier's treble damage action charging railroads with conspiring to destroy the motor carrier's business, certain of the railroads contended that their only connection with certain aspects of the alleged conspiracy was "mute membership" in various railroad associations. Mute membership in an association charged with an unlawful criminal conspiracy will not impose liability upon a member. Some degree of knowledge and consent to the conspiracy, or some kind of knowing assistance given in furtherance of it, is usually required to impose liability. However, allegations of membership in an association charged with a conspiracy, without more, does not warrant a dismissal of a party before the evidence has been heard. If, at the end of the motor carrier's case, the evidence fails to connect any of the railroads with the charges contained in the complaint, then a motion for a directed verdict would be entertained.

[Prior Proceedings]

JOHN J. SIRICA, District Judge [In full text]: On August 8, 1958, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia remanded this case to the District Court with directions to vacate its order of May 26, 1958, and to reconsider petitioners' motion to suspend proceedings in the light of said order.

In the early part of 1958, petitioners moved to suspend all proceedings in this antitrust litigation except discovery not connected with this motion, and urged the Court to refer to the Interstate Commerce Commission one of the issues set forth in the complaint regarding rate-making, pursuant to agreements on procedure filed with the Commission, so that the Court might obtain a ruling on whether these joint rate reductions were immunized from the operation of the antitrust laws. Extensive briefs were filed and the Court heard oral arguments. After delivering an oral opinion from the bench, the Court denied the motion in an order entered May 26, 1958. Relying strongly on a recent Supreme Court decision not mentioned by the Court in its oral opinion, most of the railroad defendants then petitioned for a writ of certiorari from the Court of Appeals and asked that court to reverse this Court's order and to direct this Court to suspend proceedings and refer the above issue to the Commission. The Court of Appeals granted the writ, but declined to rule on the merits. Instead, it remanded the case to this Court with directions to vacate the order of May 26, and to reconsider petitioners' motion in the light of its order and of the Supreme Court's recent holding in Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., et al., 356 U. S. 481 (1958).

Petitioners then requested the Court of Appeals to clarify certain language in its order of August 8, 1958. The Court granted this request in an order dated December 16, 1958.

Before discussing the legal issues raised by this motion, it is necessary to summarize the background of this complex case so that all issues may be viewed in their proper context.

[Antitrust Violations Alleged]

In 1954, Riss & Company, Inc., a common carrier by motor vehicle in interstate commerce, filed this civil antitrust suit, seeking an injunction and $90,000,000 in treble damages. It alleged that beginning in or about 1950, defendants, most of whom are railroad companies, had agreed and conspired in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce to injure or destroy plaintiff's business and to acquire a monopoly of land transportation of property in the United States, and had thus violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2).

[Parties]

Plaintiff alleges it has been a common carrier of property by motor vehicle since 1927 and operates as authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission throughout twenty-two states plus the District of Columbia. It uses over 800 truck units and employs over two thousand persons. Riss also has alleged that during the years from 1950 to 1953, inclusive, it was one of the five largest interstate motor carriers in the United States in terms of gross revenues and is, and has been for several years, one of the largest motor carriers of military supplies, including ammunition and explosives, for the Armed Forces. About fifty-eight first class railroad companies, several joint railroad organizations and trade associations and one public relations firm are defendants in this action.

[Means of Effecting Conspiracy]

In order to effectuate the object of the alleged conspiracy, plaintiff charges that defendants employed various means, some of which are cited as examples in the complaint. Defendants are accused of having carried on a program of soliciting, directly as well as indirectly through "front" organizations, the elected and appointed officials of various states to take steps leading to the revocation and cancellation of the interstate operating authority held by plaintiff. In 1952, it is alleged that some of the defendants employed a public relations expert to persuade the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio to file proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission looking toward the cancellation of plaintiff's operating authority.

[Hampering Operations]

By similar methods of solicitation, according to the complaint, officials of states, cities and towns through which plaintiff operates, were urged by defendants to enact statutes, ordinances and regulations designed to unduly hamper the operations of the plaintiff and to render them economically unfeasible, such as by imposing unreasonably low weight limits on truck shipments or by banning the use by plaintiff's vehicles of certain important highway routes. Defendants are also alleged to have urged, directly and indirectly through "front" organizations, that state officials carry out a campaign of unusually strict enforcement of statutes, ordinances and regulations particularly aimed at plaintiff's vehicles such as by urging the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio to assign special investigators to follow plaintiff's trucks for hundreds of miles in order to discover possible violations.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Alleged Anti-Truck Propaganda]

Defendants also are alleged to have abused their privilege of intervention in proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission. According to plaintiff, defendants joined together to carry on an extensive and vicious campaign of anti-truck propaganda in order to persuade citizens' groups, automobile clubs and other neutral organizations to register their complaints against Riss in the course of proceedings started by Riss before the I. C. C. to obtain new operating authorizations. Other unfair competitive practices, such as circulating and publishing false and malicious statements about Riss and its officers are also charged in the complaint.

According to the complaint, defendants used railroad groups in their public relations campaign as well as "front" organizations whose connection with the railroad would not be known to the public. It is also asserted that defendants tried to infiltrate and make use of several independent public organizations such as the Illinois Parent-Teachers Association and the Congress of Parents and Teachers of Oklahoma in order to achieve their unlawful objectives. Chief reliance, however, is alleged to have been placed on such instrumentalities as "Competitive Transporation Research", "Motor Carrier Bureau" and "Committee on Motor Transportation" set up by defendants, as well as upon other temporary committees and organizations. Plaintiff claims that defendants spent large sums of money, estimated at about $1,000,000 in carrying out their unlawful activities.

[Exclusion from Explosives' Traffic]

In January, 1958, with the permission of the Court, plaintiff filed a supplement to its complaint which is embodied in paragraph 18. Plaintiff claims therein that, pursuant to the unlawful plan described above, defendant railroads submitted to traffic officials of the Department of Defense in 1955 a forty-per cent reduction in rate on the carriage of explosives totaling more than 50,000 pounds by railroads competing with Riss for the same kind of traffic. It is plaintiff's claim that this reduction was intended to accomplish one of the principal objects of the conspiracy; i. e., to exclude plaintiff from the explosives traffic and it has allegedly had that effect with respect to the principal points served by the plaintiff.

[Relief Sought]

Plaintiff further alleges that defendants conduct has caused serious damage to its business and to its reputation and has forced plaintiff to spend large sums to counteract the effects of defendants' conduct. By way of relief, plaintiff demands the following:

"1. Injunctive relief permanently enjoining and restraining AAR, Western Railways, Presidents Conference and Eastern Railroads, and each of them, from creating or continuing any committees, subcommittees, bureaus, departments, sections, divisions, subdivisions, or other association activity the principal purpose of which is to restrain, impede, impair, hamper, harass or eliminate the competition of plaintiff and of other motor carriers;

"2. Injunctive relief permanently enjoining, restraining and prohibiting defendants and each of them and their officers, directors, agents, servants and employees from agreeing, conspiring or combining to restrain the competition of plaintiff and from conspiring, combining and attempting to monopolize land transportation by the elimination of plaintiff and from performing any acts in furtherance of such unlawful objects and purpose;

"3. Judgment against defendants and each of them for $90,000,000, being the amount equal to three times the damages sustained by plaintiff;

"4. Judgment against defendants and each of them for the amount of reasonable attorneys' fees and costs of this action;

"5. Such other and further relief as to the Court may appear just and proper; and

"6. Injunctive relief enjoining the defendant railroads from accepting traffic pursuant to the illegal quotation described in paragraph 18 hereof."

I.

["Primary" Jurisdiction of ICC]

This is a summary of plaintiff's allegations. In their motion to suspend and to refer the rate reduction issue to the I. C. C., defendants seek to invoke the doctrine of "primary administrative jurisdiction". The defendants contend that a new issue was raised which involves the primary, if not the exclusive, jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission when plaintiff was allowed by the Court to supplement its complaint and to include in paragraph 18 the allegation that the uniform and concerted rate reduction, which took effect on or about November 20, 1955, was intended to exclude the plaintiff from the business of carrying such shipments of explosives; that said quotation was made for the purpose of effectuating one of the principal objects of the conspiracy, that is the elimination of the plaintiff as a competitor with the railroads for explosives traffic. As a defense to this allegation, it is also argued that the new rates are reasonable and compensatory when all the cost factors are taken into consideration and that, furthermore, the rate quotation was set up according to procedural agreements approved by the Commission and thus is immunized from the operation of the antitrust laws by virtue of 49 U. S. C. § 5b(9). It is defendants' position that this matter is extremely technical and complex and thus the Court should obtain the expert opinion of the Commission with respect to defendants' contentions before the case goes to trial.

Plaintiff argues, on the other hand, that it is immaterial whether defendants' act of reducing rates, considered by itself, is covered by prior procedural agreements approved by the Commission or is immunized from the antitrust laws because it is a well-settled principle of law that a lawful act may be properly alleged as a means of effectuating one of the principal objects of the alleged conspiracy; that is, the elimination of plaintiff as a competitor with the railroads for explosives traffic.

[Practical Considerations]

These, then, are the basic legal issues before the Court. Certain practical considerations also enter into the case. This private antitrust suit against almost sixty defendants has been on the docket over four years. During that time, five different judges have made rulings on various preliminary motions. In the interest of finally resolving the complex and serious issues raised by this case and of doing so in the spirit of Rule 1 of F. R. C. P., this Court has set October, 1959, as a tentative time for trial. A great deal of work by both Court and counsel will yet have to be done in order to meet such a schedule, and this date may be delayed because of the recent proceedings in our Court of Appeals. Both sides have requested trial by jury, and have estimated that the trial will last from four to six months. The Court's basic problem is this: Should this important anitrust suit, already more than four years old, and involving issues of serious importance to the national transportation industry, be further delayed for one or perhaps several years in order that the Court might request the expert opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to whether one of many overt acts alleged to have been committed pursuant to a Sherman Act conspiracy ought to be immunized from the operation of the antitrust laws?

[Rate Reduction Issue]

The rate reduction issue is raised in paragraph 18 of the Complaint as Supplemented, which reads as follows:

> "18. On or about Oct. 20, 1955, the railroad defendants herein caused to be submitted to traffic officials employed by the Department of Defense a uniform, unpublished rate quotation, by and on behalf of the railroads engaged in carrying explosives traffic in competition with the plaintiff. Said quotation established railroad rates for carrying explosive shipments totalling more than 50,000 pounds which were nearly forty percent below the general level of such rates prevailing for the previous eight years. Said uniform and concerted rate reduction, which took effect on or about November 20, 1955, was intended to exclude the plaintiff from the business of carrying such shipments of explosives and has had that effect with respect to the principal points served by the plaintiff. Said quotation was made for the purpose of effectuating one of the principal objects of the conspiracy charged herein, to wit, the elimination of the plaintiff as a competitor with the railroads for explosives traffic and has substantially injured the plaintiff's business. The Interstate Commerce Commission has no jurisdiction over said quotation and plaintiff will continue to suffer substantial and irreparable injury from said illegal quotation until and unless the acceptance of traffic pursuant thereto is enjoined by this Court."

[Cases Considered]

In its earlier ruling on this motion, this Court was strongly influenced by the decision in Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Co., et al. v. Aircoach Transportation Association, Inc., et al. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,958], 102 U. S. App. D. C. 355, 253 F. 2d 877 (1958), hereinafter referred to as ACTA. On motions by both sides for summary judgment, the District Court there had ruled that the concerted quotation by railroads under Section 22 of the I. C. C. Act of certain variable rates and package bids for military passenger traffic were per se illegal under the antitrust laws, and that 49 U. S. C. § 5b(9) did not grant immunity from these laws.

In reversing, the Court of Appeals held that it could not be said as a matter of law that all joint rate reductions under section 22 must be excluded from the class of concerted actions covered by prior procedural agreements approved by the Commission under 49 U. S. C. § 5b(9) and, therefore, it was error to hold that all such reductions in rate must be denied immunity from the antitrust laws under 49 U. S. C. § 5b(9). Hence, some section 22 rates arrived at by joint action might be within the coverage of prior approved arrangements for rate making and hence might be immunized from the antitrust laws. The Court of Appeals felt that the Commission's prior rulings as to the possible or actual coverage of defendants' conduct by procedural agreements or as to the Commission's power to decide these very questions were not clear and decisive. The Court observed at p. 885:

> "Nevertheless, the questions are appropriate for Commission consideration, even though, as we believe, exclusive primary jurisdiction over either of them does not reside in the Commission by reason of section 5a(7) [49 U. S. C. 5b(7)]."

The Court of Appeals then ruled that the District Court should, in its discretion, withhold decision on the interpretation of the I. C. C. Act and the approved procedural agreements until the Commission has had a chance to decide initially whether, in its opinion, the railroad rate reductions can be relieved from the antitrust laws because of coverage by approved agreements.

After discussing the relationship of defendants' practices to unlawful price-fixing, the Court of Appeals then set a limitation on the power of the Commission to resolve the antitrust aspect of the rate practices. It said at page 365:

> "One further substantive legal question must be considered. Even though it should be found in the end that the practices as such have been validly immunized by section 5a approved agreements, nevertheless, if they are part of an effort by Railroads in combination or conspiracy to eliminate the competition of Aircoach, rather than used merely to meet that competition, the practices would be removed from the protection of section 5a(9). We do not think the Act or any agreement which has been approved under it can be construed as authorizing the use of such practices for the purpose of eliminating the competition of Aircoach for the section 22 transportation involved. See, by analogy, American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, 809, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575; State of Georgia v. Pennsylvania R., supra, 324 U. S. at page 458, 65 S. Ct. at page 726; Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., 10 Cir. 198 F. 2d 416, 422; Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. v. Eastern R. R. Pres. Conf., D. C. E. D. Pa., 155 F. Supp. 768, 814-816, 822-825; Parmelee Transp. Co. v. Keeshin, D. C. N. D. Ill., 144 F. Supp. 480, 484; Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. v. Eastern R. R. Pres. Conf., D. C. E. D. Pa., 113 F. Supp. 737, 742-744; Slick Airways, Inc. v. American Airlines, Inc., D. C. D. N. J., 107 F. Supp. 199, 214, appeal dismissed sub nom. American Airlines, Inc. v. Forman, 3 Cir. 204 F. 2d 230, certiorari denied 346 U. S. 806, 74 S. Ct. 54, 98 L. Ed. 336; United States v. Association of American Railroads, D. C. D. Neb., 4 F. R. D. 510, 526 . . . . The motion of Railroads is not to be construed as admitting factual allegations in regard to a purpose to destroy competition which would have the legal result of removing Railroads from any possible protection from the antitrust laws; nor can Aircoach's motion be construed as abandoning those allegations. Thus, on this aspect of the case, there remains a factual dispute. Moreover, this aspect of the case need not be submitted for consideration or initial decision by the Commission as to either questions of fact or of law.
> "There thus arises a matter of procedure. As to this, a discretion must be left to the District Court after hearing the parties. It might be considered preferable, if Aircoach desires to pursue the assertions regarding a purpose to destroy competition, that this branch of the case should be the subject of a hearing, limited to that problem. Should Aircoach prevail Railroads would be liable in damages, and an appropriate injunction also could be granted. Or proceedings in the District Court on this subject could await reference to the Commission of the questions of coverage by statute or approved agreement." (Emphasis supplied.)

The case of American Tobacco Company v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 809, decided in 1946 and cited above was a criminal action brought under the Sherman Act and the defendants, who were officers of large tobacco companies, were convicted on four counts of an indictment charging conspiracy in restraint of trade, monopolization, attempting to monopolize, and conspiracy to monopolize. In the petition for certiorari the question was limited to "whether actual exclusion of competitors is necessary to the crime of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act."

At page 809 the Court said:

"It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the Statute condemns. It is not of importance whether the means used to accomplish the unlawful objective are in themselves lawful or unlawful. Acts done to give effect to the conspiracy may be in themselves wholly innocent acts. Yet, if they are part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy which the statute forbids. they come within its prohibition . . . ."

The case of State of George v. Pennsylvania Railroad Company [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439, decided in 1945, was a suit by a state charging that the defendant railroads had set up rates that discriminated against the ports and cities of Georgia and greatly hampered the industrial and economic development of the entire state, in violation of the antitrust laws.

One of the defendants' contentions was that the I. C. C. had jurisdiction over these rate matters and had actually approved these rates under I. C. C. Act standards. The court held that carriers are also subject to the antitrust laws. Even though the rates had to be cleared through the I. C. C., it may be that circumstances make these rate agreements restrictive rather than competitive. The court said that a conspiracy to fix rates might be illegal though the rates fixed were reasonable and nondiscriminatory, and, as Mr. Justice Brandeis had said in the Keogh case (260 U. S. 156), the fact that rates had been approved by the I. C. C. would not, it seems, bar proceedings by the Government.

The court then stated:

"It is sufficient here to note that we find no warrant in the Interstate Commerce Act and the Sherman Act for saying that the authority to fix joint through rates clothes with legality a conspiracy to discriminate against a State or a region, to use coercion in the fixing of rates, or to put in the hands of a combination of carriers a veto power over rates proposed by a single carrier." (Emphasis supplied.)

[Unlawful Intent]

It is clear from the above language in the ACTA case that a court need not refer to the Commission the issue of whether a rate quotation was made as part of a combination or conspiracy to eliminate a competitor. This follows logically because such a joint act if combined with the unlawful intent of eliminating a competitor would fall outside of the immunity granted by 49 U. S. C. 5b(9) regardless of a possible I. C. C. ruling that the methods of arriving at the new rate conformed to prior procedural agreements filed with and sanctioned by the Commission. The Court of Appeals also authorized a separate hearing on the allegations of intent to destroy competition which might, if the defendants in ACTA lost, result in a determination of liability and an award of damages and injunctive relief. Thus, a clear distinction was drawn between the antitrust aspects and the technical rate-making issues in the ACTA case. In ACTA, both aspects grew out of the same type of activity, namely, section 22 rate quotations. The lawfulness of these quotations formed, for all practical purposes, the sole issues of that case. Since the Court of Appeals authorized the District Court, in ACTA, in its discretion, to itself decide the fundamental questions of antitrust liability and damages, it seems to be far more important to follow that reasoning in this case where the technical aspects of section 22 rate-making constitutes only one part of the issue raised by paragraph 18 of the complaint as supplemented and where this rate reduction itself forms only one out of the many overt acts alleged by the plaintiff.

[Conditions Which Require Referral to ICC]

However, in the view of the Court of Appeals, the decision of the Supreme Court in Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., et al, 356 U. S. 481 (1958), has modified the holding in ACTA by placing on District Courts a duty under clearly defined conditions to refer certain issues to administrative agencies. The Court of Appeals in its order dated August 8, 1958 stated as follows:

". . . it is the view of this court that the Isbrandtsen opinion modifies the holding of the Aircoach case by requiring that the issue of the intent and effect of an agreement approved by the Commission must, in a case where such issue is the sole or dominant issue in the case, first be referred to the Commission prior to a court determination of whether such agreement violates the anti-trust laws, ..." (Emphasis supplied.)

Answering defendants' motion for clarification of the above language, the Court of Appeals in an order dated December 16, 1958 stated as follows:

". . . The intent, however, of the order of August 8 was to assert our view that the Isbrandtsen opinion modifies the holding of the Aircoach case by requiring that the issue of the intent and effect of a rate reduction claimed to have been taken pursuant to procedures set forth in agreements approved by the Commission under Sec. 5a of the Interstate Commerce Act, must, in a case where such issue is the sole or dominant issue, first be referred to the Commission prior to a court determination of whether such rate reduction violates the anti-trust laws. The "issue" referred to in the order was not intended to mean the issue of the applicability of sec. 5a agreements to the rate reductions."

The Court, in its order of August 8, interpreted Isbrandtsen as applying to a factual situation more in line with the case at bar, and used the following language:

". . . it is the view of this court that the Isbrandtsen decision does not necessarily require referral to the Commission of issues such as those sought to be referred to the Commission by petitioners' motion where the agreement is only one of a considerable number of overt acts alleged and where the policy favoring referral is clearly outweighed by other factors such as the probability of undue delay and the overriding importance of early consideration of the other overt acts alleged . . . ." (Emphasis supplied.)

[Isbrandtsen Case]

Before considering the precise way in which Isbrandtsen modified ACTA with respect to this case, it may be noted that this Court, at the request of defendants, had considered Isbrandtsen before it denied the original motion to suspend.

The sequence of events leading up to this Supreme Court decision is of importance in determining its scope. In 1952, an association or "conference" of steamship lines engaged in foreign trade adopted a dual system of international freight rates. Under this system, a shipper would pay less than regular rates for the same service if he signed an agreement to patronize the conference exclusively. The ostensible purpose of the dual-rate arrangement was to meet the competition of an independent carrier, Isbrandtsen Co., Inc. The proposed system was submitted to the Federal Maritime Board for approval pursuant to law, and orders of approval were issued in December, 1955 and January, 1956. Isbrandtsen Company, Inc. petitioned our Court of Appeals to review these orders. That Court set aside the Board's order on the ground that the system of dual rates was illegal per se under § 14 of the Shipping Act of 1916. [99 U. S. App. D. C. 312, 239 F. 2d 933 (1956)]

The Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the issue as to the legality of the dual-rate system and stated in its opinion at page 487:

". . . The question for our decision is whether the Court of Appeals correctly set aside the Board's orders."

The Supreme Court agreed with the Court of Appeals and held that the dual-rate system was illegal.

Examination of the opinion shows that the case was not decided by application of the doctrine of "primary administrative jurisdiction". Under this doctrine, the courts often decline to determine a controversy, first presented to it, where it involves a question which is within the jurisdiction of an administrative agency, prior to the decision of that question by the administrative tribunal, and where the question demands the exercise of administrative interpretation requiring the special knowledge, experience and services of the agency to decide technical and intricate matters of fact.

The court in Isbrandtsen discussed this practical policy of judicial administration in the course of explaining the rulings in two of its earlier decisions which had been relied upon by Far East Conference. On page 496 of its opinion, it said:

"Petitioners argue that our construction of § 14 Third is foreclosed by this Court's decisions in United States Nav. Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co. 284 U. S. 474, (76 L. ed. 408, 52 S. Ct. 247); and Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U. S. 570, (96 L. ed. 576, 72 S. Ct. 492). A reading of those opinions immediately refutes any suggestions either that this issue was expressly decided in those cases or that our holding here is not fully consistent with the disposition of those cases."

The Court then summarized petitioners' contentions as follows:

"The Board and the Conference argue that, if the Court in these earlier cases had thought that § 14 Third in any way makes dual rates per se illegal and thus not within the power of the Board to authorize, it would not have found it necessary to require that the Board first pass upon the claims."

In rejecting this reasoning, the Court said at page 498:

"It is, therefore, very clear that these cases, while holding that the Board had primary jurisdiction to hear the case in the first instance, did not signify that the statute left the Board free to approve or disapprove the agreements under attack. Rather, those cases recognized that in certain kinds of litigation practical considerations dictate a division of functions between court and agency under which the latter makes a preliminary, comprehensive investigation of all the facts, analyzes them, and applies to them the statutory scheme as it is construed."

Thus, it is clear that the problem of whether or not a district court should refer certain issues to an administrative agency was not squarely before the court in the Isbrandtsen case.

[Proper Forum]

The question next arises: In what precise way does Isbrandtsen modify ACTA? ACTA contained two basic holdings. The first related to the proper forum for decision of issues as to the procedural agreements and their connection with Section 22 rate practices. The second dealt with the exceptional circumstances under which Sec. 5a immunity would not apply. On the first issue, the Court of Appeals held in the ACTA case that the I. C. C. and the District Court had concurrent jurisdiction to decide the intent and effect of approved procedural agreements in relation to Section 22 rates, and whether coverage by these agreements would immunize these rates from the antitrust laws. On page 364 of that opinion the court stated as follows:

"In short, the court, while retaining jurisdiction, should in its discretion withhold decision on the interpretation of the statute and existing agreements approved under section 5a, insofar as the challenged practices are concerned, until the Commission has had an opportunity to decide initially whether in its view the Railroads can, with respect to those practices, be relieved of the operations of the antitrust laws under the statute and, if so, whether they have been so relieved by any approved agreement, and, if so, by which agreement or agreements, by what provisions thereof, and as of what date. The Commission might disclaim jurisdiction, or for some other reason might refrain from deciding these questions. We do not hold that it is required to decide them. The court could then proceed according to its own light to interpret either the statute or the agreements." (Emphasis supplied.)

[Antitrust Immunity]

On the second question, it was held in ACTA that, under no circumstances could antitrust immunity under 49 USC 5b(9) be held to apply to the use of approved procedures to set Section 22 rates if they were part of an effort by railroads in combination or conspiracy to eliminate the competition of Aircoach.

It is clear from the language in its order that the Court of Appeals interpreted Isbrandtsen as modifying the first holding in ACTA only by limiting the District Court's discretion to refer issues.

[Governing Rule]

It is the governing rule now that the issue of the intent and effect of a rate reduction, claimed to have been taken pursuant to procedures set forth in agreements approved by the Commission under Section 5a of the Interstate Commerce Act, must, in a case where such issue is the sole or dominant issue, first be referred to the Commission prior to a Court determination of whether such rate reduction violates the antitrust laws.

Thus, it would appear that the second holding of ACTA stands unaffected by Isbrandtsen.

If plaintiff, during the trial, cannot prove an affirmative answer to this question, then it concedes it cannot recover based on the rate reduction issue. On the other hand, if it should develop at the trial that the plaintiff can prove that the rate reduction as set forth in paragraph 18 was one of several overt acts alleged, and prove that this rate reduction was made for the purpose of effectuating one of the principal objects of the conspiracy charged therein; that is, the elimination of the plaintiff as a competitor with the railroads for explosives traffic, then under ACTA no amount of coverage by approved agreements and no degree of immunity under 49 U. S. C. 5b(9) could remove the rate reduction from the prohibitions of the Sherman Act.

[Lawful Act as Part of Conspiracy]

In reaching either of these alternatives, no determination by the Commission seems necessary on the above contentions made by the plaintiff. Even if the Commission were to decide that the rate reduction, considered by itself, conformed to the standards of the Interstate Commerce Act, it is nevertheless well settled that a lawful act may be validly alleged as forming a part of a conspiracy for an unlawful purpose such as to restrain trade. Noerr Motor Freight v. Eastern Railroad Pres. Conf. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,827], 155 F. Supp. 768 (E. D. Pa. 1957).

The basic reason behind defendants' motion to suspend is the expectation of obtaining an I. C. C. ruling that the Section 22 rate reduction is "immunized" from the operation of the antitrust laws by 49 U. S. C. 5b(9). This Court cannot say how the Commission would be likely to rule if this issue alone were submitted to it. After a substantial delay in the final disposition of this issue, it is possible that defendants might obtain an adverse ruling. Then all the harmful effects that a long delay brings to protracted litigation would have been endured to no purpose.

The result would not be different if the defendants won all of their arguments before the Commission. In effect, the Commission would be ruling that the Section 22 rate reduction on explosives, standing alone, were covered by approved agreements on rate procedures and that therefore they are removed from the operation of the antitrust laws by 49 U. S. C. 5b(9). Thus, no antitrust suit could be brought based on the act of reducing rates alone. This would simply mean that a private party could not validly file a complaint alleging that defendants violated the antitrust laws solely because they concertedly lowered the rates on explosives traffic for the United States Government. Without such an immunity provision, railroads would often be suspected of combining to fix prices when they make even routine changes in their rates in cooperation with each other. The railroads are right in their contention that cooperative or joint rate-making is often essential, especially when the goods in question are normally handled by many companies on a vast, interlocking rail system. As the court in ACTA observed at 102 U. S. App. D. C. 355, 361, 253 F. 2d 877, 883 (1958):

> ". . . Furthermore, upon the basis of extensive testimony in committee hearings on section 5a, bearing on its possible application to section 22 'rate adjustment' or reduced rates for war materials, the House and Senate Committee Reports pointed out that the evidence was convincing that the joint organizations maintained by the carriers were not only necessary to enable them to meet the commercial requirements of the nation but also were indispensable to the requirements of national defense."

Thus, it would seem that the antitrust immunity that defendants invoke was designed to protect ordinary rate-making in the course of regular business so as to adjust to changing costs and to meet the challenges of outside competition. Could the protection of 49 U. S. C. 5b(9), assumed above, extend to the use of the power to set rates in concert as part of a plan or conspiracy to eliminate competition? According to the holding in ACTA quoted above it could not. Even if a given joint act of reducing rates were to be considered as lawful standing by itself, it may still be properly alleged as one of the means used to effectuate a conspiracy to accomplish an unlawful object. This is clear from the cases cited in the ACTA opinion.

[Integral Part of Alleged Conspiracy]

Thus, the rate issue is an integral part of the alleged conspiracy, and cannot be evaluated apart from the other allegations in the complaint. There are two possibilities that would result from referral to the I. C. C. If the I. C. C. heard argument or conducted a hearing solely upon the immunization issue raised by defendants, then its ultimate ruling would, under the plaintiff's allegations, certainly be indecisive. On the other hand, the parties might be permitted to present all of the issues raised by the pleadings so that the Commission could get the entire picture. This would be a laborious way to resolve only one issue in this complex case. Several months would probably be required to present all of this evidence. Furthermore, at the end of this process plaintiff, if it prevailed, would still be unable to obtain the substantive relief it seeks here. An entire retrial of the case would then be necessary in the District Court.

[Referral to ICC Unnecessary]

The Court must conclude, therefore, that a reference of the rate-reduction issue to the I. C. C. would be a waste of time and effort and would entail unnecessary expense on the part of all parties to this litigation.

[Importance of Other Allegations]

Furthermore, it is also clear that the intent and effect of the Section 22 rate-reduction is in no sense the dominant, much less the sole, issue of this litigation. The complaint as supplemented alleges a complex conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act. A concerted reduction in explosives rates is alleged to have been one of the many overt acts designed to effectuate the unlawful plan. When the plaintiff filed the original complaint the rate issue was not included and the other allegations were relied upon to constitute a cause of action.

Defendants, in their supplemental memorandum filed September 29, 1958, try to de-emphasize the non-rate allegations of the complaint. On page 8 it is said:

> ". . . There may be some evidence relating to the alleged campaign of defamation. But this will be only to lend color to plaintiff's claim that there is a continuing conspiracy among the defendants.
> "Obviously, plaintiff can say that the complaint raises issues as to defamation. But the assertion of issues does not make them substantial."

However, in the course of oral argument on this motion on May 23, 1958, this Court asked Mr. Ball, counsel for some of the defendants, whether he would be willing to stipulate that the non-rate or other charges contained in plaintiff's complaint are true if the rate-reduction issue by itself were sent to the I. C. C. (Tr. pp. 95, 96, 97) The exact colloquy is as follows on page 95 of the Transcript of Proceedings before the Court on May 23, 1958:

> "The Court: Let me ask you this. I don't suppose you would consent to this. I wouldn't either if I were you. Would you be willing to go over to the Commission and say to the Commission, in effect, this: that we admit for the purpose of this case, if it is sent over there, that we are guilty of every single thing that the plaintiff says we are guilty of in this complaint; but regardless of that, the Act which you have been speaking about, which enacted 5a, I think, of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, immunizes us from the antitrust laws, so it makes not a particle of difference whether or not we were guilty of any conspiracy?
> Mr. Ball: I cannot say that because the complaint—
> The Court: Would you do that?
> Mr. Ball: I would not, because the complaint alleges things that go beyond the rate-making actions themselves.
> The Court: I understand. I didn't expect you to do it, frankly. I mean that I am saying that it seems to me that a hearing would have to be conducted over there, pursuant to the ACTA case, to determine whether or not the defendants were guilty of the very things that the plaintiff says they were guilty of. I don't know whether they are or not, and I am not going to know until the evidence is in this case.
> Mr. Ball: Now, let me clarify one point. The Commission is not going to decide whether we went before or did the public relations job.
> The Court: Of course, they are not going to decide that.
> Mr. Ball: Those are the allegations that are not rate-making allegations.
> The Court: I understand that.
> Mr. Ball: But the Commission is the one that has got to decide.
> The Court: They are going to decide whether or not this agreement, the way it was prepared and agreed to, they are going to decide whether or not that agreement itself was a valid agreement, correct?
> Mr. Ball: And first and second whether the activities under it were in accordance with it and, third, whether the rate made under it, was it made in accordance with it, or whether there was a predatory practice or some violation of transportation policy.
> The Court: I understand, and they will limit their investigation and hearing on that point.
> Mr. Ball: Now, with that—
> The Court: These points."

Counsel declined to so stipulate and thus impliedly recognized the importance of those allegations if they could be established as true.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

On the factual importance of these non-rate allegations, little can be said at this stage of the case. The parties are in the midst of discovery and the over-all picture is far from complete. It is impossible now to tell what evidence the plaintiff will present at the trial. Isolated statements of plaintiff's officers in answer to interrogatories and by way of depositions cannot be the basis for judging the weight or importance of evidence as it may develop at trial, months from now.

Furthermore, these allegations of defamation as well as other charges are not unique to this case. In Noerr Motor Freight, cited above, several of the allegations appear to resemble some of those in this litigation. It, too, was a private antitrust suit for treble damages and injunctive relief brought by trucking firms against railroads, rail associations and a public relations firm. At the outset, Judge Clary, the trial judge, felt that the charges seemed somewhat incredible. Cf. 155 F. Supp. 808. After presiding over a four month trial, the judge made the following finding, on page 816:

> "The proofs in this case have definitely established joint action on the part of all of the defendants to destroy the good will and injure the business of the plaintiffs. They have proved the formation of so-called 'independent citizens groups' which were mere pawns in circulating information derogatory to the plaintiffs; dissemination of false information to customers of the plaintiffs for the same purpose, the organization of groups to protest the use of the highways by plaintiffs' 'Big Trucks', and the duping and using of public officials and officials of independent organizations to accomplish the same purpose of driving the plaintiffs out of competition with the defendants. The actions of the defendants do not fall within legal bounds of either proper means or proper objectives and consequently such activities must be condemned."

After a separate hearing on the issue of relief and damages, the Court enjoined defendants from continuing the conspiracy charged and awarded $652,000 damages plus $200,000 counsel fees. Cf. 166 F. Supp. 163 [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,085]. The judgment is now on appeal.

[Failure to Seek Preliminary Injunction]

Defendants also contend that plaintiff's request for injunctive relief to prevent further acts unrelated to the rate cut is not to be taken seriously, because plaintiff has made no effort to seek a preliminary injunction. This failure, it is argued, shows that plaintiff does not really think it can show substantial injury resulting from the alleged defamation campaign. But more reasonable inferences may also be made. The size and scope of the conspiracy alleged would make necessary a lengthy and costly hearing. Preparation for this would involve the same kind of detailed discovery that is now going on in preparation for the trial itself. The procedure of waiting until the case has been presented on its merits was followed in the Noerr case and, furthermore, a separate hearing on the question of relief and damages was there held some time after the trial. Thus, no inference adverse to plaintiff can be made based on its failure to seek an injunction before the trial on the merits.

[Legal Standards for Referral to ICC]

From the above discussion, it is clear that the purely legal standards for referral of the rate reduction issue to the Commission have not been met. It is not the sole or dominant issue of the case and no possible ruling as to its coverage by prior approved procedural agreements would be conclusive where such rate reduction is alleged to be part of a conspiracy to restrain trade. At this point, certain practical aspects of the referral problem must be considered.

[Undue Delay]

In the first place, undue delay with accompanying hardship and expense to the parties would almost certainly result if this issue were referred to the Commission. The rate question, while not the sole or dominant issue of the case, is, nevertheless, an essential segment of plaintiff's cause of action and equally as important as the other allegations. The trial on the merits could not proceed properly with this aspect of the case missing. Referral would delay the entire litigation. This Court has no power to compel the Commission to make any ruling at all, much less to bring about a prompt decision. A determination would have to await its turn on the Commission's crowded docket. It might be that many months would pass without Commission action. The Court would then probably have to wait a reasonable time before itself taking action, and this might amount to one or more years. What "a reasonable time" might be can perhaps be gauged by examining the duration of past Commission proceedings involving numerous parties. In the memorandum filed by plaintiff, it cites the so-called Government reparations suits as an example. These actions involved many of defendants here and dealt with the reasonableness of the railroad explosives rates which had been in effect prior to the rate reduction in November, 1955. The suits were initially filed by the Government in September and October, 1947. It was not until February, 1955, almost eight years later, that the Commission ruled that the pre-1955 explosives rates were reasonable. Cf. 294, I. C. C. 5. Approval by the Commission of some of the Section 5a procedural agreements mentioned above consumed a great amount of time. This ranged from eleven months for the Western Traffic Association's agreement to two years nine months for the agreement submitted by the Southern Freight Association.[1]

The experience of the plaintiff in ACTA may also be relevant here. On pages two and three of the Memorandum of Aircoach Transport Association, Inc., et al., as amicus curiae, filed in our Court of Appeals in this cause (No. 14,562), it is stated that on April 18, 1958 the District Court in ACTA entered an order in which proceedings were to be instituted before the I. C. C. by one or more of the parties within 20 days of this date; that proceedings before the I. C. C. were commenced before it on April 22, 1958, by the filing of a petition or complaint initiating proceedings; and that the Commission has not yet acted on the issues referred to it under the District Court's order of reference.

Thus, it will be seen that it has been over eight months since proceedings were started before the Commission and as of October 31, 1958 it had not yet taken any action. Besides that, there is nothing to indicate to this court how long it will take for the Commission to render its decision in that case, and even after the Commission has rendered its decision, its ruling may be appealed by one of the parties. If this happens, considerably more time will undoubtedly elapse before the Courts will be able to render a final decision in that case.

It must also be remembered that in connection with defendants' motion to suspend proceedings, it also requests that all discovery proceedings regarding the rate reduction issue be suspended until the Commission has made its ruling.

It would thus seem that a reasonable time before Commission action might well be measured in years rather than months. The Court has taken into consideration the fact that this action has been pending more than four years; that it will be many months before a trial can be had, and that it will take from four to six months to try the case. It would be contrary to sound judicial discretion to permit this additional delay to this over-postponed litigation merely to seek an optional ruling from the Commission on the rate reduction aspect, which is not the sole or dominant issue in this case.

[Importance of Early Trial]

In addition, the very nature of the other overt acts alleged reveal the great importance of early consideration of these acts on their merits as soon as practicable. The claims and counterclaims in this case indicate continuing injury to the business of the various parties. Plaintiff's request for injunctive relief should be resolved without unnecessary delay. New delay will add to the difficulty of obtaining witnesses and will further dim memories of facts essential to all parties. The extraordinary cost to all parties of this litigation would also be increased.

[Conclusion]

Thus, the Court concludes that too much delay has already taken place in the disposition of this case. In fairness to all parties, the Court deems it essential to get to the merits of the case as speedily as possible. Reference to the Commission would only serve to thwart this purpose.

[Separate Contentions]

In addition to the joint memorandum filed on behalf of most of the railroad defendants, Atlantic Coast Line and seven other Southern railroads filed a supplemental memorandum on September 29, 1958 raising questions allegedly relating to them alone. Two defendants who did not take part in the joint memorandum; namely, the Central Vermont Railway and the Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company, asked permission to file a memorandum containing their contentions with respect to the motion to suspend, and their request was granted. The questions raised by both memoranda will be considered together at this time.

[Degree of Involvement]

The underlying contention here is that the rate reduction is clearly the dominant issue as to them and hence they, at least, should be permitted to litigate the question of antitrust immunity under 49 U. S. C. 5b(9) before the I. C. C. The southern railroads, on page 3 of their brief, point to statements by plaintiff's counsel in connection with an earlier motion that they were neither prime movers nor principal beneficiaries of the alleged defamation conspiracy. They also cite the depositions of plaintiff's principal officers to the effect that no official was able to state of his own knowledge what specific role was played by the southern railroads in the alleged defamation campaign outside of the publication of a certain anti-truck article in one of their magazines. At page 6 of their memorandum, the southern railroad defendants concede that they also made a contribution toward the production of a film by the Farm Roads Foundation. The publication of the magazine article is set forth in the complaint as one of the overt acts done to effectuate the conspiracy and the film production has been mentioned by plaintiff in affidavits as one of the concerted methods used by defendants in connection with the alleged conspiracy. The southern railroads admittedly took some part in the I. C. C. hearings in opposition to the application by Riss and other motor carriers for operating authority. As to the rate reduction, it is said at page 8 of their brief:

> "While rates in southern territory were reduced several months later, in March and April of 1956, the reductions could hardly have been intended to and did not affect the competition of Riss since Riss does not operate to any significant extent in southern territory. Thus, the supplement to the complaint does not include this later reduction in its allegations."

Thus, it is clear that southern railroads are merely urging statements of fact and inferences contrary to those made by the plaintiff in its complaint and sworn affidavits. The court is asked to divide this litigation and to refer the rate reduction issue regarding a few defendants to the I. C. C. based on conflicting assertions as to how much or how little these few defendants may be involved in the issues raised by the complaint.

Despite the conflict, there seems to be a sufficient basis in the statements of defendants alone to connect them in some degree with the activities of the other defendants. Even if the evidence should show these defendants took only a small part in the alleged conspiracy, if they did so with knowledge of the conspiracy and consented to take part in it, then they assume equal responsibility for the acts of all conspirators. As was said in United States v. National City Lines [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,757], 186 F. 2d 562, 571 (7th Cir. 1951).

> ". . . Nor does the circumstance that certain of the supplier defendants had requirements contracts with one but not both of the City Lines defendants absolve those defendants of participation in the conspiracy charged in the indictment or prove that no such conspiracy existed; it was not incumbent on the government to prove that each defendant participated in that conspiracy in all of its ramifications, for, in order that one be found guilty as a conspirator, it need only be shown that, with knowledge of the existence of the conspiracy, he knowingly performed an act designed to promote or aid in the attainment of the object of that known conspiracy."

When one enters after the inception of a continuing conspiracy, he becomes liable for the acts of all the conspirators since the conspiracy is, in effect, renewed each day of its existence. United States v. Borden Co. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,250], 308 U. S. 188, 202 (1939); United States v. N. Y. Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,287], 137 F. 2d 459, 463 (5th Cir. 1943) cert. denied 320 U. S. 783 (1943). A reading of the complaint reveals that plaintiff will attempt to prove the existence of an antitrust conspiracy continuing over a period of several years. When dealing with such a charge, it is essential to consider the allegations as a whole and not to dismember it into many parts. United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 544 (1913).

Since, therefore, the defendants' degree of participation cannot be judged before plaintiff has presented all its evidence and since even a lesser role in a conspiracy may bring about liability equal to that of prime movers, it cannot be said that any one allegation such as the rate reduction issue is of dominant importance as to these defendants.

["Mute Membership"]

These considerations apply with equal force to defendants Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company and Central Vermont Railway. They urge on page 3 of their separate memorandum that the only connection with the defamation allegations which has been so far adduced is the mere "mute membership" of each petitioner in two of the rail associations named as defendants, and that, hence, the rate reduction is the dominant issue as to them. They cite United States v. Food and Grocery Bureau of Southern California, 43 F. Supp. 966, 973 (S. D. Calif. 1942), to establish the principle that mere mute membership in an association charged with an unlawful criminal conspiracy will not impose liability upon a member. This would seem to be in accordance with the general principles of conspiracy law discussed above. Some degree of knowledge and consent to the conspiracy or some kind of knowing assistance given in furtherance of it is usually required to impose liability.

In their brief, these defendants simply deny any other connection with the alleged defamation conspiracy except "mute membership" in railroad associations which are defendants in the case and base this denial on certain answers to interrogatories. On page 3 of their memorandum it is said:

> ". . . Indeed, after almost four years of pleading and discovery procedures the only nexus relating the undersigned defendants to the alleged conspiracy is their membership in several railroad associations to whom Riss has imputed leadership in this supposed campaign of defamation. These two railroads were members of the Association of American Railroads and the Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference, and the Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company belonged to the Traffic Executive Association—Eastern Railroads (Central Vermont Railway, Inc., did not). However, no officer or employee of either railroad served as an officer in any of the associations."

[Hearing Evidence Before Dismissal]

The Court is asked to accept the above statement at this stage of the case for the purpose of granting their motion to suspend proceedings as to them and refer the rate reduction issue to the Commission apart from the disposition of the motion with respect to the other defendants. However, this was not the question before Judge Yankwich in the Food and Grocery case which was particularly relied upon by defendants in this motion. That case does not stand for the proposition that allegations of membership in an association charged with a conspiracy, without more, warrants a dismissal of that party from the case before the Court has had an opportunity to hear the evidence. The statements relied upon by defendants were made by Judge Yankwich in connection with motions by various defendants to dismiss at the close of the government's case. The charges were dismissed as to some defendants after the government had presented its entire case because the Court was satisfied that the evidence had failed to establish consent to or participation in the alleged conspiracy. The Court approves of this procedure. If it appears at the end of plaintiff's case that the evidence does not adequately connect any defendant with the charges contained in the complaint, then a motion for a directed verdict as to such defendant may be entertained.

However, just as the Court could not logically dismiss defendants from the case at this point because it is not yet aware of what the evidence may show at trial, in like manner, it would not be proper to assume that these two defendants had little or no connection at all with the alleged defamation conspiracy in order to reach the conclusion that the rate reduction issue is the sole or dominant issue as to them. Besides, it is a well-settled principle of conspiracy law that a defendant may be held fully liable for the consequences of a conspiracy even though its degree of participation may turn out to have been somewhat less than that of other defendants.

[Unnecessary Delay]

The very sound judicial policy against dealing with litigation piecemeal also militates against defendants' position. Since the court could not proceed with the trial until the Interstate Commerce Commission had an opportunity to take action, unnecessary delay would result in this long-delayed case if the defendants' motion to suspend were granted.

Conclusion

[Motions Denied]

The order of this Court dated May 26, 1958, denying the motion by certain railroad defendants to suspend proceedings in this case and to refer certain issues to the Interstate Commerce Commission for determination is hereby vacated.

For the reasons set forth in the above opinion, and in conformity with the orders of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit dated August 8, 1958 and December 16, 1958, the Court makes the following rulings:

1. The motion of defendant railroads to suspend proceedings and to refer certain issues to the Interstate Commerce Commission as supported by the memorandum on behalf of all movants filed September 29, 1958 as well as by the supplemental memorandum on behalf of Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, et al., filed September 29, 1958, is hereby denied.

2. The motion of defendants Central Vermont Railway, Inc., and Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company to have proceedings suspended as to them is hereby denied.

Counsel for plaintiff will submit an appropriate order in accordance with this opinion.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Civil Action No. 4482-56. Dated January 14, 1959.

Case No. 1309 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies in District of Columbia—Sherman Act, Section 3—Agricultural Organizations—Exemptions Under Clayton Act, Section 6—Acquisition of Non-Agricultural Organization—Foreclosure of Competition.—An association of milk producers violated Section 3 of the Sherman Act by acquiring the assets of a dairy. The acquisition resulted in an unreasonable restraint of trade and in the foreclosure of competition in respect to Government contracts and purchases of milk from milk producers. The court found that the transaction was entered into with the intent and purpose of restraining trade, although such a finding was not necessary in order to reach the conclusion of law that the antitrust laws have been violated. It is unreasonable per se to foreclose competitors from any substantial market. The acquisition was not within the statutory immunity afforded to agricultural cooperatives under Section 6 of the Clayton Act because the transaction involved the making and carrying out of a contract with a retail milk outlet, an organization not engaged in agricultural pursuits. While some cases involving labor union transactions tended to support the association's contention that the statutory immunity is lost only when the transaction results in a competitive advantage to the party not clothed with the immunity, labor unions have certain privileges under other statutes that are not accorded to agricultural cooperatives. Transactions involving labor unions are therefore governed by somewhat different principles.

[Separate Causes of Action]

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF, District Judge [In full text]: As has been heretofore indicated, the complaint in this civil action brought by the United States against the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc., under the antitrust laws, is in effect divided into three separate claims for relief or causes of action.

At the first section of the trial, the Court upheld the defense of immunity to the first cause of action, in that the defendant, being an agricultural cooperative, was immune from the antitrust laws unless and except when it entered into transactions with persons or organizations that themselves did not possess such immunity, that is, were not agricultural cooperatives.

The trial then proceeded as to the third cause of action, which was predicated on the Clayton Act. That section of the trial concluded with a decision in favor of the Government to the effect that the transaction involving the acquisition by the defendant of Embassy Dairy, Inc., was a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and with a decision in favor of the defendant in respect to similar acquisitions of Richfield and Wakefield Dairies.

The Government then requested that the Court proceed to a decision under the second cause of action, which also attacked the Embassy Dairy transaction, but based the attack on the Sherman Act, instead of on the Clayton Act. It was stipulated that the case, insofar as this cause of action was concerned, would be submitted on the same record as that before the Court at the trial on the first and third causes of action.

[Findings of Fact]

The Court, therefore, readopts the findings of fact that it has heretofore made. In addition, it is going to make a few additional findings, largely of the nature of ultimate findings based upon the evidentiary findings heretofore made. First, the Court finds as a fact that the result of the transaction complained of was a foreclosure of competition, in respect to Government contracts and in respect to purchases of milk from milk producers. The Court further finds as a fact that the transaction complained of was entered into with the intent and purpose of restraining trade. In the light of the decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100, 105, the Court does not regard it as necessary to find a specific intent to restrain trade in order to reach the conclusion of law that the antitrust laws have been violated. Nevertheless, the Court does make hereby such a finding of fact. The Court further concludes that an unreasonable restraint of trade, violative of the Sherman Act, has resulted from the acquisition of Embassy Dairy by the defendant.

[Agricultural Cooperatives]

It has been urged in behalf of the defendant that the transaction involved in this case is within the immunity accorded to agricultural cooperatives. The basis of this argument is that the doctrine that bans immunity in respect to transactions entered into between agricultural cooperatives and organizations that are not such cooperatives should be limited to such transactions as result in a competitive advantage to the other party, that is, the party which is not clothed with the immunity.

The Court does not find any authoritative basis for such a distinction. The general doctrine limiting the immunity in the manner heretofore stated was formulated and enunciated by the Supreme Court in United States v. Borden Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,250], 308 U. S. 188, 204. There is nothing in that case intimating that any such limitation as is now suggested should exist. This Court finds no authoritative or binding expression formulating such a qualification.

[Labor Unions]

True, some expressions are cited from a number of District Court cases involving transactions of labor unions, which tend to support the reasoning advanced on behalf of the defendant in this respect. Entirely aside from the fact that those expressions are not binding on this Court, it must be noted that the decisions involving labor union transactions are governed by a somewhat different principle than those that apply to agricultural cooperatives. To be sure, the same provision of law grants an immunity from the antitrust laws to agricultural cooperatives as to labor unions. In addition, however, other statutes, such as the Norris-La Guardia Act, the National Labor Relations Act, and the Labor-Management Act, add certain further privileges to labor unions that are not accorded to agricultural cooperatives. It necessarily follows, therefore, that decisions involving labor unions are not necessarily apposite as to this point when an agricultural cooperative is involved.

In this connection, it is appropriate to call attention to the decisions of the Supreme Court in United States v. Hutcheson [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,091], 312 U. S. 219, and in Allen Bradley Company v. Local Union No. 3 [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797, 806, in which it was held expressly that:

> "The Sherman, Clayton and Norris-La-Guardia Acts must be jointly considered in arriving at a conclusion as to whether labor union activities run counter to the Anti-trust legislation."

Naturally, an agricultural cooperative can derive no benefit from the statutes relating to labor unions.

[Transaction Not Immune]

The Court, therefore, reaches the conclusion that the statutory immunity accorded to agricultural cooperatives does not apply to the transaction here involved.

[Foreclosure of Competition]

In respect to the main issue here presented for decision, it has been held by the Supreme Court that it is unreasonable per se to foreclose competitors from any substantial market. International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, 396; United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100, 107. In addition, the case of United States v. Yellow Cab Co. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,576], 332 U. S. 218, generally supports the conclusion that is being reached here.

[Sherman Act Violated]

The Court concludes that the transaction involving the acquisition of Embassy Dairy by the defendant constitutes a violation of Section 3 of the Sherman Act.

This oral opinion will constitute the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Counsel will prepare a judgment in accordance with the ruling and in the form indicated in the opinion rendered in this case on November 21, 1958.

In the Supreme Court of Georgia. No. 20264. Decided January 12, 1959.

Georgia Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Contract Not to Compete with Business of Former Partner—Legality.—In an action seeking to enjoin a former partner from engaging in any business involving the sale and servicing of automotive motors or transmissions, an agreement by the former partner that he would not engage in such a business within twenty miles of a specific address in Atlanta, Georgia, for a period of three years after dissolution of the partnership was held valid and enforceable. Although contracts in general restraint of trade are void under Georgia law, the restrictive covenant in the instant case concerned a useful and lawful business, was only in partial restraint of trade, and was reasonably limited as to time and place.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.12.

For the plaintiff in error: Samuel L. Eplan and Charlie Franco, both of Atlanta, Ga.

For the defendants in error: David Gershon, Atlanta, Ga.

[Syllabus]

By the Court: Since there was no issue as to the facts and the denial of the interlocutory injunction was based upon an erroneous interpretation of the law as to the effect of the partnership dissolution agreement, the judgment denying the interlocutory injunction was erroneous.

[Exception to Judgment]

The exception is to a judgment of the Superior Court of DeKalb County entered at an interlocutory hearing on a petition brought by the plaintiff Morris N. Habif against Henry Maslia and Fulton Motor Exchange, Inc., seeking to enjoin the defendants from engaging in any business involving the sale and servicing of automotive motors, transmissions, or other motor or transmission parts.

[Judgment]

The judgment ordered:

"(a) That the application for the restraining order is based upon a restrictive covenant set out in a partnership agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, Henry Maslia, dated May 23rd, 1956; that subsequently thereto there was a partnership dissolution agreement between these same parties dated June 13th, 1957, in which there was a restrictive covenant only binding the plaintiff, Morris N. Habif. The court, being of the opinion that the terms and conditions of the partnership agreement of May 23rd, 1956, insofar as any restrictions against the said Maslia after the termination of the partnership were concerned, are merged into the partnership dissolution agreement of June 13th, 1957, it is therefore ordered that the General Demurrer of the plaintiff to the defendant's answer is hereby overruled.

"(b) It is the further order of the court that the application of the plaintiff for a restraining order is hereby denied, based upon the same grounds as are heretofore provided in the foregoing paragraph."

[Agreement Not to Engage in Business]

The restrictive covenant in the agreement creating the partnership provided: "In the event that this partnership is dissolved, Maslia hereby agrees not to go into, either as principal or agent, any business involving the sale or servicing of automotive motors, transmissions, or other parts, nor to be employed by or permit his name to be used in the operation of said type of business within a twenty-mile radius of 312 Spring Street, N. W., Atlanta, Ga., for a period of three years following such dissolution."

The agreement dissolving the partnership contained a covenant restricting the plaintiff Habif from engaging in the muffler business, ". . . within twenty (20) miles of 197 Piedmont Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, Georgia, 632 North Main Street, East Point, Georgia, and 1922 Roswell Street, Marietta, Georgia, for a period six (6) months from the date of this HM instrument." In their separate, but identical, answers, the defendants pleaded that the provisions in paragraph five of the dissolution agreement, "It is agreed that the partnership heretofore existing between the parties hereto be, and the same is, hereby dissolved, and that this agreement constitutes a full and complete accounting and liquidation of said partnership business, and the party of the first part acknowledges that he has no claim or demand of whatsoever kind or nature against the party of the second part, and the party of the second part acknowledges that he has no claim or demand of whatsoever kind or nature against the party of the first part," constitutes an accord and satisfaction of all obligations of the defendant Maslia under the original agreement and that all obligations therein imposed upon him, including the restrictive covenant, are extinguished. It was as to these allegations as to accord and satisfaction in the answers that the plaintiff demurred. The demurrers were overruled by the court.

[Violation of Covenant]

The evidence at the interlocutory hearing was undisputed that the defendant Maslia was president of the defendant Fulton Motor Exchange, Inc.; that he owned fifty per cent of the stock; that his wife and mother-in-law owned the balance of the stock; that he directed the activities of the corporation; and that he and the defendant Fulton Motor Exchange, Inc., were engaged in the business which he was prohibited from entering by the restrictive covenant of the original partnership agreement and were operating within the forbidden area.

[Limitations as to Time and Place]

MOBLEY, Justice [In full text]: Although contracts in general restraint of trade are void (Code § 20-504), where, as here, the restrictive covenant of the partnership agreement concerns a useful and lawful business, is only in partial restraint of trade, and is reasonably limited as to time and place, it is valid and enforceable. Aladdin, Inc. v. Krasnoff [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,167], Case No. 20209, and cases cited.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Issue]

The issue presented is whether the restrictive covenant in the original partnership agreement limiting the defendant Maslia's business operations after dissolution of the partnership was cancelled or rendered of no force or effect by the dissolution agreement. In our opinion, it was not. The dissolution agreement, after reciting that the parties were doing business under the firm names "Motor Exchange Service" and "Muffler Service Company" under their partnership agreement, recited further: "WHEREAS, it is the desire of the parties hereto to finally settle and dissolve the businesses and affairs of the partnership as between these parties . . ." and followed with the terms and conditions of the settlement of the partnership business and affairs. The purpose of the agreement as stated therein was to settle the affairs of the partnership business. It dissolved the partnership, provided that the agreement constituted a full and complete accounting and liquidation of the partnership business, and contained an acknowledgment by each of the parties that he had no further claim or demand of any kind against the other. The construction of the contract is a question of law for the court (Code § 20-701), and the whole contract should be looked to in arriving at the construction of any part. Code § 20-704(4). Construing the contract in its entirety, we conclude that the acknowledgment by each of the parties that he had no claim or demand of any kind against the other referred to claims or demands arising out of the partnership business. The dissolution agreement simply settled the affairs of the partnership as between the parties. It obviously had no reference to the restrictive covenant of the original partnership agreement. That provision had no bearing on the conduct of the partnership business. It came into effect only upon the dissolution of the partnership. It was not one of the matters to be settled, agreed upon, liquidated or otherwise dealt with in settling the partnership business. An acknowledgment by the parties that the dissolution agreement constituted a full liquidation and accounting of the partnership business would not encompass this restrictive covenant, it not being any part of said business. Nor would the acknowledgment that each had no further claim or demand upon the other include anything other than those growing out of the partnership business.

[Purpose of Agreement]

The record clearly indicates that the plaintiff Habif took the defendant Maslia into his going business, making him a partner thereof, and that the purpose of the restrictive covenant was to prevent Maslia, upon dissolution of the partnership, from engaging in the same business for a period of three years in the area in which the business was operated; and that, during the operation of the partnership business, they developed a muffler business and a restrictive covenant was placed in the dissolution agreement for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff Habif from competing with the defendant Maslia in the muffler business. With this provision in the dissolution agreement and with the original restrictive covenant in the partnership agreement, each of the parties was restricted from engaging in the business that each retained upon dissolution of the partnership.

[Accord and Satisfaction]

The dissolution agreement did not constitute an accord and satisfaction of, or otherwise nullify, the restrictive covenant in the partnership agreement. The trial court erred in overruling the plaintiff's general demurrer to the defendants' answers.

[Judgment Reversed]

Since there was no issue as to the facts and the denial of the interlocutory injunction was based upon an erroneous interpretation of the law as to the effect of the partnership dissolution agreement, the judgment denying the interlocutory injunction was erroneous. Ballard v. Waites, 194 Ga. 427, 429 (2) (— S. E. 2d —) and cases cited.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Rule of Reason—Applicability of Sherman Act Case Law.—Cases decided under the Sherman Act and at common law are applicable to cases arising under the Cartwright Act, except that federal cases under the Sherman Act decided subsequent to the enactment of the Cartwright Act cannot determine the meaning of terms employed in that Act—they are persuasive only. In those areas where there appear to be differences of opinion between the California appellate courts and the federal courts, a state trial court must take the position adopted by the California courts. The decisions of the California courts are explicit to the effect that the Cartwright Act, like the Sherman Act, is a codification of the common law and that plaintiffs in a private action must state a case actionable under the rule of reason. Therefore, generally the Cartwright Act may not be taken literally but must be interpreted in the light of the rule of reason.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2429.05.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Rule of Reason—Applicability of Rule to Business Affected by Public Interest.—In a private damage action, the contention that the rule of reason does not apply in cases involving a business affected by the public interest, such as a gas utility, was rejected. In the instant case, the existence of a gas company as a legal monopoly eliminated the concept of competition among sellers of gas. That which remained to the public interest was to insure that a plentiful supply of gas at the lowest possible cost was obtained by the company and in turn sold to the public at the lowest possible cost. It was the constitutional function of the state utilities commission to see that this process was accomplished. Consequently, it would be foolhardy to strike down any challenged contract on the ground that it was contrary to the literal terms of the Cartwright Act without examining into its apparent effect on the economy in the light of the circumstances.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2383.05, 2429.05.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Rule of Reason—Applicability of Rule to Limitation on Production.—A limitation on production is not illegal per se under the Cartwright Act. The rule of reason is applicable, and such a restraint must be appraised from the viewpoint of its effect in the light of all of the circumstances to see if it is unreasonable.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2429.05.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure—Private Suit—Indispensable Parties.—In a private damage action, a natural gas company and federal and state regulatory agencies were not indispensable parties because their interests, rights, or duties would not inevitably be affected by any judgment which could be rendered in the action. One of the defendants in the action could respond in damages without inevitably affecting the interests of the suggested additional parties.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure —Private Suit—Pleading—Contradictions in Complaint.—Plaintiffs in a private damage action could not in one breath attribute all of the responsibility for the evils of which they complained to one of the defendant's alleged arbitrary use of monopoly power and in the next attribute the same evils to a combination and conspiracy among all of the defendants, at least in the absence of pleading such specific facts as would explain the apparent inconsistency. Another contradiction appeared in that the plaintiffs showed that they bargained away the rights to sell and produce gas which they alleged the defendants had conspired to prevent them from exercising.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure —Private Suit—Pleading—Public Injury.—To state a private cause of action under the Cartwright Act, it is necessary to demonstrate public injury. The Cartwright Act, like the Sherman Act, in allowing multiple damages to private individuals, seeks only the more effective enforcement of prohibitions against practices which cause public injury. In the instant action, the plaintiffs had not pleaded sufficient facts from which the public injury necessary to state a cause of action could be inferred. An allegation to the effect that alleged unlawful restrictions discouraged the exploration for and development of gas properties was insufficient; it was not the kind of public injury which is contemplated by the Act. The kind of public injury designed to be prevented is the kind delineated at common law and set forth in the Apex Hosiery case, 1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,039, 310 U. S. 469, as "agreements to fix prices, divide marketing territories, apportion customers, restrict production and the like practices, which tend to raise prices or otherwise take from buyers or customers the advantages which accrue to them from free competition in the market."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure —Private Suit—Damages—Proximate Cause—Target Area.—To recover double damages under the Cartwright Act, (1) the plaintiff's injury must have been proximately caused by the restrictions in trade carried out by the conspirators, and (2) the plaintiff must, himself, be in the same category of business or occupation as those in the unlawful combination and conspiracy, that is, be in the target area of the conspiracy. In the instant action, it appeared that the plaintiffs were neither producers nor sellers of natural gas as the defendants, but had such rights only as were reserved to them through leases. Assuming that the plaintiffs hurdled the proximate cause obstacle, they had not pleaded themselves within the target area in the sense prescribed by the California rules.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2403.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure —Private Suit—Class Action.—Owners of certain mineral rights appurtenant to their properties situated in a gas field could not maintain a class action on behalf of all similarly situated owners of lands overlying the gas field. The minimum requirements of a class action are that (1) there must exist a well-defined community of interest in questions of law and fact between those bringing the action and those claimed to be represented, and (2) the suing and non-suing groups must constitute a definitely ascertainable class. They could not represent owners similarly situated on the theory that they were entitled to represent them as co-tenants. Since the property of the owners differed, there was not a sufficient community of interest among all those whom the plaintiffs sought to represent. Each of the owner's rights and liabilities would turn on a variety of factors, legal and factual, peculiar to himself. It would be unfair to assume that the owners' interests would be properly protected in a class action or to force them in as plaintiffs or defendants.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.

Combinations, Conspiracies, and Monopolies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure—Private Suit—Pleadings—Permission To Amend Complaint.—Plaintiffs were permitted to amend their complaint, which had been held insufficient, where their action had a history of some three years, and, taking into consideration a companion suit filed in a federal court, the last complaint constituted the plaintiffs' seventh pleading.

For the plaintiffs: Clifton Hildebrand of Hildebrand, Bills and McLeod; Reginald G. Hearn; Leo C. Dunnell; K. I. Jones; Julian Caplan; Dodge and Evans; and Aldo P. Guidotti.

For the defendants: Harold A. Black, of McCutchen, Black, Harnagel and Greene, for Amerada Petroleum Corp.; Turner H. McBaine, of Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro, for Standard Oil Co. of Cal.; Julian O. von Kalinowski, of Gibson, Dunn and Crutcher, for The Texas Co.; Frederick W. Mielke, Jr., and O'Hara, Randall and Castagnetto for Natural Gas Corp.; John F. Runner for Monterey Oil Co.; Angell and Adams for Tracy Drilling Corp.; and John H. Blake, of Hanna and Morton, for Superior Oil Co.

Memorandum of Opinion and Order

[State Antitrust Charges]

RAYMOND J. SHERWIN, Judge [In full text]: In this action the several defendants opposed general and special demurrers and motions to strike to the plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint. The case has a history of some three years and, taking into consideration the companion suit filed in the Federal District Court, since dismissed, this constitutes the plaintiffs' seventh pleading. The parties have been most generous with words and to avoid unnecessary addition thereto, the following will be as brief as possible and is not intended to accomplish more than to indicate to counsel the Court's views on the various contentions of the parties.

Insofar as it can be perceived, the essence of the plaintiffs' complaint for double damages under the Cartwright Act is that the plaintiffs claim to be the owners of certain mineral rights appurtenant to their properties situated in the Rio Vista gas fields; that for three years next preceding the filing of the action, the Pacific Gas & Electric Company has, by previously completed mergers and acquisitions, constituted itself as the only buyer of natural gas in Northern California and as such arbitrarily forced the sellers thereof to accept such prices as are dictated by Pacific Gas & Electric Company, and has by contract with El Paso Natural Gas Company agreed to import 77% of its requirements from out of the State and as a corollary thereto, exacted as a condition of purchase from Rio Vista the power to determine such limits as it chooses on the quantity taken from Rio Vista; that all of the defendants have combined and conspired unreasonably to limit the production of gas owned by the plaintiffs and from the whole Rio Vista field to a fraction of its potential commercial production, to take from plaintiffs the right to sell gas in a free and competitive market, and to prevent plaintiffs from selling any gas in quantities other than defendant Pacific Gas & Electric would buy; further, that the defendants have reduced the overall production and thereby the value of the plaintiffs' mineral interest by various improper and illegal production methods such as the irregular, unscientific opening and closing of wells, the irregular spacing of same, the illegal drainage of gas from some properties by wells on others, by maintaining an inadequate number of wells, by insufficient exploration and by the elimination of competition for the purchase and transportation thereof; that these practices are contrary to the public interest because they reduce the value of plaintiffs' royalty interest as landowners, discourage the exploration and development of the gas fields, and because the restriction of supply is detrimental to the price and services the public can get; that the plaintiffs are specially damaged because the plaintiffs' property is capable of producing two million cubic feet per day at a price of 36¢ per thousand cubic feet, or $32,850.00 worth per year, but they actually receive only the minimum rental of $1,800.00 per year.

The second cause of action set forth by the plaintiffs is the same as the first except for different parties plaintiff.

In the third cause of action, the named plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves, and on behalf of certain others whose lands are alleged to be similarly situated with respect to productive capacity, whom the plaintiffs purport to represent as tenants in common, complain that the defendants arbitrarily and without the plaintiffs' authority or the authority of any regulatory body placed them into a unit operation whereby all landowners are paid on the basis of the ratio of their acreage to the total acreage of the unit, so that the plaintiffs' lands are being drained for the benefit of the less productive lands and the latter are receiving royalties which plaintiffs ought to be getting. The plaintiffs ask the compulsory joinder of other landowners in the unit either as plaintiffs or defendants so that the interests of each may be adjudicated.

The fourth cause of action is similar to the first; the fifth is similar to the third; the sixth and seventh are similar to the first; the eighth is similar to the third and fifth; and the ninth cause of action purports to be a class action and asks that all persons having interests in the Rio Vista gas fields be brought in so that their correlative rights may be ascertained.

[Relief Sought]

The general prayer is for double damages; however, in the fifteenth paragraph of the first cause of action, plaintiffs ask the Court to exercise its injunctive powers to restrain the defendants from monopolizing the purchase and production of gas and from continuing with the pooling and unitization agreements currently in effect which limit the production of and competition in the production and sale of gas.

[Pleading]

Before undertaking to deal with the specific grounds of the defendants' demurrers and motions, some preliminary observations are in order. The complaint is lengthy and replete with conclusions of law, statements of economic theory, and argumentative matter. Presumably by way of justification the plaintiffs devote some argument to the proposition that this State, in adopting discovery, has also adopted Federal theories and rules of pleading. But, even in the Federal Courts, a tendency on the part of the trial courts most frequently confronted with anti-trust cases to require the pleadings to state the issues concisely so as clearly to outline the issues is observable. (See, for example, New Dyckman Theater Corp. v. Radio Keith-Orpheum Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,853], 16 FRD 203; Baim and Blanking v. Warren-Connelly Co., 22 FR Service, '56; Erone Corp. v. Skouras Theater Corp., 22 FR Service 59.) More to the point, there is no hint in any of the California decisions that the courts are free to ignore the traditional statutory requirements governing proper pleading. To adopt the Federal rules would be a radical innovation, and I am satisfied that had the Legislature intended to do so it would have enacted specific legislation rather than merely leaving the matter to inference.

The arguments of the parties on the merits will now be considered in the order in which they were presented.

1. Omission of Indispensable Parties

The Pacific Gas & Electric Company argues that unless the plaintiffs intended to include Pacific Gas & Electric Company in the plural term "defendants" as the same is used throughout the complaint, the only allegation involving Pacific Gas & Electric Company is that in view of its monopoly situation its contract with El Paso requires it to import too much gas from out of the State and take too little from the Rio Vista field, from which situation the plaintiffs ask injunctive relief. Pacific Gas & Electric Company points out that in the original complaint and First Amended Complaint, plaintiffs in this connection complained only that the Pacific Gas & Electric Company had constituted itself as monopoly and sole purchaser of natural gas, again, unless Pacific Gas & Electric Company was intended to be included in the loose term "defendants" throughout. It was after a demurrer was sustained per stipulation that the plaintiffs added to their complaint the allegation that Pacific Gas & Electric Company brings in too much El Paso gas and takes not enough Rio Vista gas, brought in El Paso as a party defendant, and filed their suit in the Federal Court. They have not named El Paso as a defendant here, and Pacific Gas & Electric Company contends that El Paso is an indispensable party to this action.

It may well be that if this were a proper action for injunctive relief Pacific Gas & Electric Company's contentions would be correct. A restraining order would present limited alternatives to this defendant, of which alternatives it sees only one. It contends that if the Pacific Gas & Electric Company is forced to take more gas at a steady rate from Rio Vista it must take less from El Paso, which in turn would run head on into the orders of the State and Federal Utilities Commissions. These administrative agencies have sanctioned the importation of given quantities of gas from El Paso which could not be varied from without their permission. However, it is conceivable that other alternatives exist, such as the purchase or lease of wells for natural storage, the construction of artificial storage, or the wastage of gas. Since the latter is unlawful, the alternatives are limited indeed. However, consideration of this aspect of the case is simplified by a fact which has not been alluded to by either party; viz, that injunctive relief is not available to a private litigant under the Cartwright Act. (Overland Publishing Co. v. Union Lithograph Co., 57 C. A. 366.) Thus, the real question is whether El Paso and the regulatory agencies are indispensable parties where plaintiffs' recovery can be in the form of damages only. It appears that indispensable parties are only those "'. . . whose interests, rights, or duties, will inevitably be affected by any decree which can be rendered in the action . . .'" (See Witkin, California Procedure, pp. 317, 318). Since Pacific Gas & Electric Company could respond in damages without inevitably affecting the interests of the other suggested parties, I am of the opinion that they are not indispensable.

2. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies; Doctrine of Primary Jurisdiction

The argument in support of the demurrer on the grounds that the plaintiffs must first litigate their claims before the California Public Utilities Commission and the parallel Federal agency stems from the assumption that Pacific Gas & Electric Company's contract with El Paso must be attacked. The validity of the argument depends on the validity of the premise and requires no further discussion at this point.

3. The Internal Contradictions in the Complaint

The defendants which are the companies producing gas from the Rio Vista gas field argue that plaintiffs' assertion that the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, having acquired its monopoly position as the purchaser of gas, used its power arbitrarily to control prices, manner of production, and limitation of production is fatally contradictory to the statement that the "defendants" have combined to do these things.

As a guide to the analysis of pleadings, it is held that generalized conclusions must give way to such specific facts as are pleaded. (Little v. Union Oil Co. of California, 73 C. A. 612; Denman v. City of Pasadena, 101 C. A. 769.) Also, since the pleader is assumed to have pleaded his case as strongly as possible in his own favor, it is only proper to accept as true those specific facts pleaded which bear most strongly against him. (Faulkner v. California Toll Bridge Authority, 40 Cal. (2) 317; Beatty v. Pacific States S. & L. Co., 4 C. A. (2) 692.) As is said in the Denman case, supra:

> "It is argued that the averment that 'the said defendants' caused the grandstand to be constructed and to remain in a dangerous condition is broad enough to include the Tournament Association, its officers and members. But this allegation follows the paragraphs which are definitely tied down to the City of Pasadena and its officers, and the expression 'said defendants' has no reference to the association, its officers or members. Furthermore, this general averment is in direct conflict with the pleading that the defendant Lockwood 'caused' this particular grandstand to be erected 'for his own pecuniary benefit and profit and had the right and authority to control the construction, use and seating capacity thereof.' Here again the averment of specific facts must control over the general conclusions of the pleader. Taking these allegations together it is apparent that the pleader means that the association by staging the festival and inviting guests to witness the parade offered an inducement to Lockwood to obtain pecuniary profit by constructing the grandstand, but that the latter did this for his own benefit and had sole supervision and control over it. Here again these respondents are merely charged with the remote cause of the injury to appellant while the proximate cause is definitely laid to others over whom these respondents had no control."

Following these rules in the instant case, the plaintiffs may not in one breath attribute all of the responsibility for the evils of which they complain to Pacific Gas & Electric Company's arbitrary use of its monopoly powers and in the next attribute the same evils to a combination and conspiracy among all of the defendants, at least in absence of pleading such specific facts as will explain the apparent inconsistency. (Hoekler v.

Ward, 105 C. A. (2) 615). The reasons why this must be so will appear more clearly by inference, at least, in that section of this Order dealing with proximate cause and target area.

A further internal contradiction in the complaint appears in that the plaintiffs have set forth exhibits which show specifically that long ago they bargained away the rights to sell and produce gas which they now generally allege the defendants have conspired to prevent them from exercising.

4. Absence of a Showing of an Unreasonable Restraint of Trade.

It is the defendants' next argument that it is incumbent upon the plaintiffs to plead facts showing the defendants to be guilty of an unreasonable restraint of trade, which they say has not been done. The plaintiffs counter with the arguments that the defendants' combination to restrain production is in violation of the literal terms of the act and ipso facto illegal, but that even if this not be true, a limitation of production is a "per se" violation under the doctrine of the rule of reason.

In considering these arguments, it is to be observed that cases decided under the Sherman Act and at the Common Law are applicable to cases arising under the Cartwright Act (Milton v. Hudson Sales Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,791], 152 C. A. (2) 418); except that Federal cases decided subsequent to the enactment of the Cartwright Act could not determine the meaning of terms employed in that Act but are persuasive only. (Peo. v. Building Maintenance Association [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,651], 41 Cal. (2) 719). It would seem to me to be true also that in those areas where there appear to be differences of opinion between the California Appellate Courts and the Federal Courts, this trial Court must take the position adopted by the California Courts.

The decisions of the California Courts are explicit to the effect that the Cartwright Act, like the Sherman Act, is a codification of the Common Law and that the plaintiffs must state a case actionable under the rule of reason. (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,493], 29 Cal. (2) 34; Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,937], 129 C. A. (2) 844). Therefore, generally the Cartwright Act may not be taken literally but must be interpreted in the light of the rule of reason. (Milton v. Hudson Sales Co., supra.)

The plaintiffs argue that with respect to businesses affected by the public interest, such as a gas utility, the rule of reason does not apply, citing Coombs v. Burke, 40 C. A. 8. In that case, the plaintiff's assignor, the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company, sold defendants certain appliances pursuant [to] a contract which required the defendants to buy gas only from the plaintiff. In reaching its decision, the Court said that where a contract relates to a business affected with the public interest, since no restraint however partial can be tolerated, the Court will not inquire into or consider the extent of the restriction imposed, citing Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396.

With respect to this case, it might be observed that the last quoted statement was unnecessary to the decision, since tying contracts have been struck down in innumerable situations. Secondly, the authority of the Gibbs case upon which the Court relied has been vitiated by the subsequent case of Twin City Co. v. Harding Glass Co., 283 U. S. 353. Thirdly, quite a different impact upon the economy is apparent in the Gibbs case as compared to this one. In Gibbs, the challenged contract in effect prevented the public from getting the benefit of competition between sellers of gas. In this one, the existence of Pacific Gas & Electric Company as a legal monopoly eliminates the concept of competition among sellers of gas. That which remains to the public interest is to insure that a plentiful supply of gas at the lowest possible cost is obtained by Pacific Gas & Electric Company and in turn sold to the public at the lowest possible price. It is the constitutional function of the Public Utilities Commission to see that this process is accomplished. Consequently, it would be foolhardy for the Court to strike down any challenged contract on the grounds that it was contrary to the literal terms of the Cartwright Act without examining into its apparent effect on the economy in the light of the circumstances.

Finally, a mere cursory reading of cases arising under the Commerce clause since the Gibbs case will reveal an increasing comprehension on the part of the courts that virtually all businesses affect the public interest more or less. The difference is of degree, not of kind. Hence, to make the applicability of the rule of reason depend on such a distinction is not sound.

The next leg of the plaintiffs' argument is that assuming the applicability of the rule of reason, a limitation of production is per se illegal. It is true that many cases, in discussing the type of arrangements which were frowned upon at Common Law, state that they consisted of agreements to limit production, fix prices, etc. (See for example, Apex Hosiery v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469). However, the plaintiffs have failed to cite any cases, Federal or State, which actually hold that a limitation of production is per se a violation of Anti-Trust Statutes. Neither counsel nor Court have found any California cases specifically on the problem. The fact that there are Federal cases which say that the limitation of production is a per se violation is not surprising in view of the loose language habitually used in Anti-Trust cases. In the instances where the proposition had to be decided, however, it has been held that a limitation of production is a violation of the Act only as such limitation tends to or is intended to fix prices or otherwise unreasonably restrain competition. (U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,342], 148 Fed. (2) 416), and that a combination to limit production is subject to scrutiny under the rule of reason. (Association of Window Glass Manufacturers v. U. S., 263 U. S. 403.) I hold that the rule of reason is applicable, and that the alleged restraints must be appraised from the viewpoint of their effects in the light of all the circumstances to see if they are unreasonable.

As to whether the limitation of production alleged in the instant case has any associated results, the plaintiffs say only, "the greater the supply the better price and service the public can expect to get." This is not an allegation which, even on a demurrer, the Court must accept as true and immutable without regard to circumstances. A digression in the discussion is imposed. Generally, conclusions of law (Griffin v. Colusa Co., 44 C. A. (2) 915) and statements contradictory to facts of which the Court may take judicial notice (Peo. v. Oakland Waterfront Co., 118 Cal. 234; Chavez v. Times-Mirror Co., 185 Cal. 20; Livermore v. Beal, 18 C. A. (2) 535) are not accepted as facts which must be assumed to be true in considering a pleading to which a demurrer has been interposed. I would assume that the plaintiffs' allegations hereinabove quoted fall in the same category, for whatever might be thought of the validity of the venerable Scot's economic theory in a market in which the factors of supply and demand have full play, such is not the instant situation. The Court judicially notices that there is but one purchaser of natural gas from the Rio Vista fields, and plaintiffs do not attack the legality of its monopoly; that importations of gas by that single purchaser are necessary for the present and future convenience of the public, as determined by the appropriate administrative agencies; and that, as conceded by the plaintiffs in their argument, the only apparent effect on the rate structure of the evils complained of in the instant case when considered in relation to the compulsory steady flow of imported gas and the seasonal fluctuation in demand is perhaps to reduce the rate to the public. It is my opinion, therefore, that the plaintiffs have not stated facts sufficient to bring themselves within the rule of reason so as to state a cause of action under the Cartwright Act.

5. PUBLIC INJURIES

A corollary to the rule of reason proposition and embodied in it is the qualification that to state a cause of action under the Cartwright Act it is necessary to demonstrate public injury. To put this in other words, the Cartwright Act, like the Sherman Act, in allowing multiplied damages to private individuals seeks only the more effective enforcement of prohibitions against practices which cause public injury. It follows that it is the public injury which is the gist of the action. (Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp, supra; Munter v. Eastman Kodak Co., 28 C. A. 660; Chicago Board of Trade v. U. S., 246 U. S. 238; Grogan v. Chaffee, 156 Cal. 611; D. Ghirardelli v. Hunsecher, 164 Cal. 344.) In his argument, plaintiffs' counsel conceded the rule to be that public injury is the sine qua non of actions under the Anti-Trust Act, but argued that the instant restrictions are shown by the complaint are to have adequate public disadvantages in that they discourage the exploration for and development of gas properties. This allegation in the pleadings is at best argumentative and is bolstered by no facts showing it to be true. Moreover, it is not the kind of public injury which is contemplated by the Act. The kind of public injury designed to be prevented is the kind delineated at Common Law and set forth in Apex Hosiery v. Leader, supra, as ". . . agreements to fix prices, divide marketing territories, apportion customers, restrict production and the like practices which tend to raise prices or otherwise take from buyers or customers the advantages which accrue to them from free competition in the market." This statement was cited with approval in Milton v. Hudson Sales, supra, and Schweizer v. Local Joint Executive Board [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,620], 121 C. A. (2) 45. (See also Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, supra.) The plaintiffs state, however, that the effect of Mandeville Farms v. American C. S. Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,251], 92 Lawyers Ed. 1328, 334 U. S. 219, is to establish that the sellers of a product may be the "public" as that term is used in the decisions on the anti-trust cases. I do not so read the case. It did establish that the Sherman Act did not confine its protection to consumers or to purchasers, but extended it to sellers. However, the majority opinion pointed out that the agreement had two effects, one upon the price received by the growers of sugar beets; the other, considering the nature of the industry, to reduce competition in the interstate distribution of sugar. A dissenting opinion was filed by Justice Frankfurter upon the basis that by amendment to the complaint the charge that the agreements affected prices of sugar in interstate commerce was omitted; but the majority decision in effect anticipated this dissent by stating that this amendment did not remove from the complaint numerous other allegations which they considered effectually repeated the charge in various forms.

To recapitulate, plaintiffs have not pleaded sufficient facts from which the public injury necessary to state a cause of action under the Cartwright Act can be inferred.

6. Proximate Cause and Target Area.

The defendants' demurrer incorporates the argument that the plaintiffs are not proper parties within the meaning of the Cartwright Act and have not shown damages of the nature recoverable thereunder. This argument poses a question which, like the controversy surrounding the application of the doctrine of the rule of reason and per se violations, is as yet seemingly unsettled. It appears from the early decisions that in the Federal Courts from the beginning there was a consciousness of the windfall features of the treble damage recovery together with a belief that a limit had to be drawn somewhere or businessmen would be faced with virtually unlimited liability. More recently, some of the courts have taken the attitude that Congress must have known what it was doing and have foreseen the possibilities of such liability but passed the Act anyway, because such liability would be created only by the defendants' wrongful acts; hence, the courts should not emasculate the Statutes and thereby encourage disregard for the law.

The existence of these opposing philosophies on the part of the several courts has produced unending confusion. In the effort to delineate limits of liability, the courts have attempted to define legal relationships in popular terms, which when subjected to critical analysis as to their import, turn out to be of little use as accurate criteria. For instance, in the lessor-lessee situation, it has been held that the lessor may not recover for the reason that he has not been injured in his "property", because it is the lessee, not the lessor, who has the "property". In the later Federal cases, like Steiner v. 20th Century Fox [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304], 232 Fed. (2) 190, and more particularly Congress Building Corporation v. Loews [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,725, 68,799], 246 Fed. (2) 587, which appear to be moving towards a more liberal application of the Sherman Act, injury to the "property" of lessors in a percentage rental situation is found in the reduction of the lessor's rentals and damage to the reversion. In the Steiner case there was present also the allegation that by unlawful combination of the lessee with others the lessor was forced to grant options for renewals of the lease without adequate consideration. To subject the whole problem to Hohfeldian analysis would be salutary, but in cruder terms, the question is: How many sticks in the bundle of a person's rights in relation to property must he have before he may complain of damage to those rights under the Anti-Trust Act?

This is another area in which it appears that the law as it has evolved in the courts of the State of California has diverged from the later developments in some of the Federal courts referred to hereinabove. This Court is in no position to assume that the California Courts will adopt the viewpoint of the Federal Courts, even if their reasoning appears persuasive. From the California cases, two propositions emerge: (1) That to recover double damages under the Cartwright Act the plaintiff's injury must have been proximately caused by the restrictions in trade or commerce carried out by the conspirators; and (2) The plaintiff must, himself, be in the same category of business or occupation as those in the unlawful combination and conspiracy; or to put it in other words, be in the target area of the conspiracy. (Krigbaum v. Sbabaro, 23 C. A. 427; ABC Distributing Corp. v. Distillers Distributing Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,844], 154 C. A. (2) 175.)

In Krigbaum v. Sbabaro, supra, the plaintiff, a real estate broker, alleged that he had secured a purchaser for certain wine grape lands for a client; that pursuant a conspiracy by the defendants to monopolize the manufacture and sale of wines, they frustrated the sale. The Court held that since there was no charge of conspiracy to prevent free competition in the general business of buying and selling real estate, plaintiff was not injured in his business or property within the meaning of the Cartwright Act, even though it appeared that he had a cause of action for the tortious interference with his contractual relations and it was conceded that the control of all wine growing lands would be an important if not an essential element in the monopolization of the wine industry.

In Clark v. Lesher, 106 C. A. (2) 403, a father and son were partners in a publishing firm. The complaint alleged that after the father died a rival publisher conspired with the administrator of the plaintiff's father's estate to have a receiver appointed by fraudulent means and then conspired with the latter to cease publication, thereby depreciating the assets so that they might be bought cheaply and plaintiffs be eliminated as a competitor. It was held that there was no cause of action stated for damage under the Cartwright Act in that such must be solely those resulting directly from the fact of the existence of the unlawful combination and flow from restrictions in trade or commerce fostered thereby. The Court said that the plaintiff's loss was the result of the fraudulent destruction of the value of the partnership property, which occurred before the conspiracy got to the point where by eliminating the competing paper they were in a position to create and maintain the restrictions. (See also Munter v. Eastman Kodak Co., supra.)

Applying the foregoing rules to the facts of the case at hand, insofar as they are revealed by the complaint, certain difficulties in analyzing for proximate cause are occasioned by the ambiguities therein. For instance, is plaintiff charging the reduction in royalties resulting from the limitation of production to the alleged combination or to the arbitrary policies of Pacific Gas & Electric Company?

It does appear from such facts as have been specifically pleaded by exhibit and otherwise that plaintiffs are neither producers nor sellers of natural gas, but have such rights only as are reserved to them through the leases executed many years ago. Hence, if it be assumed that plaintiffs could hurdle the proximate cause obstacle, they have not pleaded themselves within the "target area" in the sense prescribed by the strict California rules. We have here essentially the parallel of the Krigbaum situation, in an area where the Federal Courts historically have been less liberal in allowing recovery than in the commission broker or salesman relationship represented by Krigbaum. Therefore, plaintiffs have not stated a cause of action under the Cartwright Act.

7. BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Although counsel for the plaintiffs in oral argument stated that the pleadings made no attempt to state a cause of action for breach of contract, the question has been examined because if no claim under the Cartwright Act can be maintained, the problem of whether a cause of action for breach of contract can be stated will remain. Except for the Elliott lease, none of the pertinent agreements is set forth either in haec verba or by summary of the terms. The plaintiffs have not pointed out wherein any of the alleged practices of the defendants violate either express or implied terms of their agreements; consequently, at this point no cause of action for breach of contract is stated.

8. CLASS ACTION.

In the ninth cause of action the plaintiffs purport to set forth facts whereby to justify their representing all similarly situated owners of lands overlying the Rio Vista gas fields and ask that all owners be brought into the action as plaintiffs or defendants. In the third, fifth and seventh counts, the plaintiffs desire to represent the owners of "similarly situated" lands within particular units within the Rio Vista gas fields on the theory that they are entitled to represent them as co-tenants.

The latter contention may be disposed of quickly. It is settled that a co-tenant may sue on his own behalf and obtain relief which will completely vindicate his own rights and that incidentally the other co-tenants may profit thereby but he cannot represent the co-tenants.

With respect to the problem of the class action, the defendants contend that before the Court would be justified in fulfilling the named plaintiffs' desires to represent others similarly situated, it must be shown that there can be isolated a well defined class; that there is a well defined community of interest among all those whom the plaintiffs desire to represent as to questions of both fact and law; that there must be no conflict of interests between the members of the alleged class; and that it must appear eminently fair that those not appearing except as represented by the plaintiffs be bound by such decree as might be rendered.

The conditions of a class suit are set forth in Section 382, Code of Civil Procedure, the appropriate phrase of which reads: ". . . and when the question is one of a common or general interest, of many persons, or when the parties are numerous, and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all." In Barber v. California Employment Stabilization Commission, 130 C. A. (2) 7 @ 14, the court said, "It is certain that the minimum requirements of a class suit under this language are (1) there must exist a well defined community of interest in questions of law and fact between those bringing the suit and those claimed to be represented, and (2) the suing and non-suing groups must constitute a definitely ascertainable class. If the rights of each member of the class are dependent upon facts applicable only to him, there is not the requisite ascertainable class required for a representative suit. . ." (See also Bowles v. Superior Court, 44 Cal. (2) 574; 2 Witkin, California Procedure (1954) 1091 et seq and 1957 Supplement 21).

It does not seem to me that plaintiffs have presented a situation which would meet these tests. If I understand their premises correctly, they are that the value of properties overlying the natural gas fields and a fair apportionment of their income can be measured by reference to the thickness of the isopach over which they lie together with the porosity and permeability of the gas bearing sands within such isopach. Ignoring for a moment the other factors which the defendants contend may affect the productivity of a given well or series of wells, it may be observed that the very terms used by the plaintiffs in the context of their complaint are relative, and suggest that the assumption that one property can be precisely similar to another, cannot be indulged. The thickness of the isopach underneath properties varies gradually like the surface topography, not as if they were in geometrically arranged blocks. The sands therein are as likely as not to differ in their permeability and porosity. If the defendants' suggestions that the problem of identifying similar properties is further complicated by such things as breaks and shifts in the strata, pockets of extraneous material that reduce the volume of storage or form a barrier to the flow of gas and other conditions too numerous to mention, it appears obvious that the likelihood of finding a sufficient community of interest among all those whom plaintiffs seek to represent is nil.

It would appear that the plaintiffs recognize the general nature of the legal tests for proper class actions, for in their brief, reference is made to Witkin's discussion and to the case of Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses, 32 Cal. (2) 833, in which it is said, ". . . it has been uniformly held that there must be a well defined 'community of interest' in the questions of law and fact involved. . .", and which held that the following questions of fact peculiar to each individual made the case inappropriate as a class action: whether each individual was a person over the age of twenty-one years; presented self and demanded admittance; tendered price; and was wrongfully refused admission. (See also Barber v. California Employment Stabilization Commission, supra.)

In the instant case, the plaintiffs request that the Court retain jurisdiction to determine defendants' liability, then assert that it will cost no less than Three Hundred Thousand Dollars ($300,000.00) in engineering fees alone to ascertain the facts bearing on each individual landowner's rights to a recovery of damages. But each such individual's rights and liabilities will turn on a variety of factors, legal and factual, peculiar to himself. Among them are his contract, his special damages, if any, his physical location, the subsurface conditions, and other variants which may be inferred from the complaint and from facts of which the Court may take judicial notice. Moreover, it would appear that whether any given person would profit in the long run from an upsetting of existing contractual arrangements is so highly speculative as to suggest that it would be manifestly unfair for the Court either to assume that their interests would be properly protected in a class action or to force them in as plaintiffs or defendants. I think that each is entitled to exercise his own judgment in the premises and join or not join as he sees fit.

9. The Demurrer of the Non-Contracting Parties.

Monterey, Superior and Texas Company point out that there is nothing in the complaint to show that any of them have any contracts of any kind with any named plaintiff and that their responsibility therefore is confined to such responsibility as they may have under the Cartwright Act. In view of the remarks above concerning the purported class actions, this contention is sound.

10. The Special Demurrers.

The defendants correctly point out a number of defects in the pleadings which are susceptible to correction by special demurrer. Among them are:

1. The uncertainty resulting from the use of the plural form of the word, "defendant", aggravated by the inconsistency of this useage with the specific charges against Pacific Gas & Electric Company;

2. The uncertainty arising from the use of the word "conspiracy" if the plaintiffs do not confine themselves to an anti-trust action; i. e., conspiracy to commit a tort? If so, what tort? If to interfere with a contractual relation, what term of what contract?

3. Similar to (1), the apparent inconsistency in the use of the word "monopoly" in the context of the alleged conspiracy;

4. The allegations as to what plaintiffs should be getting and their inconsistency with the terms of the incorporated exhibits;

5. The casual reference to the plaintiffs as the "owners" or "sellers" of gas;

6. The meaning of the term "potential commercial production" in the complaint;

7. The reference to "combinations and agreements". (See Bower v. Ventura, etc., 45 Cal. (2) 276; Bernstein v. Piller, 98 C. A. (2) 441.)

11. Permission to Amend.

The major question presented by the case in its present condition is the question of whether or not the plaintiffs ought to be given permission to amend their complaint. The defendants argue strenuously that considering the pleadings in the Federal District Court, this is the plaintiffs' seventh try at stating a cause of action and that considering the ability of their counsel, they ought to have been able to state a valid cause of action by this time if they have one. It may be observed, however, that in none of the previous proceedings either in the State Courts or the Federal Courts, did the demurrers or motions of the defendants result in a court ruling except pursuant the stipulations of counsel. It may be that the plaintiffs are entitled to the independent views of an impartial court as a guide before being absolutely foreclosed from further effort properly to state a cause of action. Their previous stipulations may have been dictated by caution rather than conviction.

The real crux of the problem is whether the plaintiffs can state a cause of action. One facet of this question is posed by the Statute of Limitations. The Federal cases are persuasive authority to the effect that even in the Federal Courts, in actions arising under the Sherman Act, the State Statutes prevail. (See Steiner v. 20th Century Fox, supra; Congress Building Corp. v. Loews;) and that the applicable Statute in California is three (3) years. (Steiner v. 20th Century Fox, supra.) These same cases are authority for the proposition that it is the last overt act of the defendants which causes the damages as distinguished from the time of the incidence of such damages which tolls the Statute. In the Congress case, this overt act was found in the continuance of the policy of running first subsequent run pictures instead of first run pictures at the plaintiff's theater. I suppose that in the instant case, although the leases were executed many years ago, overt acts such as the shutting down of plaintiffs' wells may be considered as operating to toll the Statute.

Other questions concerning the plaintiffs' capacity to state a cause of action may be inferred from the foregoing discussion of the several arguments advanced by the defendants. I must confess that in the present state of the pleadings, viewed in the light of those matters of which the Court must take judicial notice, I am at a loss to perceive how the plaintiffs can make out a cause of action under the Cartwright Act. There may be considerable argument about their right to shift to charges of breach of unnamed contracts, or undesignated portions of named contracts, based on the proposition that they are not entitled to change their cause of action by amendment. (Cyr v. White, 83 C. A. (2) 22.) However, they may be permitted to shift legal theory on the same general state of facts, (Clark v. Lesher, supra) and buried in the pleadings may be some of the elements of such a case. The court's attention has been drawn to one such filed in Sacramento County. With regard to the anti-trust theory, the whole field is so complex and fluid that the Court hesitates to assume that even such highly competent counsel as have appeared to argue and brief this case have thought of and mentioned every possibility that might be conceived if more time were permitted for study and reflection.

In reaching the conclusion that the plaintiffs ought to be allowed opportunity to amend, the Court is not unmindful of their violations of certain elementary considerations affecting good pleading. It will be expected that conclusions of law, argumentative matter, and patent or calculated ambiguities will be avoided.

For the foregoing reasons, the general and special demurrers of the defendants and each of them are sustained with leave to amend, however, within sixty (60) days hereof. Under the peculiar circumstances, rulings on the motions to strike will be deferred pending the amendment of the complaint.

Case No. 1296 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Agreements with Non-Labor Organization—Restricting Disposition of Labor-Saving Device.—Two plasterers' labor unions were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into agreements with any manufacturer of plastering machines which have the effect of (1) preventing or restricting the lease, sale, or other disposition of plastering machines or (2) prescribing or otherwise regulating the terms or conditions under which plastering machines can be leased, sold, or otherwise disposed of by manufacturers or other persons. The decree also enjoined the unions from inducing, coercing, or knowingly permitting their local affiliates to enter into agreements with contractors which have the effect of precluding the contractors from leasing, purchasing, or otherwise acquiring plastering machines manufactured by persons who make such machines available to contractors employing or not employing members of the unions.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Cooperation with Labor Unions—Agreements Restricting Disposition of Labor-Saving Device.—A manufacturer of plastering machines was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into agreements with any other person which (1) prevents or restricts the lease, sale, or other disposition of plastering machines, (2) requires the manufacturer to impose any terms or conditions upon a purchaser or lessee of plastering machines, (3) requires a purchaser or lessee of plastering machines to employ any person or class of persons designated by the manufacturer to operate such machines, (4) requires a purchaser or lessee to operate plastering machines acquired from the manufacturer in compliance with the working rules and regulations of any labor union, and (5) prevents a purchaser or lessee, after payment of the full sale price of a plastering machine, from selling, transferring, assigning, subletting, or otherwise disposing of the machine. The decree also prohibited two plasterers' labor unions from entering into agreements with manufacturers of plastering machines which have the effect of restricting the sale or lease of such machines.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.605, 2005.760.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Sales and Leases—Conveying Title to Machines—Offers to Sell.—A manufacturer of plastering machines was ordered by a consent decree to (1) send a bill of sale, for no additional consideration, conveying title to plastering machines to certain individuals and firms, (2) cancel all prior agreements with those individuals and firms regarding such machines, and (3) offer to sell, on non-discriminatory terms, plastering machines to all persons or firms to whom it had refused to sell or lease such machines since a certain date.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8421.

Final Judgment

[Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons Int'l Assn. of the U. S. and Canada]

JOSEPH SAMUEL PERRY, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 29, 1956, the defendant Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association of the United States and Canada having filed its answer denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and said defendant, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party signatory hereto with respect to any such issue:

Now, therefore, before the taking of any testimony, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties signatory hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims for relief against the defendant signatory hereto under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Plastering machine" means any mechanical device which is actuated by gas or electricity and sprays a plaster mix on walls or ceilings;

(B) "Contractor" means any person, firm or corporation which regularly enters into contracts for and engages in the performance of plastering work, employing workmen and purchasing equipment and materials therefor;

(C) "Defendant Union" means defendant Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association of the United States and Canada, with offices located at 335 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland 14, Ohio.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to defendant Union and to each of its successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Prohibited Agreements]

Defendant Union is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Entering into, adhering to, or enforcing any contract, agreement or understanding with any manufacturer of plastering machines which has the purpose or effect of

(1) preventing, limiting or restricting the lease, sale or other disposition of any plastering machines, or

(2) dictating, prescribing, or otherwise regulating the terms or conditions under which any such plastering machines may be leased, sold or otherwise disposed of by any manufacturer or any other person;

(B) Inducing, coercing or knowingly permitting any local union affiliated with defendant Union to enter into any contract, agreement or understanding with any contractor having the purpose or effect of precluding the contractor from leasing, purchasing or otherwise acquiring a plastering machine manufactured by a person who makes plastering machines available to contractors employing, or not employing members of defendant's Union.

V

[Notice of Judgment]

Defendant Union is ordered and directed within sixty (60) days after the entry of this Final Judgment, to serve by mail upon each local union affiliated therewith, a conformed copy of this Final Judgment.

VI

[Publication]

Defendant Union is further ordered and directed to publish in The Plasterer and Cement Mason, 335 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland 14, Ohio, and in all trade journals and publications which have carried advertisements of the defendant at any time between January 1, 1950, and the date of the entry of this Judgment, a summary statement of the Judgment entered herein; provided, however, that forty-five (45) days prior to said publication, a copy shall be made available to the Midwest Office, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, who shall have the right to make any reasonable changes as to form and additions or deletions to said summary statement prior to publication.

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant Union, mailed to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access during regular office hours to those parts of the books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant which relate to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of the defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, to interview its officers or employees, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon such written request, defendant Union shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

IX

[Effective Date of Judgment]

This Final Judgment shall become effective thirty (30) days after entry herein.

Final Judgment

[Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers Int'l Union of America]

JOSEPH SAMUEL PERRY, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 29, 1956, the defendant Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers International Union of America having filed its answer denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and said defendant, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party signatory hereto with respect to any such issue:

Final Judgment

[Plastering Development Center, Inc.]

Joseph Samuel Perry, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 29, 1956, the defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., formerly E-Z-ON Corporation, having filed its answer denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and said defendant having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party signatory hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, therefore, before the taking of any testimony, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties signatory hereto, it is hereby, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims for relief against the defendant signatory hereto under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Plastering machine" means any mechanical device which is actuated by gas or electricity and sprays a plaster mix on walls or ceilings;

(B) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, corporation, association, firm, trustee or other legal entity;

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., and to its subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Prohibited Agreements]

Defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to or enforcing any contract, agreement or understanding with any other person, directly or indirectly:

(A) Preventing, limiting or restricting the lease, sale or other disposition of any plastering machine, except that as a manufacturing licensee defendant may agree with a patent holding licensor to lease only and not to sell plastering machines produced by it under license agreement with said patent holder;

(B) Requiring said defendant to impose any terms or conditions upon a purchaser, lessee or other transferee of any plastering machine;

(C) Requiring a purchaser, lessee or other transferee of any plastering machine to employ any person or class of persons designated by defendant to operate a plastering machine;

(D) Requiring or attempting to require a purchaser, lessee or other transferee to operate a plastering machine acquired from said defendant in compliance with the working rules and regulations of any labor union or association;

(E) Preventing or attempting to prevent a purchaser, lessee or other transferee after payment of the full sale price of a plastering machine from selling, transferring, assigning, subletting, or otherwise disposing of said plastering machine.

[Specific Relief]

(A) Defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., is ordered and directed, within sixty (60) days after the entry of this Final Judgment, to send by certified mail to each individual and firm listed in the appendix attached hereto [not reproduced] except those who to said defendant's knowledge have disposed of plastering machines listed therein, a bill of sale for no additional consideration (a) conveying to said individual or firm all right, title and interest to said plastering machine; and (b) cancelling all prior agreements between said defendant and said individual or firm, regarding said plastering machine.

(B) Said defendant is further ordered and directed within ninety (90) days from the date of the entry of this Final Judgment to send by certified mail a notification to all persons, firms or corporations to whom said defendant, so far as its records show, refused to sell or lease its plastering machines, at any time since January 1, 1950, offering to sell to said persons, firms or corporations on non-discriminatory terms defendant's plastering machines.

(C) Said defendant is further ordered and directed, within one hundred twenty (120) days from the entry of this Final Judgment to furnish plaintiff a carbon copy of each bill of sale mailed pursuant to this Final Judgment and United States Postal receipts indicating delivery, or attempted delivery, of said bills of sale.

VI

[Publication]

Defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., is further ordered and directed to publish in all plastering trade journals and publications which have carried said defendant's plastering machine advertisements at any time between January 1, 1950 and the date of the entry of this Final Judgment, a summary statement of the Final Judgment entered herein; provided, however, that not less than forty-five (45) days prior to said publication a copy shall be made available to plaintiff herein who shall have the right to make any reasonable changes as to form and additions or deletions to said summary statement prior to publication, and reasonable directions as to position in said publication.

VII

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., made to its principal offices, be permitted:

(a) Access during the office hours of such defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matter contained in this Final Judgment; and

(b) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matter.

Upon such written request, defendant Plastering Development Center, Inc., shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of said Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

IX

This Final Judgment shall become effective thirty (30) days after entry herein.

In the Illinois Appellate Court, First District. Nos. 47475 and 47476, respectively. Decided December 8, 1958. Released January 26, 1959.

Interlocutory Appeals from Circuit Court, Cook County.

Illinois Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Selling Below Fair Trade Prices—Non-Contracting Dealer—Knowledge of Fair Trade Contracts at Time of Acquisition of Products—Affirmative Defense.—Liquor distributors' complaints alleging that retailers sold fair trade products at less than fair trade prices were not defective in failing to allege that the retailers, at the time they purchased the merchandise, had knowledge of the fair trade contracts between the distributors and other retailers. Although the complaints did not allege that the retailers had knowledge of the fair trade contracts at the time they acquired the goods, the complaints did allege that the retailers had such knowledge at the time they made the sales. Also, the retailers did not disclaim knowledge of the fair trade contracts at the time they acquired the merchandise. Lack of knowledge is an affirmative defense; if the retailers purchased the fair trade products without knowledge of the fair trade contracts, they should have interposed that fact as a defense.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3258.15, 3268.

Fair Trade—Enforcement—Right to Injunctive Relief—Absence of Provision for Injunctive Relief in Illinois Fair Trade Act.—In an action by liquor distributors charging retailers with selling fair trade products at less than fair trade prices, injunctive relief was held to be an appropriate remedy, although the Illinois Fair Trade Act contains no specific provision for such relief. The possessor of a right, where he is without an adequate remedy at law, has the privilege of seeking equitable relief regardless of whether the right has its origin in the common law or in a statute.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3350.15.

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Contracts—Validity—Vendor-Vendee Relationship Between Parties to Contracts—Ownership of Trade-Marks—Sufficiency of Consideration.—Liquor distributors, on the basis of their fair trade contracts with various retailers, were entitled to temporary injunctions against retailers who allegedly sold below fair trade prices, although the distributors did not sell directly to retailers and were not the owners of the trade-marks for which they sought protection. The Illinois Fair Trade Act designates the party who may stipulate resale prices only as the "vendor." The Act applies not only to contracts between the parties, but to any contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity; the object of the fair trade contract is to protect the trade-mark, brand, or name of the producer or owner, regardless of who makes the sale. Therefore, fair trade contracts may be made between a distributor and a retailer who do not trade directly with each other. Also, the contracts were not lacking in consideration since the retailers secured for their benefit the establishment of the fair trade program. The court, in ruling on whether or not the trial court had been justified in issuing a temporary injunction, did not reach an ultimate decision on the above questions, but determined only that there was a reasonable probability of their ultimate resolution in favor of the distributors.

[Fair Trade Action]

Mr. Justice Robson delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]: This is an interlocutory appeal. The two plaintiffs, Seagram Distillers, Inc. and Browne-Vintners Co., Inc., brought separate suits in the Circuit Court of Cook County against a total of nineteen defendants, all of whom are engaged in the retail liquor business in Chicago, or its immediate vicinity, seeking equitable relief under Section 2 of the Illinois Fair Trade Act. The trial court denied the motions of defendants to dismiss the complaints, as amended, and granted the motions of plaintiffs for temporary injunctions prohibiting the various defendants from advertising, offering for sale, or selling products distributed by plaintiffs at less than the prices stipulated by plaintiffs under certain contracts entered into by plaintiffs pursuant to the Fair Trade Act of Illinois. Defendants appealed from these orders and in this court the appeals were consolidated.

[Contentions on Appeal]

Defendants contend that the temporary injunctions should not have been granted because (1) the complaints failed to allege that defendants acquired the merchandise in controversy with knowledge that it was subject to the provisions of fair trade contracts; (2) that injunctive relief is not an appropriate remedy for violations of the Illinois Fair Trade Act, and (3) that the complaints based upon the contracts in question do not allege sufficient facts to grant the temporary injunctions.

[Fair Trade Violations Charged]

The complaints allege that plaintiffs are engaged in the business of selling and distributing alcoholic beverages throughout the United States under certain trademarks and brand names; that plaintiffs are the sole distributors of such branded products in Illinois; that plaintiffs are parties to Fair Trade contracts with a number of retailers in Illinois; that the prices stipulated by plaintiffs in accordance with these contracts were made known generally to the trade and particularly to defendants; that notwithstanding the provisions of the contracts and the demands of plaintiffs, the defendants refused to discontinue selling or offering for sale products distributed by plaintiffs at less than the stipulated prices. The complaints conclude with allegations that the conduct of defendants has done irreparable damage to the good will of plaintiffs and contain prayers for injunctive relief, costs, and such further relief as the court may deem just.

[Fair Trade Contracts]

Attached to each complaint as exhibit "A" is a copy of a contract between one of the plaintiffs and a retail liquor dealer. The contracts are virtually identical except for the parties and provide, in substance, that the retailer will not sell, advertise, or offer for sale in Illinois branded products distributed by the plaintiffs at a resale price which differs from that which the plaintiff may stipulate by schedule from time to time. The contracts designate plaintiffs as owners and provide that the various price schedules shall be considered a part of the contract.

The pertinent portions of the Illinois Fair Trade Act provide as follows (Ill. Rev. Stat., 1957, chap. 121½, pars. 188, 189):

> "No contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or content of which bears, the trade mark, brand or name of the producer or owner of such commodity and which is in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others shall be deemed in violation of any law of the State of Illinois by reason of any of the following provisions which may be contained in such contract:
> "(1) That the buyer will not resell such commodity except at the price stipulated by the vendor.
> "(2) That the producer or vendee of a commodity require upon the sale of such commodity to another, that such purchaser agree that he will not, in turn, resell except at the price stipulated by such producer or vendee. * * *
> "Willfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of section 1 of this Act, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

[Knowledge of Fair Trade Contracts]

The defendants, with reference to their first contention that the complaints do not allege that defendants had knowledge of the contracts between plaintiffs and other retailers at the time of purchasing products from plaintiffs for resale, argue that such an omission from the complaints was a fatal error, while plaintiffs urge that any unawareness on the part of defendants was a matter peculiarly within their knowledge and could at best constitute an affirmative defense. While the complaints do not allege that defendants had knowledge of plaintiffs' fair trade contracts or the prices stipulated pursuant thereto when they acquired the merchandise in question, they do allege that defendants had such knowledge at the time of making the sales. Defendants do not disclaim knowledge of plaintiffs' fair trade contracts at the time they acquired their merchandise. Lack of knowledge is an affirmative defense. James Heddon's Sons v. Callender, 29 F. Supp. 579. The defendants did not interpose such a defense. Had they purchased without knowledge they should have so stated. This they failed to do.

[Injunctive Relief]

We must next consider defendants' second contention of whether injunctive relief is an appropriate remedy for an alleged violation of the Illinois Fair Trade Act. Although the propriety of such relief has never been directly in issue in this State, our courts have tacitly approved it heretofore. See Sunbeam Corp. v. Central Housekeeping Mart, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,789], 2 Ill. App. 2d 543 (1954); Old Fort Dearborn Wine and Liquor Co. v. Old Dearborn Distributing Co., 287 Ill. App. 187 (1936); Seagram Corp. v. Old Dearborn Co., 363 Ill. 610 (1936); Triner Corporation v. McNeil, 363 Ill. 559 (1936); Triner Corporation v. Oransky [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,143], 365 Ill. 19 (1936). In Triner Corporation v. McNeil, supra, the court noted that the propriety of the relief was not being assailed. Nor has it been assailed in any subsequent case under the Illinois Act. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has given approval to the remedy. In Economy Food & Liquor Co. v. Frankfort Distillers Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,334], 232 F. 2d 410 (7th Cir. 1956), the court affirmed the dismissal of a retailer's complaint for a counter-injunction against a distiller on the ground that the complaint constituted an indirect attack on an injunctional order granted in favor of the distiller under the Fair Trade Act of Illinois.

[Absence of Provisions for Injunctive Relief]

The defendants rely on Calvert Distillers Co. v. Wish, 1958 CCH TRADE CASES, par. 68921 (D. C., N. D. Ill., 1957), in which, under similar circumstances, injunctive relief was denied. We have scrutinized that opinion and find in it no support for the argument of the defendants. While it is true that the court denied equitable relief on the basis of plaintiff's failure to exhaust whatever legal remedy might have been available to it under the Illinois Act, the opinion rests on the court's discretion to grant or deny injunctive relief and the court's finding that the alleged damages were too speculative to satisfy the requisite jurisdictional amount. Nowhere does the opinion suggest that the Illinois Act precludes equitable relief in fair trade cases. The defendants, however, insist that injunctive relief is proper in fair trade cases only where the particular act contains specific provision for such relief. The Illinois Act contains no such provision, although the acts of Idaho, Maine, Michigan, New Hampshire, Ohio, Rhode Island, and Washington do. In this respect and others the language of the South Carolina Act is similar to that of the Illinois Act. In Miles Laboratories v. Seignious, 30 F. Supp. 549 (D. C., E. D., S. Car. 1939), the court approved the enforcement of that act by injunction as follows (p. 555):

> "A statute normally creates or defines a right, it may or may not provide a remedy; but the courts are never powerless to enforce a right because of doubt as to the nature of a just remedy. The entire process of injunction in equity, and in fact the courts of chancery themselves, first grew out of the inability of courts of common law of England to grant appropriate relief in certain cases, thereby suggesting to litigants, who were possessed of a right without a remedy, to apply to the King for relief; and thereupon the King delegated to his chancellor the power to grant equitable remedies, including injunction. When any right exists, and a proper showing is made that the possessor of that right is without adequate remedy at law, he has the privilege of seeking equitable relief, and this is true regardless of whether the right has its origin in the common law, or in a statute. The power to administer injunctive relief stems back to the peculiar origin and development of the courts of chancery; it is not ordinarily a statutory grant of power to the court.
> "But while no authority within the statute is necessary for the administration of such relief, yet, in this statute it so happens that the legislature has indicated that such relief is intended. It defines certain conduct as 'unfair competition' and when it used those words, it used words that have a technical meaning. It has long been recognized that injunction is a proper remedy against unfair competition."

We are in accord with the views advanced by the District Court in South Carolina and can find no merit in the argument that the Illinois Fair Trade Act may be enforced only by an action at law for damages.

[Temporary Injunction—Necessary Showing]

Defendants' third contention is whether plaintiffs were entitled to temporary injunctions on the basis of the facts set forth in the complaints. It is well settled that a party seeking a temporary injunction need only show in his complaint that he raises a fair question as to the existence of the right he seeks to enforce and that the probability of his ultimate success is sufficient to justify a preservation of the status quo pending the final determination of that question. Schuler v. Wolf, 372 Ill. 386, 389 (1939); Nestor Johnson Mfg. Co. v. Gold- blatt, 371 Ill. 570, 574 (1939); Chicago Motor Coach Co. v. Budd, 346 Ill. App. 385, 390 (1952). Do the contracts upon which plaintiffs rely present a justifiable issue under the Fair Trade Act of Illinois with some probability of success on the part of plaintiffs?

Defendants argue that the contracts in question may not be employed to invoke the protection of the Act for three reasons: (1) that the contracts do not contain the immediate vendor-vendee relationship required by the Act; (2) that the contracts lack mutuality and consideration; and (3) that the plaintiffs are not the proper parties to enter into such contracts inasmuch as they are neither the producers nor the owners of the trade-marked products. Each of the foregoing arguments presents a legal question which has not yet been resolved in this State. We need not reach an ultimate decision of those questions at this time, but must determine only if on the basis of authority on which plaintiffs rely there is a reasonable probability of the ultimate resolution of those questions in their favor.

[Vendor-Vendee Relationship]

There appears to be ample authority in support of plaintiffs' contention that the contracts in controversy fall within the scope of the Act although there is no vendor-vendee relationship between the parties to the contracts and plaintiffs are exclusive distributors rather than the outright owners of the trade-marks or brand names for which protection is sought. In General Electric Co. v. Kimball Jewelers [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,291], 333 Mass. 665, 132 N. E. 2d 652 (1956), the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts held that the provisions of the Massachusetts Act identical to those of the Illinois Act now under consideration permitted a producer to enter into a fair trade contract with a retailer, although the producer traded only with wholesalers who in turn supplied retailers with the merchandise in question. There the court said (132 N. E. 2d at 655):

> "The contract gives the dealer the benefit of the price support afforded by General Electric's price lists—not only the one attached to the contract but any subsequent ones while the contract is in effect. The furnishing of a current price list is the mainspring that continues the operation of the scheme. See Doyle v. Dixon, 97 Mass. 208, 213; Wit v. Commercial Hotel Co., 253 Mass. 564, 572-573, 149 N. E. 609. It was held in Chandler, Gardner & Williams, Inc. v. Reynolds, 250 Mass. 309, 145 N. E. 476, which was a suit in equity to enforce the restrictive provisions of a contract of employment where the employer reserved to itself the exclusive privilege of discharging the employee, that the contract of employment did not lack consideration. It has been settled that contracts similar to the one introduced in evidence in this case are supported by sufficient consideration. Houbigant Sales Corp. v. Woods Cut Rate Store, 123 N. J. Eq. 40, 43-44, 47-48, 196 A. 683; General Electric Co. v. Masters, Inc., 307 N. Y. 229, 120 N. E. 2d 802, appeal dismissed sub nomine; Masters, Inc. v. General Electric Co., 348 U. S. 892, 75 S. Ct. 215, 99 L. Ed. 701; General Electric Co. v. S. Klein-on-the-Square, Inc., Sup., 121 N. Y. S. 2d 37; Seagram Distillers Co. v. Corenswet, Tenn., 281 S. W. 2d 657, 661. Williston, Contracts (Rev. ed.) s. 102. The execution of the contract by the dealer might well have been thought to be a benefit to him, otherwise he would not have signed it. He might well have thought that the making of the contract would tend to free him from cut rate competition, or lessen the competition, in one branch of his business and that the more signers the plaintiff secured in the trade area served by the dealer the better it would be for the dealer. The dealer executed the contract freely and voluntarily and secured for his own benefit the establishment of a fair trade program."

And in Norman M. Morris Corporation v. Hess Brothers, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,660], 243 F. 2d 274 (3rd Cir. 1957), the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that an exclusive distributor for the entire United States could enter into valid fair trade contracts with retailers in Pennsylvania. The court noted that the Pennsylvania Act, like the Illinois Act, designates the party who may stipulate resale prices only as "vendor." There the court found support in decisions by the courts of New York, New Jersey and California, but relied particularly on the opinions of the United States Supreme Court and the Illinois Supreme Court in the Old Dearborn and Triner cases, emphasizing that in those cases a distributor and not the producer or owner of the trade-mark had stipulated the resale price.

In General Electric Co. v. Kimball Jewelers, supra, the Massachusetts court also held that there was sufficient consideration to support the contract. On this point the court reasoned as follows (132 N. E. 2d 656):

"A fair trade contract may be made between a producer and a retailer who do not trade directly with each other. The statute applies not only to contracts between the parties, but to any contract 'relating to the sale or resale of a commodity', whether the sale is between the parties or not, because the object is to protect the trade mark, brand or name of the producer or owner, whoever makes the sale. General Electric Co. v. Masters, Inc., 307 N. Y. 229, 120 N. E. 2d 802, appeal dismissed sub nomine; Masters, Inc. v. General Electric Co., 348 U. S. 892, 75 S. Ct. 215, 99 L. Ed. 701; General Electric Co. v. Sabreen, D. C., 128 F. Supp. 900. Seagram Distillers Co. v. Corenswet, Tenn., 281 S. W. 2d 657."

The contracts in the instant case provide that the "owner" reserves the right to change the schedule of prices from time to time upon five days' written notice to the retailer.

[Temporary Injunctions Justified]

We believe that the foregoing cases and the cases cited therein give the plaintiffs a tenable position which justified the issuance of the temporary injunctions by the trial court.

[Constitutional Question]

We decline to pass on the constitutional question raised by defendants. This court has jurisdiction on an interlocutory appeal to review constitutional questions. People v. Kostaken, 10 Ill. 2d 549, 550 (1957); Webb v. Marozas, 268 Ill. App. 338 (1932); Klever Shampay Karpet Kleaners, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 238 Ill. App. 291 (1925). However, we do not believe that the trial court in issuing the temporary orders passed on any constitutional defense which might be available to defendants in a trial on the merits. Orders affirmed.

[¶ 69,250] United States v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, Screen Gems, Inc., and Universal Pictures Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 132-86. Filed January 22, 1959.

Case No. 1378 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Price Fixing Agreement—Legality—Determination of Competitive Relationship Between Parties to Agreement.—An agreement under which motion picture producer A granted a wholly-owned subsidiary of motion picture producer B an exclusive license to distribute certain of its pre-1948 films for television exhibition could not be adjudged illegal per se under the Sherman Act on a motion for summary judgment. It was contended that motion picture producer B, through its wholly-owned subsidiary, undertook the television distribution of motion picture producer A's films on terms and conditions which were formulated jointly by the two producers, and that such an arrangement constituted a price fixing agreement between competitors which was illegal per se under the Sherman Act. While not every agreement affecting prices is illegal per se, it has been held that agreements between competitors to fix prices are illegal per se. However, before the instant agreement could be classified as illegal per se, it had to be determined whether or not the two producers were competitors in the distribution of films embraced within the agreement. This required a consideration of the nature and type of their products and the demands and requirements of the market in which those products were offered. Since this required a determination of issues of fact, summary judgment was denied.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Acquisitions of Stock or Assets—Enforcement of Section 7, Clayton Act—Department of Justice—Preliminary Injunction—Nature of Relief—Proof.—In a Government action charging that a wholly-owned subsidiary of a motion picture producer acquired the exclusive television distribution rights of another producer's pre-1948 films in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, the Government's motion for a preliminary injunction to restrain the subsidiary and its parent from further sub-licensing films under the agreement by which the films were acquired was denied. Before a Section 7 violation can be found, there must be a showing of a reasonable probability of foreclosure or substantial lessening of competition in a substantial share of the relevant market. In view of the fact that the two producers never competed in the television market and other evidence, it could not be said that the combination of the two producers' films in unified distribution by the subsidiary limited to specific pre-1948 films was likely to result in an undue reduction in the number of firms selling programming material for television showing. An injunction in the form requested would drastically interfere with the orderly release of films under the agreement. This would result in losses which might never be recouped. It was not until eight months after the Government first questioned the legality of the acquisition agreement that it brought suit, and it was not until six months after the suit was filed that temporary injunctive relief was sought. There was little likelihood that a serious detriment to the public interest would ensue, in view of the fact that the suit would be tried shortly. The defendants had raised issues which seriously questioned the Government's theory of suit, and success by the Government was far from clear. However, the motion was partially granted to maintain the status quo. The subsidiary would be restrained from sub-licensing additional films at a rate greater than 50 in any six-month period.

[Nature of Action]

The Court [Ryan, District Judge, In full text]: This civil anti-trust suit, filed by the United States on April 10, 1958 under Section 4 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 4) and Section 15 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 26) alleges that the defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 1) and Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 18). The Government charges that these violations find origin in the making of and performance under the contract between Universal Pictures Company, Incorporated, and Screen Gems Incorporated executed on August 2, 1957 and dated as of July 1, 1957. The contract, described by the parties to it as the "Distribution Agreement", grants to Screen Gems, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, an exclusive license to distribute for exhibition over television certain listed and specified pre-August 1948 feature films of Universal.

Concurrently, Columbia, Universal and Screen Gems entered into a "Guaranty Agreement" wherein Columbia guaranteed to Universal the full, faithful and timely performance of the "Distribution Agreement" by Screen Gems, and by which Columbia further warranted, represented and agreed that Screen Gems would continue to be, during the term of the "Distribution Agreement", "the sole and exclusive licensee of the right to distribute for television exhibition substantially all motion pictures not constituting 'new motion pictures' . . . ever produced by Columbia or released for television by Columbia."

[Government Motions]

The suit comes before us on motions made by the Government for partial summary judgment adjudging that the defendants, by the making of these agreements and performance under them, have violated and are violating Section 1 of the Sherman Act; the Government also asks for an injunction pendente lite. The injunctive relief presently sought would not prevent the defendants from performance of sub-licensing agreements covering Universal films which have already been entered into by Screen Gems;

the Government now seeks only to enjoin defendants from further sub-licensing these pre-August 1948 Universal feature films during the pendency of the action.

[Distribution Agreement]

The contract between Universal and Screen Gems consists of 57 printed pages of apparently carefully drawn and considered provisions. The agreement deals with "all of the feature photoplays released for theatrical exhibition in the United States by or through Universal or its predecessors under the respective titles listed" in two schedules, "A" and "B", which are annexed to and are part of the agreement. The Universal pre-August 1948 feature films subject to the agreement number about 600 of which 586 had not been previously released for television exhibition; some of them are allegedly of poor quality, of little or no value and unusable in the television market. The total number of usable Universal films did not exceed 535.

In August 1957, prior to the agreement, the inventory of Screen Gems had in it about 950 films, comprising the feature films of Columbia and those of the Hygo Television Films, Inc. The Hygo pictures numbered about 450; they practically had seen their run of the television market; they had been telecast numerous times (15 or more) and were of inferior quality as compared with the Columbia and Universal productions.

The Columbia feature film catalogue consisted of no more than 500 pre-August 1948 productions, and 247 had been in national release for varying periods of time and had produced about 62% of their projected and estimated total income potential.

The Government states that Screen Gems "has available for future release 211 pre-1948 Columbia features and 434 pre-August 1948 Universal features." To date, 152 Universal pre-August 1948 feature films have been placed in distribution by Screen Gems under the agreement of August 2, 1957. There are left 383 Universal feature films still to be distributed under the agreement. This was not a release for distribution with unholy haste, when we consider that Section V.6 of the agreement obligates Screen Gems to release a minimum of 78 Universal feature films per year.

To date since the agreement, a total of 249 programs have been released by Screen Gems in four separate package offerings. These packages contain, in addition to 152 Universal feature films, 89 Columbia film programs and 8 Screen Gems re-runs. The four packages released by Screen Gems after execution of the Distribution Agreement consisted of the following films:

1. September, 1957—52 Universal films entitled "Shock Package";

2. December, 1957—9 Universal and 11 Columbia features entitled "Son of Shock";

3. January, 1958—52 Universal and 52 Columbia films, along with 8 "Playhouse 90" productions, called "Triple Crown" package;

4. June, 1958—39 Universal and 26 Columbia features in "Sweet 65" package.

In three out of the four packages released, Universal films were licensed together with Columbia features of the same general classification in the same package.

We are concerned then with the future distribution and licensing of the remaining 383 Universal feature films, all of the pre-August 1948 vintage.

[Price Fixing]

The Government maintains in its motion for summary judgment that the distribution contract on its face constitutes an illegal agreement to fix prices in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

The statute, in pertinent part, provides:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal . . ." 15 U. S. C. Sec. 1.

Sections V.3, V.14, V.7, XI.1 and XI.2, together with the Columbia guarantee, are pointed to as demonstrating that the licensing agreement on its face provides for price fixing condemned by the Supreme Court. United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150 (1939).

Section V.3 calls for the joint participation of Screen Gems and Universal in formulating "sales and other policies and decisions" relating to the pictures and their distribution. Section V.14 provides for four classifications of Universal films, according to audience appeal and income potential, to be made jointly by the parties; no Universal film may be classified inferior to any motion picture of the same appeal, quality, and value of Columbia. In Section V.7 the parties agree that prior to release of any film, Screen Gems shall submit to Universal a "rate schedule" setting forth minimum sub-licensing fees; if Universal objects to the fees, Screen Gems and Universal are to confer to work out the objection; Screen Gems "shall at no time grant any sub-license on terms less favorable to Distributor (and thus to Universal) than for Columbia Product (or other motion pictures from time to time distributed by it) of similar or comparable appeal and value in similar situations at approximately the same time."

[Modification of Agreement]

Although we do not consider it to be determinative on these motions, the defendants modified the distribution contract after service of the Government's motion for summary judgment. Defendants argue that the amendments remove the "price fixing" objections by eliminating entirely the above provisions and substituting the "fair market value" as the yardstick for sub-licensing fees of Universal films. The Government, on the other hand, argues that the amendments do not reveal a termination of the price fixing conspiracy; Screen Gems would be influenced by the fees received for Columbia films in determining the "fair market value" of Universal films; and Screen Gems is still required to permit Universal to inspect books and records relating to sub-licensing of both Columbia and Universal films. Because of the disposition being made of the instant motions, we need not resolve the conflicting views on the amendments to the contract.

[Other Contract Provisions]

The other contract provisions pointed to by the Government require Screen Gems to maintain complete accounts, books and records of each sub-licensing of Universal films as well as each such transaction of Distributor from January 1, 1956 to the termination of the license term for Columbia pictures (Section XI.1). It is provided further that Universal has the right to examine and make copies of all such "books, records, papers, documents, contracts, agreements, sub-licenses, correspondence, cancelled checks, vouchers, bills and statements" relevant to Columbia or Universal pictures (Section XI.2).

[Guaranty Agreement]

In the guaranty agreement, Columbia undertakes to maintain working control of Screen Gems during the license term; Screen Gems will continue to be sole licensee of Columbia films; Columbia guarantees payment to Universal of all moneys to become due under the license agreement, as well as full, faithful and timely performance of all obligations of Screen Gems to Universal.

[Government's Position]

The Government's position, as stated in its memorandum, is "that, although Columbia and Universal hitherto have been competitors in the licensing of their own feature film libraries for theatrical showing, Columbia has now undertaken (through its wholly-owned subsidiary, Screen Gems) television distribution of Universal's films on the 'terms and conditions' which are 'formulated jointly' by the two companies . . . In other words, the agreement provides that Columbia (through Screen Gems) and Universal shall jointly determine the prices at which Universal's films will be licensed, and that such terms shall be no less favorable for Universal than for Columbia pictures." This makes the agreement, in the Government's point of view, a price-fixing arrangement "illegal per se" (United States v. Masonite Corporation [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,209], 316 U. S. 265 (1942); United States v. Line Material Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,225], 333 U. S. 287 (1948); United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948)).

[Defendants' Position]

The defendants, denying any unlawful "price-fixing", argue that the legality of the "Distribution Agreement" (which they characterize as a "common sales agency") is not to be tested by abstract "per se" rules but by application of "the rule of reason" requiring an analysis of the market in which these films are offered and ascertaining the effect of the operation of agreement in that market. If this be so, then summary judgment cannot be granted because the parties have basically different views as to their respective positions in the market relevant to the inquiry in this suit and as to the competitive quality of their film in that market.

[Sherman Act]

The purpose and theory of the Sherman Act, as well as of all antitrust laws, is to foster competition and strike down combinations, agreements or conspiracies designed to, or effecting, unreasonable restraints of trade or commerce. Within the broad framework of this ultimate purpose, however, not every agreement affecting prices is illegal per se. In the words of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231 (1918) at page 238:

> "The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition."

The basic principles of Chicago Board of Trade, supra, are still applicable and contractual restraints fall under the condemnation of Section 1 only when their purpose and effect is found to have imposed an undue restraint on commerce. This is to be determined in the light of the market in which the contracting parties compete and the products they offer. The standard of reasonableness is still "to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether in a given case a particular act had or had not brought about the wrong against which the statute provided." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 60 (1911).

["Per Se" Violations]

It was by the application of standards of reasonableness and through the "rule of reason", experience and logic, that it has been held that some contractual restraints imposed by agreements between competitors can, as a matter of law, operate only as unlawful and condemned restraints, which if left to continue may eventuate in monopolization. Thus, by the use of reason, logic and experience, it has been declared that agreements between competitors to fix prices (United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150 (1940)); to allocate territory (Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211 (1899)); to tie in on sale patented with unpatented products (International Salt v. United States [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392 (1947)); and to boycott other competitors (Eastern States Lumber Association v. United States, 234 U. S. 600 (1914)), are unlawful without occasion or necessity for further judicial factual inquiry. Such contractual restraints agreed to by competitors, actual or potential, have been labelled "per se" violations of Section 1. However, before we may say that such agreements are inherently unlawful, we must find that the agreements were made between competitors, actual or potential, dealing in competing products in a relevant market. This was the Supreme Court's approach in Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagrams & Sons [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211 (1951) when it said:

> "The Court of Appeals erred in holding that an agreement among competitors to fix maximum retail prices of their products does not violate the Sherman Act . . ." (p. 213) italics supplied.

And in United States v. Masonite Corporation [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,209], 316 U. S. 265 (1942) upon which the Government relies on this motion, the Court found that all defendants "maintain selling organizations and to a large extent compete in the same markets"; furthermore, "in this case the price regulation was based on mutual agreement among distributors of competing products, some of whom had competing patents . . ." In the light of these findings, the Court said:

> "The power of Masonite to fix the price of the product which it manufactures, and which the entire group sells and with respect to which all have been and are now actual or potential competitors, is a powerful inducement to abandon competition."

[Competitive Relationship]

Our inquiry is directed to determine whether Columbia and Universal are competitors in the distribution of films embraced within the agreement. This leads to a consideration of the nature and type of their products and the demands and requirements of the market in which these products are offered.

The Government has attempted to spell out that Columbia and Universal occupy competitive positions as a matter of fact and law. In this effort, several sections of the "Distribution Agreement" are pointed out, including provisions relating to theatrical distribution of the films, and the reservation to Universal of the right to license the films for closed circuit, toll or subscription home television.

Defendants maintain that while Columbia and Universal "were and still are competitors in the production and distribution of motion pictures for theatrical exhibition, Universal has never competed in producing or distributing film for television programming (except for one disastrous effort); . . . Universal had none of the experience or personnel required to enter the quite different market of distributing film for television programming."

Defendants also deny that their feature films are competitive in the television market; rather, they say, Columbia and Universal feature films complement each other. This is so, it is urged, because effective programming requires the availability of numbers of similar types of pictures for showing in a series. The defendants contend that neither Columbia nor Universal had sufficient pre-August 1948 films to offer an attractive programming package for series presentation, and that therefore they are not in a position to offer competitive products to the television purchasing public. That there is, at this posture of the suit, some plausibility to this contention may be seen from the fact that in three of the four "packages" of films, released by Screen Gems since execution of the challenged agreement, both Columbia and Universal films were included.

Concerning the market in which feature films are distributed for television showing, the defendants urge that feature films have of recent years developed an "audience appeal" that they did not formerly enjoy, that feature films formerly scheduled for a showing on programs late in the evening when the maximum audience was not available now have become competitive with the offerings of the network transmissions and with the syndicated film offerings. It seems, if this be true, that feature films today compete for a market which embraces all the available time for television showings, not only on the smaller local stations not part of a large or national network, but on all stations, large and small when measured from the location of the station, its power or area of broadcast and possible or available audience.

The defendants also urge that the market in which they now jointly are selling these films, is not restricted to feature films alone, but includes the offerings of network programs and the offerings of syndicated and similar programs; and, too, that the field includes all hours of broadcasting and not the less desirable hours of poor "audience appeal". With the Government taking the position that individual feature films of the type embraced in the agreement are the requirement of the market, a factual issue is presented for trial for it may not be found that Universal and Columbia are competitors without first determining the market and its demands.

Substantial evidence is submitted by defendants, by way of affidavits, that in determining the market for consideration of the "Distribution Agreement" all television programming material must be considered together. This includes live shows, kinescopes of programs originally presented live, feature films, half-hour, hour and hour-and-a-half shows produced for initial television viewing, cartoons and shorts. The affidavits of responsible television officials who are familiar with the needs of programming and the buying of material state that feature films, offered separately or in "packages" are not considered in a class apart from other material; their choice of programs is based on prices of all available shows, programs offered by competing stations, "audience appeal", station variety, and other similar factors. In short, a substantial question is raised which must await a trial as to whether the separate and limited available offerings of Universal and of Columbia do in fact constitute salable or competitive products.

[Summary Judgment Denied]

We conclude that this suit cannot be disposed of summarily by motion, but must await a full hearing at which disputed genuine issues of fact may be resolved. The summary judgment procedure is not designed to eliminate a trial of contested issues going to heart of the controversy presented by this suit, or by stamping the challenged agreement with an "illegal per se" label without first finding whether Universal and Columbia are in fact competitors with reference to the pre-August 1948 feature films made subject to the agreement.

[Preliminary Injunction Sought]

We turn now to the Government's motion for a preliminary injunction pendente lite. Here it is sought, during the pendency of this suit, (1) to enjoin Columbia and Screen Gems from taking any steps for the further sub-licensing of or otherwise distributing any of the 152 Universal films already placed in distribution by Screen Gems, provided that Screen Gems may take whatever steps may be necessary to perform sub-licensing agreements covering any feature films entered into prior to the issuance of the injunction, and (2) to enjoin Columbia and Screen Gems from releasing, sub-licensing or otherwise distributing any other Universal feature films covered by the distribution agreement. The justification for a preliminary injunction is "the detriment to the public interest which will ensue, if this Court is unable to render adequate relief in the event plaintiff is successful after trial."

The yardstick to be applied in determining whether the Court in the exercise of discretion should grant the drastic remedy of preliminary injunction, which in this case will be tantamount to the final relief sought, has been stated by the Court of Appeals for this Circuit:

> "To justify a temporary injunction it is not necessary that the plaintiff's right to a final decision, after trial, be absolutely certain, wholly without doubt; if the other elements are present (i. e., the balance of hardships tips decidedly toward plaintiff), it will ordinarily be enough that, the plaintiff has raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful, as to make them fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation." Hamilton Watch Co. v. Benrus Watch Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,517], 206 F. 2d 738, 740 (2 Cir., 1953).

[Clayton Act, Sec. 7]

What we have said on the summary judgment motion is applicable to a consideration of the questions raised "going to the merits" of the Section 1 Sherman Act claim in this suit. In the Clayton Act phase, the Government alleges that the distribution agreement constitutes the illegal acquisition of an asset by Screen Gems in violation of Section 7.

Section 7 of the Clayton Act provides:

> "That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

Admitting that there is a factual question, at least as to the relevant market, before a Section 7 violation can be established, the Government did not seek summary judgment on this aspect of its complaint. The approach to a Section 7 case has recently been succinctly stated by Judge Hincks in American Crystal Sugar Company v. The Cuban-American Sugar Company [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,155], — F. 2d — (2 Cir., dec. Oct. 1, 1958):

> "Section 7 in its present content, so far as here relevant, now forbids the acquisition of the whole or any part of the stock or assets of a corporation where, in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition. 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 18. The legislative history of the amendment makes it plain that Congress intended by Sec. 7 to forbid mergers which were beyond the reach of the Sherman Act as judicially interpreted. Sen. Rep. 1175, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 4-5 (1950). Thus under Sec. 7 as amended the Sherman Act test is no longer appropriate, H. R. Rep. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 8 (1949), and conduct may fall under the ban of amended Sec. 7 before it has attained the stature of an unreasonable restraint of trade. See Pillsbury Mills, Inc., 50 F. T. C. 555, 569 (1953). And the ban on a substantial lessening of competition "in any line of commerce in any section of the country," requires, for determination of a violation, first, a definition of a relevant market in which a lessening of competition has probably occurred and, second, analysis of the nature and extent of the competition within that market. Consequently, the parties are agreed that an acquisition is not illegal because of its impact on competition between the corporations involved: that the proper test is one of the qualitative substantiality of the resulting effect on competition in the relevant market. We too agree. We hold that only an acquisition which in the long run may reasonably be expected to substantially lessen competition within a relevant market, will violate Sec. 7 as amended."

We have previously noted the differing views of the demands of the market applicable to this suit. Before a Section 7 violation can be found, there must be a showing of a reasonable probability of foreclosure or substantial lessening of competition in a substantial share of the relevant market. Defendants point not only to the fact that Columbia and Universal have never competed in the television market, but also to the fact that no less than 65 companies license feature films for television exhibition. Defendants consider as competitors at least 235 distributors of filmed material, together with numerous sellers of live programming which are also competing with Screen Gems.

[Issue]

In the face of this evidence, can we say, at this time that the combination of Universal and Columbia films in unified distribution by Screen Gems limited to these specific pre-August 1948 feature films is likely to result in undue reduction in the number of firms selling programming material for television showing? We think not.

[Injunction Too Broad]

An injunction in the form suggested by the Government will drastically interfere with the orderly release of films under the Agreement. Films for greatest income potential, it seems, must be available in series, and licensing arrangements are made months in advance. So far as the information is available presently to the Court, neither Columbia nor Universal alone has sufficient feature films available for profitable packaging. Serious interruption in the orderly release of films by Screen Gems will result in losses which may never be recouped even though the Government be not successful in the final judgment.

We cannot lose sight of the delay in seeking injunctive relief. The contract was executed on August 2, 1957 and dated as of July 1, 1957. Prior to its execution, representatives of the Government were aware of the impending agreement and held conferences with the defendants. Shortly after August 2, 1957 copies of the "Distribution Agreement" were furnished to the Government. It was not until eight months later that this suit was filed on April 10, 1958 and still no injunctive relief was sought. The motion for a preliminary injunction was brought on by order to show cause dated October 14, 1958.

No act of the defendants can account for the fourteen months delay during which the Government permitted Universal films to be sub-licensed under the agreement. During that time, defendants released only 152 Universal films in what appears to be an orderly exercise of prudent business judgment. No dumping of films or release with inordinate haste has been undertaken. Moreover, both the Government and defendants have expressed a willingness to be ready for trial within three months of the filing of this decision. Accordingly, we cannot say that the "balance of hardships tips decidedly toward plaintiff".

There is little likehood, if the past rate of release is continued, that a serious detriment to the public interest will enuse because of the number of films which will be released between now and the trial, which can be had within three months. Prudent business judgment, on the part of defendants would seem to preclude anything but an orderly release of films which the agreement envisions over the period of the next twelve years. The stake is too high to permit of any other course of release. Defendants have raised issues which seriously challenge the Government's theory of action, and success by the plaintiff is far from clear.

[Injunction]

The motion for preliminary injunction at this time is partially granted, to maintain the status quo, without prejudice to the right of the Government to apply further for injunctive relief if, subsequent facts should develop warranting renewal of this motion, and Screen Gems will be restrained hereafter and until trial from sub-licensing additional Universal films at a rate greater than 50 in any six months period, with leave to the defendants to apply for modification if the Government unduly delays the commencement of the trial or subsequent events warrant modification.

Settle order.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Dismissal of Action for Failure to Prosecute—Exigency Created by Disqualification of Attorney.—Motion picture theatres' treble damage actions against producers and distributors, after having been dismissed for failure to prosecute, were restored to the district court's docket for eventual trial and adjudication. The theatres had been faced with an exigency in the disqualification of their attorney and were not guilty of inordinate delay in trying to find new counsel. Disqualification of an attorney should be restricted to its prime purpose of keeping the attorney-client relationship undefiled and should not be made a step in depriving a litigant of his day in court. The newly retained counsel promptly took steps to revive the actions and promised to press them with vigor. Also, the producers and distributors were at least equally responsible for the not unusual delay in the progress of the cases. They must have known that their vigorous pressing of the disqualification issue would involve additional delay and obviously concluded that the elimination of the theatres' counsel was a sufficiently necessary tactical step to justify that delay.

[Appeal]

Colonial Drive-In Theatre, Inc., and Harmar Drive-In Theatre, Inc., appeal from the dismissals for want of prosecution of their actions against Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and other motion picture producers and distributors for violation of the antitrust laws—first entered conditionally by Judge Dawson, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 21 F. R. D. 331 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,956], and later made absolute by Judge Bryan. Reversed and remanded.

[Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: In these two antitrust actions this court, reversing the district court, entered orders disqualifying the plaintiffs' counsel; this proceeding terminated, after attempts to obtain a rehearing failed, with the denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court on October 14, 1957. Harmar Drive-In Theatre v. Warner Bros. Pictures [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,577], 2 Cir., 239 F. 2d 555, rehearing denied 2 Cir., 241 F. 2d 937 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,793], certiorari denied 355 U. S. 824. Thereafter the plaintiffs, experiencing difficulty in obtaining new counsel to represent them, succeeded in retaining present counsel only shortly before the absolute dismissals from which these appeals are taken. Meanwhile on January 30, 1958, the defendants moved to dismiss for failure to prosecute. On February 12, Judge Dawson gave plaintiffs thirty days to comply with certain pretrial orders entered before the disqualification issue came to a head, and entered conditional dismissals, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 21 F. R. D. 331 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,956]. A motion to extend this time limit was denied by Judge Noonan on March 25, and final dismissals were entered by Judge Bryan essentially pro forma on April 2, 1958. Due to the natural course of motion practice, the issues as to delay came before the district court in a piece-meal fashion. Thus this appeal represents the first occasion for a view of the entire situation in perspective.

[Delay—Disqualification of Attorneys]

Plaintiffs were faced with a real exigency in the loss of their counsel who had had sole responsibility for their representation in these important cases. We cannot find them guilty here of inordinate delay in trying to find new counsel. Moreover, the newly retained counsel promptly took steps to revive the actions, and they promise to continue to press them with vigor. These cases had been instituted in June 1955; and defendants, on the facts presented to us in some detail, must bear at least equal responsibility for the not unusual delay in their progress. Moreover, defendants must have known that their vigorous pressing of the disqualification issue—including their appeal from the district court's original refusal—would necessarily involve additional delay; they obviously concluded that counsel's elimination was a sufficiently necessary tactical step to justify the delay thus caused. We think that the interests of justice require that these actions be restored to the district court's docket for eventual trial and adjudication. Disqualification of an attorney should be restricted to its prime purpose of keeping the attorney-client relationship pure and undefiled and should not be made a step in depriving a litigant of his day in court.

[Reversed and Remanded]

The orders of dismissal are reversed and the actions are remanded for trial.

Memorandum

[Consolidated Actions]

Bryan, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: These two consolidated actions involving claims for unfair competition, breach of contract and inducing breach of contract, arise out of the release of two recordings of the popular song "Only You" by two different record companies. Counterclaims have been interposed in each action. Each party in both actions has moved for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56(a) or (b), F. R. C. P. There are thus what are tantamount to four motions and four cross-motions for summary judgment before me for decision.

[Parties]

The plaintiffs in the first action are Herbert Reed, Tony Williams, Paul Robi, David Lynch and Zola Taylor, who comprise a group of popular singers known as "The Platters". The defendants are Federal Records, Inc., a recording company, and King Records, Inc., which promotes and distributes Federal recordings.

Jurisdiction is grounded on diversity of citizenship. Plaintiffs alleged that they are residents of California. Both defendants are incorporated in Ohio.

The second action is brought by Federal Records, Inc. against Buck Ram "manager" of "The Platters" and Mercury Records, Inc., also a recording company. Mercury Records, Inc. is an Illinois corporation and Ram is a resident of California.

[Summary Judgment Denied]

All of the motions for summary judgment must be denied.

[Contracts]

Out of this confusing and illy documented welter of facts the following appears to be undisputed; On June 2, 1953 Samuel Anthony (Tony) Williams entered into a contract with Federal Records, Inc. This contract provided that Williams was to record a minimum of four records sides, granting to Federal the sole use of the records to manufacture, produce, sell and distribute. For the term of the contract Williams agreed not to record for anyone else, and, in any event, not to record for another any "musical composition recorded hereunder" for a period of five years after a recording made for Federal. The contract bears the signatures of Williams, Sydney Nathan, the vice-president of Federal Records, and Ralph Bass, an employee of Federal in charge of artists and repertoire.

On September 15, 1953 a similar contract was executed which bears the signatures of Alex Hodge, Herbert Reed, Joe Jefferson and Cornelius Gunter, who were collectively referred to in the contract as "The Platters". The contract was signed for Federal by Bass and its president Kelley. This contract differed from the June contract by requiring a minimum of eight record sides. Except for these differences, and the periods covered by the contracts, the two are identical.

[Recordings Made]

Between September 1953 and September 1954 recordings of sixteen popular songs were made for Federal by "The Platters" at four recording sessions, September 15, 1953, March 16, May 20 and September 28, 1954. Fourteen of these were released and publicly sold. Two of the four songs recorded on May 20, 1954 had not been released by the start of the present litigation. One song recorded on May 20, 1954 which was released and sold is "Only You", the subject of this litigation.

In February 1955 the individuals who apparently now comprise the group known as "The Platters" (a somewhat different group than the "Federal" group) signed a recording contract with Mercury Records, Inc. Pursuant to this contract the song "Only You" was recorded for Mercury by "The Platters" in April 1955. This song was released by Mercury in May 1955. Federal Records, Inc. released the version which had been recorded for it in May of 1954, in September or October 1955, some five months later.

On November 10, 1953, March 30, 1954 and June 3, 1954 Federal Records, Inc. drew checks to the order of "The Platters" for $150.00.

[Counterclaim]

3. Defendant Federal, in the first action, counterclaims against "The Platters" alleging breach of the covenants against recording for another during the term of the June 2 and September 15, 1953 contracts and the covenant not to record a song recorded for Federal for five years.

4. Plaintiffs have moved on the counterclaim for summary judgment against Federal. They argue that (a) the five year restrictive covenant contained in both contracts is void, (b) there is no mutuality of obligation between the parties, (c) Federal is barred by laches, and (d) the Statute of

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Frauds is a bar to proof of the plaintiffs' alleged adoption or ratification of the 1953 contracts.

[The Five Year Restrictive Covenant]

Plaintiffs allege that § 16,600 of the California Business Law which outlaws contracts by which a person is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade or business, applies to the 1953 contracts.[4] The plaintiffs rely on Gardella v. Chandler [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,368], 2 Cir., 172 F. 2d 402. However, Gardella does not support them. A covenant which prohibits an artist from making additional recordings of a few specific songs for five years and a clause which has the result of "* * * the blacklisting of the [baseball] player so that no club in organized baseball will hire him", have quite different legal consequences. Gardella v. Chandler, supra, at 410. "The Platters" retained the right to make night-club, radio, television and other appearances and they may record any other popular song. Merely because it later appears that the song was highly successful and would provide other lucrative recording opportunities does not outlaw the contractual restraint. An improvident contract is not necessarily unlawful.[5] Moreover, Federal may well have had a legitimate interest in retaining the exclusive rights to a recorded performance for a reasonable time.

Section 16,600 does not by its terms prohibit the contractual restraint as it only provides that a contract is void when "anyone is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade or business * * *." The contracts at issue do not foreclose plaintiffs from a "profession, trade or business" to to their detriment and that of the public.

In the Supreme Court of Hawaii. No. 4055. Argued November 20, 1958. Decided January 16, 1959.

Appeal from Circuit Court First Circuit, HON. ALBERT M. FELIX, Judge.

Hawaii Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Hawaii Fair Trade Act—Power of Territorial Legislature to Enact Fair Trade Act—"Rightful Subjects of Legislation."—The Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii had as much power to enact a Fair Trade Act as any of the states whose fair trade statutes had been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. The territorial legislature has, except as restricted by congressional act, the power of a state legislature. The Organic Act of Hawaii provides that the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all "rightful subjects of legislation" not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States which are locally applicable. The question of the rightful subjects of legislation is not to be settled by reference to the distinctions usually made between legislative acts and those that are judicial or administrative in their character, but by an examination of the subjects upon which legislatures have been in the practice of acting with the consent and approval of the people they represented. Inasmuch as the legislatures of 46 states and two territories have passed fair trade acts, it cannot be questioned that such acts are "rightful subjects of legislation."

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3085.13.

Fair Trade—Hawaii Fair Trade Act—Constitutionality Under Sherman Act, Section 3—Validation of Fair Trade Act by Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts—Applicability to Territories.—The Hawaii Fair Trade Act is not in conflict with the Sherman Antitrust Act as amended by the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts. The court below disregarded the plain wording of those statutes in finding that neither of them amended Section 3 of the Sherman Act, which declares illegal contracts in restraint of trade in any territory of the

[4] All the parties urge that the law of California applies to these actions. For the purpose of considering these motions I will make the same assumption.

[5] At this stage no facts on the fairness of the Federal contract have been presented.

United States. The Miller-Tydings Act was intended to permit the states and territories to legalize the fair trade statutes then existing or thereafter to be passed. That Act was interpreted, however, as modifying the Federal antitrust laws with respect to actual signers of fair trade contracts but not with respect to fair trade rights against non-signers. The McGuire Act, which specifically covers non-signers, provided that nothing contained in "any of the Antitrust Acts" should render unlawful fair trade contracts which were lawful as applied to intrastate transactions under the laws of "any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia." The lower court based its opinion that Section 3 of the Sherman Act was not amended by the Miller-Tydings or McGuire Acts on the fact that the preamble of the McGuire Act mentioned only states and did not, therefore, apply to territories, although the words "any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia" were specially used in the Act. While the constitutions of many states and the Organic Law of Hawaii require that each law enacted shall embrace but one subject which shall be expressed in its title, there is no such restriction upon Congress. The title of an act cannot be used to extend or restrain any positive provisions contained in the body of the act. Since the effect of the Miller-Tydings and McGuire amendments to the Sherman Act was to remove the only obstacle to the enforcement of the fair trade acts, re-enactment of the Hawaii Fair Trade Act was unnecessary.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3080.13, 3085.13.

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Hawaii Fair Trade Act—"Non-Signer" Provision—Necessity for Privity of Contract—Knowledge of Price Restrictions—Due Process—Delegation of Price-Fixing Power.—Price restrictions imposed by fair trade contracts entered into pursuant to the Hawaii Fair Trade Act were binding upon dealers who were not parties to the contracts but had knowledge of the existing price restrictions. The trial court's decision that the enforcement of fair trade prices depended upon privity of contract was without merit. The Supreme Court of the United States, the Hawaiian court, and the weight of authority hold that no privity of contract is necessary for the owner of a trade-mark, when authorized by statute, to protect himself by fixing the price at which a retailer may sell; the only requirement is that the retailer have knowledge of the restriction on the sales price. Such restrictions do not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, are not an unlawful delegation to private persons of the power to control the disposition of the property of others, and are not arbitrary, unfair, or unreasonable. The essence of the statutory prohibition contained in the Fair Trade Act is not the mere disposal of a commodity, but the use of the trade-mark, brand, or name in the accomplishment of such disposition.

Reversing a decision of the Hawaii Circuit Court, First Judicial Circuit, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,936.

RICE, C. J., STAINBACK and MARUMOTO, JJ.

Opinion of the Court

By STAINBACK, J. [In full text]: This action was brought under the provisions of the Hawaii Fair Trade Act (chapter 205, Revised Laws of Hawaii 1955) to enjoin the defendant-corporation from selling the products of appellant at less than the fair-trade price fixed by appellant.

The complaint alleges that the appellant is a New Jersey corporation transacting business in the Territory of Hawaii, while appellee is a Nevada corporation also transacting business in the Territory; that the appellant produces various products sold bearing its registered trade-mark and all such products are sold in containers bearing the name of the producer and are in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others; that appellant entered into contracts with various retailers in the City and County of Honolulu who agreed not to sell appellant's products at less than specified minimum price at retail as fixed by appellant from time to time; that the appellee had notice of the existence of the fair-trade contracts but despite such notice sold appellant's products at less than the fair-trade price fixed by such contracts and, unless restrained, will continue to do so; that the continuance of such sales would do irreparable damage to appellant in its business, and appellant has no speedy and adequate remedy at law.

All the facts alleged in the complaint were stipulated to or found by the court to be true.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Appellee made a motion to dismiss upon the following points: (1) the complaint fails to state a cause of action against defendant that would entitle it to any relief; (2) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act was illegal at the time of its enactment for the reason that it was in violation of Sections 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act; (3) assuming the power of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to enact such a fair-trade act, following the amendment to Section 1 of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Act no such reenactment has been accomplished; (4) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act, and more particularly the so-called "nonsigner" provision thereof, is unconstitutional for the reason that the same is a price-fixing statute and the legislature is without power to fix prices at which commodities may be sold unless the business or property involved is affected with a public interest; (5) assuming the power of the legislature to fix prices and its authority to delegate that power, any such delegation to be valid must provide a primary standard or general rule to be followed in discharging the delegated power, and the Hawaii Fair Trade Act provides no such standard or rule; (6) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is unconstitutional because it interferes with the right of the seller and the purchaser to freely contract and agree upon a price of their choice, and that this right to contract is a property right protected by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; (7) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is void as an invalid exercise of a police power, being an attempt to use that power for a private and not a public purpose; (8) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is invalid and inoperative in so far as it purports to authorize the enforcement of minimum fair-trade resale prices against any person who is not a party to the contract by which the minimum resale prices were established.

[Findings of Lower Court]

The court below found the Hawaii Fair Trade Act was contrary to Section 3 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, that neither the Miller-Tydings amendment nor the McGuire Act validated the Hawaii Fair Trade Act nor provided any authority for the enactment of such an Act in the future. It also found the Hawaii Fair Trade Act makes only those contracts in privity enforceable and refused to enjoin the defendant from selling at less than the fair-trade price fixed by the holder of the registered trade-mark.

[Issues on Appeal]

The case comes to this court upon appeal from the order dismissing the complaint.

The case presents to this court the questions of (1) whether Section 3 of the Sherman Act invalidates the Hawaii Fair Trade Act and (2) whether enforcement of the Hawaii Fair Trade Act depends upon privity of contract.

The case of Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, 35 Haw. 77, held that the Fair Trade Act is a rightful subject of legislation within the provisions of Section 55 of the Organic Act; that there is no inconsistency between the provisions of the Fair Trade Act and the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act, as amended; that the provisions of the Fair Trade Act are not contrary to the due-process clause of the Constitution of the United States; and that there need be no privity of contract between the owner of the trade-marked brand or name and the dealer, but that the Act binds all noncontract dealers who have knowledge of the terms of the subsisting contract in the trade-marked commodity. The latter may possibly be dictum; however, the point was well reasoned and considered by the court in making its decision. Thus, Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, supra, appears conclusive of this case unless we desire to overrule it.

[Police Power]

As was noted in the case of Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, supra, the enforcement of the Fair Trade Act is an exercise of the police power of the Territory for "giving protection to trade-mark owners, producers and the general public, against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of certain commodities." (Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, 35 Haw. 77, 84, citing Triner Corporation v. McNeil, 363 Ill. 559, 2 N. E. [2d] 929.) It is not an action to enforce a contract between the parties thereto.

The Fair Trade Act is calculated to prevent price cutting upon the sale of trade-marked articles sold in competition with articles of a similar class, the minimum sale price of which has been established by the producer or distributor. Unfair competition, as defined in the Act, consists "not in the bare disposition of the commodity, but in a forbidden use of the trade-mark, brand or name in accomplishing such disposition." (Old Dearborn Co. v. Seagram Corp. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,141], 299 U. S. 183, 193.)

[Economic Theory]

Protecting patents and trade-marks, etc., for economic benefit is a rightful subject of legislation within the meaning of that term as employed in Section 55 of the Organic Act. It is an exercise of the police power. (Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, supra.) It is not the court's duty to pass upon the soundness of the economic theory upon which such Acts are passed, as that is a matter of public policy for the legislature. However, the economic theory is clearly not so unreasonable as to cause any interference by the courts.

Old Dearborn Co. v. Seagram Corp., 299 U. S. 183, at 195-196, states:

> "There is a great body of fact and opinion tending to show that price cutting by retail dealers is not only injurious to the good will and business of the producer and distributor of identified goods, but injurious to the general public as well. The evidence to that effect is voluminous; but it would serve no useful purpose to review the evidence or to enlarge further upon the subject. True, there is evidence, opinion and argument to the contrary; but it does not concern us to determine where the weight lies. We need say no more than that the question may be regarded as fairly open to differences of opinion. The legislation here in question proceeds upon the former and not the latter view; and the legislative determination in that respect, in the circumstances here disclosed, is conclusive so far as this court is concerned. Where the question of what the facts establish is a fairly-debatable one, we accept and carry into effect the opinion of the legislature. Radice v. New York, 264 U. S. 292, 294; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 274 U. S. 325, 328, and cases cited."

A justification of the economic theory of the Fair Trade Act is well set forth by Mr. Justice Brandeis, famous as an economist as well as a lawyer, in an article published in Harper's Weekly (November 15, 1913), from which the following is an excerpt:

> "* * * when a dealer has to use somebody else's name or brand in order to sell goods, then the owner of that name or brand has an interest which should be respected. The transaction is essentially one between the two principals—the maker and the user. All others are middlemen or agents; for the product is not really sold until it has been bought by the consumer. Why should one middleman have the power to depreciate in the public mind the value of the maker's brand and render it unprofitable not only for the maker but for other middlemen? Why should one middleman be allowed to indulge in a practice of price-cutting, which tends to drive the maker's goods out of the market and in the end interferes with people getting the goods at all?
> "When a trade-marked article is advertised to be sold at less than the standard price, it is generally done to attract persons to a particular store by the offer of an obviously extraordinary bargain. It is a bait—called by the dealers a 'leader.' But the cut-price article would more appropriately be termed a 'misleader'; because ordinarily the very purpose of the cut-price is to create a false impression." (The Social and Economic Views of Mr. Justice Brandeis, pp. 405, 406.)

[Power of Territorial Legislature]

The territorial legislature has, except as restricted by congressional act, the power of a state legislature. Section 55 of the Organic Act provides:

> "That the legislature power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable."

Since the organization of the Territory of Wisconsin in 1836 the several Territories in the United States have been granted powers of local self-government under provisions that do not differ substantially from Section 55 of our own Organic Act. (Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190.) Let us, therefore, examine some of the decisions to see what, under this provision, are "rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable."

Under a similar provision for the Territory of Utah, the Supreme Court of the United States in Clinton et al. v. Englebrecht, 80 U. S. 434, under the Organic-Act provision that "The legislative power of said Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation, consistent with the Constitution of the United States, and the provisions of this act" the court, in holding that the mode of procuring jurors is a "rightful subject of legislation," stated:

> "The theory upon which the various governments for portions of the territory of the United States have been organized, has ever been that of leaving to the inhabitants all the powers of self-government consistent with the supremacy and supervision of National authority, and with certain fundamental principles established by Congress."

Under a similar provision of the Organic Act of the Territory of Montana, the United States Supreme Court in Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 85 U. S. 648, 655, held that the practice, pleadings, forms and modes of proceedings of the territorial courts were intended by Congress to be left to the legislative action of territorial assemblies, stating:

> "The powers thus exercised by the Territorial legislatures are nearly as extensive as those exercised by any State legislature; and the jurisdiction of the Territorial courts is collectively co-extensive with and correspondent to that of the State courts. * * *"

In Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 684, under a Utah territorial statute making "illegitimate children and their mothers inherit in like manner from the father, whether acknowledged by him or not, provided it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that he was the father of such illegitimate child or children," it was held that the child of the polygamous or plural wife inherited from his father in spite of the Act of Congress forbidding polygamy in the Territory. The court said, among other things:

> "* * * the power of the Territorial legislature was apparently as plenary as that of the legislature of a State. Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 204. The distribution of and the right of succession to the estates of deceased persons are matters exclusively of State cognizance, and are such as were within the competence of the Territorial legislature to deal with as it saw fit, in the absence of an inhibition by Congress." (Italics added.)

Finally, the case of Puerto Rico v. Shell Co., 302 U. S. 253, 261, in upholding the adoption by the legislature of Puerto Rico of a local Antitrust Act very similar to the Sherman Act (although Puerto Rico as a Territory came under the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act) states:

> "The aim of the Foraker Act and the Organic Act was to give Puerto Rico full power of local self-determination, with an autonomy similar to that of the states and incorporated territories."

In view of the foregoing examples of what are "rightful subjects of legislation" under this provision of the Organic Act, let us quote the definition as given in Maynard v. Hill, supra. This case stated the question of rightful subjects of legislation "is not to be settled by reference to the distinction usually made between legislative acts and such as are judicial or administrative in their character, but by an examination of the subjects upon which legislatures had been in the practice of acting with the consent and approval of the people they represented."

Inasmuch as the legislatures of 46 States and 2 Territories have passed Fair Trade Acts, it cannot be questioned that Fair Trade Acts are "rightful subjects of legislation."

[U. S. Constitution]

The next question is whether the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is contrary to the Constitution or laws of the United States.

[Contentions]

The contentions are made that the Hawaii Fair Trade Act conflicts with the Sherman Antitrust Act and is therefore invalid and, further, assuming that the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is valid, it requires privity of contract between the owner of the registered trade-mark and the retailer who sells the same.

[Miller-Tydings Act]

The first would be true under the Sherman Antitrust Act prior to the Miller-Tydings Act and the McGuire Act amending the same. In 1911 the Supreme Court of the United States held in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, that resale price maintenance in interstate commerce conflicted with the Sherman Antitrust Act. However, in 1937 Congress passed the Miller-Tydings Act which was intended to permit the States and Territories to legalize the fair-trade statutes then existing in States and Territories or thereafter be passed to exempt such price maintenance from the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

[Nonsigners—McGuire Act]

However, the plan of Congress was partly upset when a divided Supreme Court in interpreting the amendment held that the Act did modify the Federal antitrust law but with respect to actual signers of fair-trade contracts but not with respect to fair-trade rights against nonsigners. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Douglas stated that had the Congress desired to eliminate this provision, "different measures would have been adopted—either a nonsigner provision would have been included or resale price fixing would have been authorized without more." (Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 390.) Thereafter, to correct this interpretation by the Supreme Court, the Congress enacted the McGuire Act, which specifically covers nonsigners. Sections 2 and 3 of the McGuire Act are as follows:

"(2) Nothing contained in this Act or in any of the Antitrust Acts shall render unlawful any contracts or agreements prescribing minimum or stipulated prices, or requiring a vendee to enter into contracts or agreements prescribing minimum or stipulated prices, for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trademark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale.

"(3) Nothing contained in this Act or in any of the Antitrust Acts shall render unlawful the exercise or the enforcement of any right or right of action created by any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, which in substance provides that wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale, or selling any commodity at less than the price or prices prescribed in such contracts or agreements whether the person so advertising, offering for sale, or selling is or is not a party to such a contract or agreement, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby." (Italics added.)

[Title of an Act]

The court below in finding that "neither the amendment of 1937 [Miller-Tydings Act] nor the amendment of 1952 [McGuire Act] amended Section 3 of the Sherman Act" disregarded the express wording of the statutes, basing its opinion upon the fact that since the preamble of the statute mentioned only States, the Act did not apply to Territories although the terms "any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia" were specially named in the Act.

While the constitutions of many States, and our own Organic Act by Section 45, provide that each law shall embrace but one subject which shall be expressed in its title, there is no such restriction upon the Congress; time and time again so-called riders have been attached to Acts of Congress and the legality of such procedure is beyond question.

"Originally in England, bills were not given titles. Even when used, titles were not considered part of an act. Although a similar view was also followed in early American legislative history, the custom gradually developed to affix captions to legislative acts to identify the subject matter of the legislation. Eventually, the draftsmen of state constitutions inserted provisions in their documents, the effect of which was to require titles on all statutes. The federal constitution does not impose any limitation on the use of titles." (1 Sutherland, Statutory Construction, 3d ed., Titles, § 1701, pp. 283-284.)

In Hadden v. The Collector, 72 U. S. 107, a portion of the syllabus reads:

"The title of an act cannot be used to extend or to restrain any positive provisions contained in the body of the act. It is only when the meaning of these is doubtful that resort may be had to the title, and even then it has little weight."

The court stated on page 110:

"The title of an act furnishes little aid in the construction of its provisions. Originally in the English courts the title was held to be no part of the act;—'no more,' says Lord Holt, 'than the title of a book is part of the book.' It was generally framed by the clerk of the House of Parliament, where the Act originated, and was intended only as a means of convenient reference. At the present day the title constitutes a part of the act, but it is still considered as only a formal part; it cannot be used to extend or to restrain any positive provisions contained in the body of the act. It is only when the meaning of these is doubtful that resort may be had to the title, and even then it has little weight. It is seldom the subject of special consideration by the legislature.

"These observations apply with special force to acts of Congress. Every one who has had occasion to examine them has found the most incongruous provisions, having no reference to the matter specified in the title."

The court then points out a number of incongruous provisions such as a rider to an appropriation Act which contained the provision that no witness should be excluded in the courts of the United States on account of color, etc., a law regulating appeals in Mexican land cases which contained a rider making appropriations for civil and diplomatic expenses of the government for the year 1853, etc.

Further, while the words "State," "States," or "United States," as used in the Constitution or the laws of Congress, usually apply only to States and not Territories (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, at pages 250-251, 257, 259; Alaska v. Troy, 258 U. S. 101), yet the words "State," "States," or "United States," where the context so shows, may be construed in the broader meaning as including any separate political community such as a Territory. (Wynne v. United States, 217 U. S. 234, citing numerous cases.)

Ex Parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 650, and Kopel v. Bingham, 211 U. S. 468, extradition cases, hold that the provisions of Section 2 of Article IV of the Constitution, providing that a person charged with crime in any State who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall on demand of executive authority of the State from which he has fled be delivered up to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime, applies to one who flees from Puerto Rico to a State.

"In many contexts 'state' may mean only the several states of the United States. Here, however, we hold that its meaning includes the Territory of Hawaii." (Andres v. United States, 333 U. S. 740, 745.)

[Necessity for Reenactment]

The claim is made that the Hawaii Fair Trade Act being invalid when passed was not validated by the passage of the Miller-Tydings and the McGuire Acts or by the reenactment of the Fair Trade Act in the Revised Laws of Hawaii of 1945 and of 1955.

It will be noted that the amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act is intended to legalize "any statute, law or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory or the District of Columbia," thus expressly legalizing existing laws of the States or Territories which were not enforceable because of conflict with the Sherman Antitrust Act. The vast majority of decisions from the various States has held that reenactment of the fair-trade statutes was not necessary to make such statutes valid, although there is authority to the contrary.

In In Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 565, the Supreme Court of the United States held:

"This is not the case of a law enacted in the unauthorized exercise of a power exclusively confided to Congress, but of a law which it was competent for the State to pass, but which could not operate upon articles occupying a certain situation until the passage of the act of Congress. That act in terms removed the obstacle, and we perceive no adequate ground for adjudging that a reenactment of the state law was required before it could have the effect upon imported which it had always had upon domestic property."

Similarly, in Central Pacific Railroad v. Nevada, 162 U. S. 512, 523 (1896), the statement is made:

"No action on the part of the State or its legislature was necessary to signify its acceptance of the authority conferred by the Federal statute. * * *

"Nor, conceding that the General Statutes of Nevada were inoperative to authorize the taxation of these lands prior to the act of Congress of July, 1886, was any reenactment of those statutes necessary, since the effect of this act was merely to remove the only obstacle to their enforcement."

To the contrary is Grayson-Robinson Stores, Inc. v. Oneida, Ltd. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,442], 209 Ga. 613, 75 S. E. (2d) 161, which held that a void statute can be made effective only by reenactment.

[Privity of Contract]

The decision of the lower court that the enforcement of rights against unfair competition depends upon privity of contract is without merit and contrary to Old Dearborn Co. v. Seagram Corp. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,141], 299 U. S. 183, sustaining the Illinois Fair Trade Act, and Pep Boys v. Pyroil Sales Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,142], 299 U. S. 198, sustaining the California Fair Trade Act, and our own Supreme Court decision in Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, supra. These opinions are sweeping and passed upon all the contentions raised by the defendant, the appellee in this case. Price restriction is binding upon a dealer who has full knowledge of an existing price restriction imposed by contract between a producer and other retailers, does not violate the due-process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and is not an unlawful delegation of the power to private persons to control the disposition of property of others; it is not arbitrary, unfair or unreasonable; the essence of the statutory prohibition is not the mere disposal of the commodity, but for the use of the trade-mark, brand or name in accomplishing such disposition.

[Knowledge of Price Restriction]

While there are a number of decisions holding that there must be privity of contract, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Hawaiian court, and the weight of authority hold that when authorized by the statute no privity of contract is necessary for the owner of a trade-mark to protect himself by fixing the price at which a retailer may sell. To protect the good will and copyright of the producer, privity of contract is not necessary. The only requirement is that the retailer have knowledge of the restriction on the sales price.

We deem it unnecessary to review at length the many decisions upholding the constitutionality of Fair Trade Acts as to nonsigners and those holding to the contrary.

The case of Esterbrook Pen v. San Juan F. Vilarino 5 Y 10 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,555], 144 F. Supp. 309 (1956), is interesting because Puerto Rico, like Hawaii, is a Territory and enacted its own Fair Trade Act.

There are also many decisions turning upon the point whether a defendant-retailer had knowledge of the restrictions imposed by the owner of the trade-mark. (Lionel Corp. v. Grayson-Robinson Stores [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,717], 15 N. J. 191, 104 A. [2d] 304.)

[District of Columbia]

To the contention that because price-cutting sales in the District of Columbia are legal (citing General Electric Co. v. Masters Mail Order Co., 244 F. [2d] 681), such sales would be legal in Hawaii, the complete answer of course is that there is no Fair Trade Act in the District of Columbia.

The further contention that it would require Congress to act for Hawaii just as it would for the District of Columbia is fully answered by the fact that the Territory has been given complete freedom of legislation on local matters while the District of Columbia is given no legislative authority on any matters but Congress legislates for it.

While Congress has plenary power over the Territory and might pass specific Acts for its benefit or might exempt the Territory from general Acts as it sees fit and thus could have exempted the Territory from the provisions of the Antitrust Act where the Fair Trade Act is involved, instead by the Miller-Tydings and the McGuire Acts Congress left the Territory in the same position as the various States, that is, the Territory could enact such fair-trade laws or not as it might deem desirable.

See Christianson v. King County, 239 U. S. 356, 365, where Mr. Justice Hughes, in holding that an escheat law was a proper subject of legislation by the Territory of Washington, stated "the local legislature has generally been entrusted 'with the enactment of the entire system of municipal law'" and continued:

> "In the case of the Territories, Congress could have dealt with this subject if it chose, but it did not see fit to establish a rule of its own. The matter, however, remained a 'rightful subject' of legislation and Congress did not except it from the broad grant of legislative power."

If it is desirable for States to have the power to exempt themselves by Fair Trade Acts from antitrust provisions of Federal laws, it is equally desirable for the Territory of Hawaii to have the same power.

The power of the territorial legislature being "as plenary as that of the legislature of a State" (Cope v. Cope, supra), the Territory has just as much right and power to enact a Fair Trade Act as Illinois or New York or any of the other States whose Fair Trade Acts have been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

[¶ 69,254] Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7678. Argued November 10, 1958. Decided January 20, 1959.

On Petition to Review and Set Aside an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Combining or Conspiring—Allocation of Selling Time to Tobacco Warehouses—Performance System—Gain or Loss Provision—New Warehouse Provision—Legality.—There was substantial evidence to support a Federal Trade Commission ruling that certain regulations of a tobacco board of trade concerning the allocation of selling time to warehousemen unreasonably restrained trade in the purchase and sale of tobacco in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The board had adopted a performance system for the allotment of selling time. Under a pure performance system, selling time is allotted to each warehouse in direct proportion to the producers' sales in such warehouse during the preceding year. The board, however, had modified the system by a gain or loss provision: that the selling time allotted to any warehouse should not vary more than 3½ per cent from the selling time allotted to such warehouse for the preceding season. Under another provision, a new warehouse was allotted a unit of selling time equal to the average of the selling times of all warehouses on the market. The condemnation of the 3½ per cent limit was clearly justified; however, a reasonable limitation on the percentage of gain or loss in any one year would not violate the antitrust laws. The Commission's order did not prevent a reasonable limitation based upon a percentage of the total selling time rather than on the selling time allotted to the particular warehouse for the preceding season. The evidence clearly supported the condemnation of the new warehouse provision in connection with the gain or loss provision; however, it was not so clear that the new warehouse provision itself, or combined with a reasonable gain or loss provision, would unduly restrain trade. The validity of the new warehouse provision had been upheld by the North Carolina Supreme Court. When a performance system is used, it is necessary to adopt some kind of a new warehouse provision. The question is whether such a provision constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade. The Commission's order with respect to the new warehouse provision was not entirely clear. The court was not certain whether the order meant that the board should give credit for the full size and capacity of a new warehouse or simply take such size and capacity into account and adopt a rule which gives reasonable weight to this factor.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5033.15, 5033.31.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Tobacco Board of Trade's Regulations as State Activity—Effect of State Laws on Commission's Jurisdiction.—The Federal Trade Commission had jurisdiction to challenge a tobacco board of trade's regulations concerning the allocation of selling time to tobacco warehousemen as unfair methods of competition and unfair acts or practices in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The contention that the board of trade was an administrative agency of the State of North Carolina, exercising powers delegated to it by the legislature, and was therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission was rejected. It is not the purpose of Federal antitrust laws to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. However, the regulations and activities of the board of trade, particularly the adoption and enforcement of such regulations, did not constitute activities of state officers or agents but were individual activities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission. Action by the state had been confined to (1) the statutory requirement that the regulations adopted by tobacco boards of trade be just and reasonable and not in restraint of trade, and (2) decisions of the courts upon controversies arising between members. Essentially, the operation of the boards of trade was in the hands of private parties. A state can neither authorize individuals to perform acts which violate the antitrust laws nor declare that such action is lawful. In determining the scope of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the court was not bound by the state's courts characterization of the boards.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.361.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Tobacco Auction Market—Public Interest.—There is a substantial public interest in maintaining free and open competition among warehousemen in tobacco auction markets; therefore, the Federal Trade Commission had jurisdiction to challenge a tobacco board of trade's regulations concerning the allocation of selling time to tobacco warehousemen as unfair methods of competition and unfair acts or practices in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Under the Tobacco Inspection Act of 1935, tobacco auction transactions are affected with a public interest. The public interest often is specific and substantial because the unfair method employed threatens the existence of present or potential competition. The contention that the instant case was a private controversy, involving no specific and substantial public interest, was rejected.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.581.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Interstate Commerce—Regulation of Selling Time in Tobacco Auction Market.—The Federal Trade Commission has no jurisdiction to proscribe unfair methods of competition that merely affect interstate commerce; they must be in such commerce. However, the contention that the adoption of regulations governing "the internal allocation of selling time" to the warehouses in a tobacco auction market is not interstate commerce was rejected. Tobacco auctions are an integral and indispensable part of interstate commerce in tobacco. The practices of a tobacco board of trade in adopting such regulations are an essential part of such commerce.

Remanding a decision of the Federal Trade Commission in Dkt. 6490.

Before SOPER, Circuit Judge, and THOMSEN and BOREMAN, District Judges.

[Issues]

THOMSEN, District Judge [In full text]: This petition to review a "cease and desist" order of the Federal Trade Commission raises two principal questions: (1) whether the case is within the jurisdiction of the Commission; and (2) whether there is substantial evidence in the record considered as a whole which supports the finding of the Commission that certain regulations adopted by petitioner Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc. (Board) unreasonably and unduly restrain trade in the purchase and sale of tobacco on the Asheville market and constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair acts or practices in commerce within the meaning of § (5) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 45.

[Tobacco Sales]

Tobacco, the principal agricultural commodity produced in North Carolina, is sold at auction through the facilities of tobacco warehouses by farmers to manufacturers of tobacco products and to independent buyers for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce. A tobacco market consists of a group of warehouses, which operate under public license. Burley tobacco of the North Carolina type is grown in eight states. There are three Burley tobacco auction markets in North Carolina, of which Asheville is by far the largest, and there are several such markets in eastern Tennessee. In 1954 about 11.5 million pounds of producers' tobacco were sold at Asheville, and in 1955 about 9.2 million pounds.[1]

[State Regulation]

Various aspects of the production and marketing of tobacco are subject to state or federal regulation. N. C. Gen. Stat. § 106-465 authorizes local tobacco boards of trade to make reasonable rules and regulations for the economical and efficient handling of the sale of leaf tobacco at auction, but does not authorize the control of prices or the making of rules and regulations in restraint of trade. The boards adopt regulations governing the allotment of selling time to the warehouses on the market, and to new warehouses. The need for such allocation is well settled. Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade, 5 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,706], 244 F. 2d 471; In the Matter of Wilson Tobacco Board of Trade, F. T. C. Dkt. No. 6262, 1956-57, C. C. H. TRADE REGULATION REPORTER [Transfer Binder] paras. 25,808, 26,180.

[Petitioner]

Petitioner Board is a non-stock corporation organized in 1931. Membership is open to warehousemen and purchasers of leaf tobacco. The twelve auction warehouses in the market are members, entitled to one vote each. Purchasers may hold either participating or non-participating memberships; participating members are entitled to vote, but only warehousemen or their general managers are eligible for membership on the Board of Directors, which is the governing body of the Board.

[Selling Time]

By common consent the Burley Tobacco Association, a voluntary interstate organization, assigns selling time to the several Burley tobacco markets. The auction season at Asheville begins around December 1 and lasts about six weeks. The major tobacco companies added a second set of buyers to the Asheville market in 1953, making possible two simultaneous auctions. Thereafter the total selling time available was eight hours a day, four hours for each set of buyers. A rotation system is used, each warehouse received its allotted percentage of selling time each day. If a warehouse does not have enough tobacco on its floor to consume all of its allotted time, "free time" results and passes on until the sale reaches a warehouse which has enough tobacco on hand to use the free time on that day. A warehouse is said to be "blocked" when it has more tobacco on its floor than can be sold in its allotted time.

[Asheville Market]

In 1953 the Asheville market had eleven warehouses, with a total of 475,182 square feet of floor space; four firms operated all of them. During the 1953 market season and for several years prior thereto, the Board, to the satisfaction of all members, had allotted selling time on the "floor space system", i.e. the percentage of the selling time allotted to each warehouse was in direct proportion to its floor space. However, members of the Board and their attorney had discussed possible amendments to its by-laws, including a change in the method of alloting sales time. They feared a building war like those which had taken place elsewhere under the floor space system. On January 2, 1954, some of the warehouse members entered into a written agreement to govern the allotment of selling time among the warehouses for the 1954 and succeeding seasons, provided no new warehouse was built. They also petitioned the Board to adopt a regulation which would give new warehouses during their first year selling time based on 50% of their floor space, increasing to 75% during the second year, and to 100% in subsequent years. The proposed regulation was adopted, but never went into effect.

[New Allocation System]

On January 14, 1954, C. T. Day, an independent buyer of tobacco, who had been a member of the Board for many years, announced his intention of building a warehouse containing enough floor space to capture 25% of the total available selling time. Petitioner Walker took up Day's challenge, saying that every time Day drove a nail he would drive one too. During 1954 Day did build a new warehouse, which contained 125,000 square feet of floor space. Consequently, on October 2, 1954, the Board adopted new by-laws which (1) discarded the floor space system, (2) adopted a modified "performance system" for the allotment of selling time to existing warehouses, and (3) set up a "unit" system for the allocation of selling time upon the entry of a new warehouse. Under a pure performance system selling time is allotted to each warehouse in direct proportion to producers' sales in such warehouse during the year preceding the allotment. The Board, however, modified the performance system by a "gain or loss proviso": that the selling time allotted to any warehouse shall not vary more than 3½% from the selling time allotted to such warehouse for the preceding season. The "new warehouse proviso" adopted by the Board allots to a new warehouse a unit of selling time equal to the average of the selling times of all warehouses on the market, unless the new warehouse is smaller than the average, in which event its allotment is reduced.

After the meeting, the Board of Directors allotted selling time for the 1954 season in accordance with the new by-laws. Since Day's new warehouse raised to twelve the number on the market, it was allotted 8.33% of the selling time, i.e., one-twelfth of the total time available, although it contained 20.83% of the total selling space. The remainder of the time was divided among the other warehouses in accordance with their sales during the 1953 season.

[Private Suit]

Immediately after the allocation of his 1954 selling time, Day filed suit in the Superior Court of North Carolina for an injunction against enforcement of the new regulations. In November, 1954, that court denied the injunction after conducting a hearing and making findings of fact. Day appealed to the Supreme Court of North Carolina, which affirmed the judgment below, stating that "the rule by which the allotment was made to plaintiff by the Board appears fair and equitable. Indeed, it does not appear that there is any restraint of trade in the rule." Day v. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,057], 242 N. C. 136, 144. During the 1954 season, despite the fact that Day's warehouse was blocked more often and for longer periods than any other warehouse, he succeeded in selling 20.19% of all producers' tobacco sold on the Asheville market. He was able to sell more tobacco than could be sold in his allotted selling time because of free time accruing to him on days when the other warehouses had sold all the tobacco they had on hand before their allotted time expired. The gain or loss proviso, however, limited any possible increase in Day's 1955 allotment to 3½% of the 8.33% allotted to him in 1954, so his allotment for the 1955 season was only 8.64% of the total selling time. Nevertheless, he sold 21.4% of the total tonnage in the 1955 season and over 27% in the 1956 season.

[FTC Order]

After the decision of the Supreme Court of North Carolina in Day v. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, Day lodged a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission. Hearings were held before an examiner. In his initial decision the examiner found that the acts and practices complained of "have had and now have a tendency and capacity to, and do, unreasonably and unduly restrain trade in the Asheville tobacco market in the purchase, sale and distribution of tobacco in commerce, and constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act," and issued an order to cease and desist. On appeal the Commission modified one paragraph in that decision, restricting its scope; otherwise, the Commission adopted the hearing examiner's decision.

The Commission's order requires petitioners, in connection with the movement of tobacco in interstate commerce, to cease and desist from "devising, adopting, using, adhering to, maintaining or cooperating in the carrying out of any plan, system, method, policy or practice which: 1. Allots selling time to new entrant warehouses on the Asheville tobacco market on any basis or in any manner which fails to take into account and give reasonable credit for the full size and capacity of a new entrant; 2. Limits the possible gain or loss in selling time allotted to any warehouse, under the performance system or any other system, for any one selling season to 3½%, or any other specific percentage, of the selling time so allotted to such warehouse for the preceding selling season; or 3. Has the purpose or effect of foreclosing or preventing any new entrant warehouse on the Asheville tobacco market, or any other warehouse doing business on that market, from competing therein on a fair and equal basis."

JURISDICTION

[Public Interest]

Petitioners contend that this is a private controversy, involving no specific and substantial public interest. F. T. C. v. Klesner, 280 U. S. 19; American Airlines v. North American Airlines, 351 U. S. 79, 83. However, Congress has declared: "Transactions in tobacco involving the sale thereof at auction as commonly conducted at auction markets are affected with a public interest * * *." Tobacco Inspection Act of 1935, 7 U. S. C. A. 511(a). This court has held that there is a substantial public interest in maintaining free and open competition among warehousemen on tobacco auction markets. American Federation of Tobacco Growers, Inc. v. Neal, 4 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,675], 183 F. 2d 869. See also Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade, 5 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,706], 244 F. 2d 471. The Supreme Court noted in Klesner that the public interest often is specific and substantial because the unfair method employed threatens the existence of present or potential competition. 280 U. S. at 28. That is the basis for the jurisdiction of the Commission in this case.

[Interstate Commerce]

Petitioners further contend that the adoption of regulations governing "the internal allocation of selling time" to the several warehouses is not in interstate commerce. The Commission has no jurisdiction to proscribe unfair methods of competition that merely affect interstate commerce; they must be in such commerce. F. T. C. v. Bunte Bros. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,098], 312 U. S. 349; cf. Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. F. T. C., 8 Cir., 13 F. 2d 673, 684. Tobacco auctions are an integral and indispensable part of interstate commerce in tobacco. Currin v. Wallace, 306 U. S. 1, 10, aff'g Wallace v. Currin, 4 Cir., 95 F. 2d 856, 859, 863. The practices of the Board and its members at issue in this case are an essential part of such commerce. American Federation of Tobacco Growers, Inc. v. Neal, 4 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,675], 183 F. 2d 869.

[State Regulation]

Petitioners' final argument on jurisdiction is that the Board is an administrative agency of the State of North Carolina, exercising powers delegated to it by the legislature, and is therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission.

In Parker v. Brown [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,250], 317 U. S. 341, 350, the Supreme Court held that it is not the purpose of the antitrust laws to restrain "a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." On the other hand, "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." 317 U. S. at 350, 351. See also Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384. The question, therefore, is whether the activities of tobacco boards of trade, particularly the adoption and enforcement of the regulations involved in this case, constitute activities of state officers and agents within the rule of Parker v. Brown.

North Carolina Gen. Stat. § 106-465 authorizes tobacco warehousemen and purchasers to organize local tobacco boards of trade either as non-stock member corporations or as voluntary unincorporated associations, and "to make reasonable rules and regulations for the economical and efficient handling of the sale of leaf tobacco at auction on the warehouse floors in the several towns and cities in North Carolina in which an auction market is situated". The statute also provides: "Nothing in this section shall authorize the organization of any association having for its purpose the control of prices or the making of rules and regulations in restraint of trade."

In Kinston Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc. v. Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., 235 N. C. 737, and Cooperative Warehouse v. Lumberton Tobacco Board of Trade [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,056], 242 N. C. 123, the court referred to the boards as "administrative commissions." In determining the scope of the Federal Trade Commission Act, however, this court is not bound by the State court's characterization of the boards. The interpretation of a federal statute is peculiarly the function of the federal courts.

> "It is familiar doctrine that the prohibition of a federal statute may not be set at naught, or its benefits denied, by state statutes or state common law rules. In such a case our decision is not controlled by Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64. There we followed state law because it was the law to be applied in the federal courts. But the doctrine of that case is inapplicable to those areas of judicial decision within which the policy of the law is so dominated by the sweep of federal statutes that legal relations which they affect must be deemed governed by federal law having its source in those statutes, rather than by local law. * * * When a federal statute condemns an act as unlawful, the extent and nature of the legal consequences of the condemnation, though left by the statute to judicial determination, are nevertheless federal questions, the answers to which are to be derived from the statute and the federal policy which it has adopted. To the federal statute and policy, conflicting state law and policy must yield. * * *" Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,245], 317 U. S. 173, at 176.

Parker v. Brown suggests the standards which federal courts should apply in determining what is state action. In that case the Supreme Court was considering a program set up by state officials, under the provisions of a California statute, to control the production of raisins and to prevent unlimited competition therein. Upholding the program against a claim that it violated the Sherman Act, the court said:

> "* * * It is the state which has created the machinery for establishing the prorate program. Although the organization of a prorate zone is proposed by producers, and a prorate program, approved by the Commission, must also be approved by referendum of producers, it is the state, acting through the Commission, which adopts the program and which enforces it with penal sanctions, in the execution of a governmental policy. The prerequisite approval of the program upon referendum by a prescribed number of producers is not the imposition by them of their will upon the minority by force of agreement or combination which the Sherman Act prohibits. The state itself exercises its legislative authority in making the regulation and in prescribing the conditions of its application." 317 U. S. at 352.

The teaching of Parker v. Brown is that the antitrust laws are directed against individual and not state action. When a state has a public policy against free competition in an industry important to it, the state may regulate that industry in order to control or, in a proper case, to eliminate competition therein. It may even permit persons subject to such control to participate in the regulation, provided their activities are adequately supervised by independent state officials. Rice v. Chicago Board of Trade, 331 U. S. 247, 253, n. 4; United States v. S. E. Underwriters' Association [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,253], 322 U. S. 533, 562; Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384. See also note in 95 Pa. L. Rev. 223, 229. But such action must be state action, not individual action masquerading as state action. A state can neither authorize individuals to perform acts which violate the antitrust laws nor declare that such action is lawful.

Before § 106-465 was passed, tobacco boards of trade existed at common law in North Carolina by common consent or by contract and exercised the power to make regulations governing auction sales of tobacco. Gray v. Warehouse, 181 N. C. 166; Cooperative Warehouse v. Lumberton Board of Trade, 242 N. C. at 132, 133. It was recognized that the business was affected with a public interest and that those engaged in the business were obliged to operate in a way that was reasonable and beneficial to the trade.

The decisions of the North Carolina courts since the enactment of § 106-465 make it clear that the sale of tobacco at auction is of great public importance to the State of North Carolina, but they also show that the operation of the business is in the hands of private parties. A tobacco board of trade is organized primarily for the benefit of those engaged in the business; its articles of association and bylaws constitute a contract amongst the members by which each member consents to reasonable regulations pertaining to the conduct of the business. Warehouse Assn. v. Warehouse, 231 N. C. 142; Cooperative Warehouse v. Lumberton Board of Trade, supra.

As the Federal Trade Commission noted:

> "The State bears no part of the expense of operating boards of trade. The officers and directors of the Asheville Board, and of other boards, are neither elected by the people nor appointed by State authority; they are businessmen who own and operate warehouses on the tobacco market. They are not accountable to the State, and are not supervised in any manner by State officials."

The State officials did not require compliance with a North Carolina statute which directs each State agency to file with the Secretary of State all rules and regulations adopted by the agency for the performance of its functions. Action by the State has been confined to (1) the statutory requirement that the regualtions adopted by the boards be just and reasonable and not in restraint of trade, and (2) decisions of the courts upon controversies arising between members.

The regulations and activities of petitioners which are being considered in this case were not state action, but were individual activities subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE

[Performance System]

The decision of the Commission did not condemn the use of a performance system for the allotment of selling time.[2] The Commission objected to the modification of the performance system by the 3½% "gain or loss proviso", and to the "new warehouse" provision. It held that "the new warehouse proviso and the gain or loss proviso, both separately and operating in conjunction with each other, are unreasonable and unfair and constitute an undue hinderance to and restriction upon fair competition in the Asheville tobacco market."

[Gain or Loss Provision]

With respect to the gain or loss provision the Commission said:

> "* * * The record demonstrates that, through its operation, established warehouses could not lose more than 3½% of their selling time in any given season by reason of marketing difficulties encountered during the preceding season and, also by reason of the proviso, that neither a new entrant nor any established warehouse could gain more than 3½% in any one season. Clearly, under this proviso, existing warehouses gained an unreasonable and unfair competitive advantage, since if a new entry, notwithstanding the fact that its allocated time was limited under the 'new warehouse proviso', still managed to compete by improving or changing service, the established warehouses remained secure in the knowledge that any newcomer would be limited arbitrarily to an increase in selling time each year to 3½%. As illustrative of this result, it appears that the new warehouse previously mentioned as having been granted 8.33% of available selling time in 1954 would have to wait about 28 years to be allocated the approximately 21% of selling time which it would have obtained under regulations in effect when it was constructed."

The Commission ordered petitioners to cease and desist from using any plan which

[2] F. T. C. Dkt. No. 6490, 1957-1958 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTER [Transfer Binder], para. 27,076. The legality of the performance method of allocating selling time had previously been sustained by the Commission, Matter of Wilson Tobacco Board of Trade, F. T. C. Dkt. No. 6262, 1956, 57 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTER [Transfer Binder], paras. 25,808, 26,180, by the Supreme Court of North Carolina in Day v. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,057], 242 N. C. 136, and by the Fifth Circuit in Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade, 244 F. 2d at 480.

"limits the possible gain or loss in selling time allotted to any warehouse, under the performance system or any other system, for any one selling season to 3½%, or any other specific percentage, of the selling time so allotted to such warehouse for the preceding selling season."

The condemnation of the 3½% limit is clearly justified. Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade, 244 F. 2d at 842. This feature does not seem to have been considered by the Supreme Court of North Carolina in Day v. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade. There are, however, a number of reasons why it may be desirable that there be some limit on the possible gain or loss to an individual warehouse in a single year. Loss or damage to a warehouse by fire or other casualty, illness of the warehouseman, or other fortuitous circumstances, may cause an abnormal reduction in the business of a warehouse in a particular year, which should not be perpetuated by a performance rule without some limiting proviso. Again, a warehouseman with large financial resources might attempt to monopolize the market through advertising campaigns, bidding in farmers' tobacco at prices above those which his competitors can afford, and other methods, which could be used for several years until his selling time is abnormally increased, and his competitors of more limited means are driven from the market, even though they have rendered adequate service and have helped to build up the market over the years. A reasonable limitation on the percentage of gain or loss in any one year would not violate the antitrust laws. The order of the Commission does not prevent a reasonable limitation based upon a percentage of the total selling time rather than on the selling time allotted to the particular warehouse for the preceding season.

[New Warehouse Provision]

The Commission condemned the "new warehouse" provision separately and in connection with the 3½% "gain or loss proviso", although that very provision had been approved by the Supreme Court of North Carolina in Day v. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, and a similar new warehouse provision had been approved by the Fifth Circuit in Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade. The evidence clearly supports the condemnation of the new warehouse provision in connection with the 3½% gain or loss proviso. But it is not so clear that the new warehouse provision itself, or combined with a reasonable gain or loss provision, would unduly tend to restrain trade or constitute an unfair practice or an unfair method of competition.

The Commission does not disapprove of the adoption of a performance system, as opposed to a floor space system or other method of allocating selling time. When a performance system is used, it is necessary to adopt some sort of new warehouse provision, and arguments suggest themselves for and against any type of new warehouse provision which might be adopted. On the one hand, the prevention of overbuilding and building wars is a legitimate objective; on the other hand, the owners of existing warehouses should not be allowed to prevent the construction of desirable new facilities. The controlling principles, as stated by the Supreme Court in Federal Communications Commission v. R. C. A. Communications, Inc., 346 U. S. 86, 91, 92, and in the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in Associated Press v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,384], 326 U. S. 1, 27, were quoted and applied by the Fifth Circuit in Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade, 244 F. 2d at 479. Competition is not an absolute. Every restraint of trade is not a violation of the antitrust laws; the decisive question is whether it is an unreasonable restraint, and this depends on the significance of the restraint in relation to the particular market under investigation.

The new warehouse provision adopted by the Board as part of its performance system tends to discourage overbuilding by limiting the amount of selling time which a new warehouse may receive in its first year. But combined with a reasonable gain or loss proviso, or with no limit at all on gains or losses, it need not unduly discourage necessary or desirable building operations; it need not prevent a new warehouse from obtaining a fair share of selling time after the first year, nor, indeed, a fair share of the business during the first year through the use of free time (defined above). Day's experience supports this conclusion; he promptly obtained a share of the business greater than his proportion of the total floor space, even though he was hampered by an unreasonable gain or loss proviso.

The Commission noted that the extra time which Day received during the first and subsequent years was the result of free time; they quoted with approval the statement of the hearing examiner that "[F]or any business to be forced by regulation to depend competitively upon such a fortuitous circumstance is clearly unfair." But it must be remembered that under the performance method, which the Commission has approved, the utilization of free time is the way in which a warehouse normally obtains a larger share of the business. The limitation which the national marketing quota imposes on the amount of tobacco produced in any market area, the competition between neighboring markets, and other factors, ordinarily result in free time which may be used by other warehousemen, adding flexibility to the system. The use of such free time by a warehouse in one year increases the allotment of selling time to that warehouse in the following year. Free time will ordinarily furnish reasonable opportunity for expansion under a performance system, so that the public, i. e. the farmers are not hurt.[8] Free time may not permit the builder of a new warehouse to expand as fast as he would like, but his personal complaint, like the complaint of Day against the Board, decided by the North Carolina courts, does not justify condemnation of the regulations unless they tend to discourage unduly the construction of new facilities which may be needed on the market. In considering the reasonableness of such restraint, the other side of the coin must also be considered—the evil of overbuilding and building wars. Unless the facilities on the market are inadequate in quantity or quality, the addition of new facilities may do more harm than good.

The Commission cited certain testimony to show that the new warehouse provision had a deleterious effect on farmers and on the Asheville tobacco market, namely, that some farmers' tobacco had to remain on the floor of the new warehouse for periods from three days to four weeks before selling time became available, and that because of this situation a few farmers took their tobacco to other markets. This testimony, however, is explained by uncontradicted evidence of the ordinary course of business on the Asheville market; of the custom of many farmers to bring their tobacco to the market before it opened, as a result of which the entire market was blocked for twelve days; of the custom of many farmers in the Asheville area to sell their tobacco in Tennessee; and of the efforts of the Tennessee warehousemen to obtain such business by giving such farmers preferred selling time and, in some cases, paying all or part of the additional hauling charges. A few farmers complained because they could not be assured when their tobacco would be sold in Asheville; but if the warehouses in Asheville or anywhere else already contain more tobacco than can be sold in one day or one week because of the custom of the farmers to bring in their tobacco before the auction season opens, then giving preference to one farmer necessarily results in delaying the sale of the tobacco of another farmer, since the hours of sale are fixed by the Burley Tobacco Association.

The State of North Carolina is vitally interested in the protection of its tobacco markets. The Supreme Court of North Carolina considered the new warehouse provision at issue in this case and held it fair and equitable and not in restraint of trade. Day v. Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, 242 N. C. at 144. Although the reasons for that statement are not set out in that opinion, and the decision is not binding on the Commission or on this court, it is a factor which should be considered in determining the reasonableness of the new warehouse provision.

[Case Remanded]

The meaning of the first paragraph of the Commission's order is not entirely clear. It requires the Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade to cease and desist from adopting any play or system which "allots selling time to new entrant warehouses on the Asheville tobacco market or any basis or in any manner which fails to take into account, and give reasonable credit for, the full size and capacity of a new entrant." We are not certain whether this means that the Board shall give credit for the full size and capacity of a new warehouse or simply take such size and capacity into account and adopt a rule which gives reasonable weight to this factor. In order to correct this ambiguity, and in order that the Commission may give further consideration to the questions which have arisen in this case and are discussed in this opinion, the case is remanded to the Commission for further proceedings.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 58 C 2208. Dated January 29, 1959.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Violations as Defenses—Exclusive Dealing Provision in Franchise Agreements as Defense to Dealers' Enforcement Action.—Dealers in water softening equipment were granted a declaratory judgment requiring a supplier to recognize the validity of its franchise agreements with the dealers. The supplier had contended that such agreements were invalid because a provision of the agreements requiring the dealers not to deal in the products of the supplier's competitors was illegal under Section 3 of the Clayton Act. The supplier failed to establish that the agreements violated that statute. Moreover, even if such a violation had been proved, the illegality of the exclusive dealing provision (1) would not have excused performance by the supplier where the dealers, innocent of any violation, sought enforcement of the contract, and (2) would not have invalidated the agreements in their entirety since the parties had agreed that any provision held illegal was to be severed and the balance of the agreement considered valid and binding.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9042.475.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Exclusive Dealing—Effect of FTC Consent Order on Franchise Agreements.—A supplier of water softening equipment could not interpose a Federal Trade Commission consent order as a defense to an action by its dealers for a declaratory judgment recognizing the validity of their franchise agreements since the supplier had voluntarily agreed to the consent order. The order, which prohibited the supplier from enforcing the dealers' obligations under the franchise agreements not to purchase or deal in certain products offered by the supplier's competitors, was entered after the Federal Trade Commission charged that the agreements violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act. However, a consent order, while binding on the parties who are signatories, has no effect on the rights of others who are not parties. The consent order against the supplier did not affect the rights of the dealers under their franchise agreements and did not release or excuse the supplier from performing its contractual obligations under those agreements.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.

Exclusive Dealing—Restrictive Trade Practices—Limited Requirements Contracts—Validity.—A supplier of water softening equipment failed to establish, by a preponderance of credible evidence, that its franchise agreements with its dealers were violative of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Those agreements provided that the dealers would buy their requirements, as to specified equipment and material, from the supplier. However, the dealers could purchase from other suppliers equipment and material not specified in the agreements.

Illinois Antitrust Law

Combinations and Conspiracies—Illinois Antitrust Laws—Exclusive Dealing—Validity of Dealership Franchise Agreements—Applicability of State Antitrust Laws—Interstate Commerce.—A supplier of water softening equipment failed to establish, by a preponderance of credible evidence, that its dealership franchise agreements were violative of the Illinois Antitrust Act. Also, that Act is applicable only to intrastate commerce; since the supplier's products were transported in interstate commerce, the Act had no application to the agreements.

For the defendant: Gerald E. White and B. L. Pollak, both of Chicago, Ill.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

[Declaratory Judgment Sought]

Michael L. Igoe, District Judge [In full text]: 1. This is a Complaint for Declaratory Judgment pursuant to § 2201 of the United States Judicial Code (62 Stat. 964, 63 Stat. 105, 68 Stat. 890, 28 U. S. C. A. § 2201), and is brought to require the defendant, Culligan, Inc., to recognize the validity of certain dealership franchise agreements entered into between Culligan and the respective plaintiffs. A case of actual controversy exists between the parties to this action over the validity of these franchise agreements.

[Parties]

2. The plaintiff, Beloit Culligan Soft Water Service, Inc., is a Wisconsin corporation with its principal place of business in Beloit, Wisconsin. The plaintiff, Adolph H. Samuels, is a citizen of Wisconsin, and resides in Beloit, Wisconsin. The plaintiff, Merrill R. Fie, is a citizen of Colorado, and resides in Denver, Colorado. The plaintiffs, John J. Burnham and Irene Burnham, are citizens of Utah, and reside in Salt Lake City, Utah. The plaintiffs, James W. Fisher and John W. Fisher, are citizens of California, and reside in Santa Rosa, California. The plaintiff, L. A. McRae, is a citizen of California, and resides in Palo Alto, California. The plaintiff, George W. Geiger, is a citizen of California, and resides in San Bruno, California. The defendant, Culligan, Inc., is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business in Northbrook, Illinois. The requisite diversity of citizenship is present and the matter in controversy between each of the plaintiffs and the defendant, Culligan, Inc., exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $10,000.00. The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties.

3. Culligan is the successor to a partnership consisting of Emmet J. Culligan, L. C. Culligan and J. M. Culligan, which was formed in 1937 and was the successor to the sole proprietorship of Emmet J. Culligan, who started the business in or about the year 1936; Culligan was incorporated on or about May 5, 1945, as Culligan Zeolite Company, but by amendment to its charter on or about September 2, 1952, changed its name to Culligan, Inc.; Culligan at the time of its incorporation assumed the rights and obligations of its predecessor's agreements with the plaintiffs set forth in the various franchise agreements under which the plaintiffs are operating.

[Franchise Agreements]

4. In the period 1945 to 1947, the plaintiffs Beloit, Fie, Burnham, Fisher and McRae entered into franchise agreements with Culligan, Inc., which are substantially identical, except for (a) the name of the dealer; (b) the territory; (c) the termination date; and (d) the number of service units that each dealer agrees to purchase during a specified period of time. These contracts are known as "First Post War Contracts."

5. In 1954 and 1956, respectively, the plaintiffs Geiger and Samuels entered into franchise agreements with Culligan, Inc., which are substantially identical, except for (a) the name of the dealer; (b) the territory; (c) the termination date; and (d) the number of service units that each dealer agrees to purchase during a specified period of time. These contracts are known as "Second Buff Contracts."

6. Common to each of the First Post War Contracts is the undertaking by Culligan to sell and by the respective plaintiffs to purchase all of the plaintiff's requirements of water softening units, equipment, parts and materials from Culligan. (Paragraph First of the First Post War Contracts.) Common to each of the Second Buff Contracts is the undertaking by the dealers to purchase specified equipment and material, including Culligan's water conditioning minerals and service tanks, and necessary fittings and parts, from Culligan, although equipment and material not specified may be purchased by the dealers from other suppliers. (Paragraph 2.2 of the Second Buff Contracts.) Culligan, prior to 1957, had partially waived the requirements provision of the First Post War Agreements to conform to the limited product requirements provision of the Second Buff Agreements. Defendant Culligan's company policy relating to dealers' purchases from it was based upon the Second Buff contracts and the Culligan Products Dealer Sales Agreement, regardless of the particular type of contract owned and held by the dealer. There are many items of supplies in addition to those listed in Schedule A of the Second Buff Contract which a dealer uses in connection with his Culligan water conditioning service operation which the dealer may at his option purchase from Culligan or others.

7. In addition to the foregoing, common to each of the First Post War Contracts is the undertaking by the dealer "to use his best endeavors in the sale and promotion" of water conditioning services and Culligan's products. (Paragraph 8a.) Common to each of the Second Buff Contracts is the obligation of the dealer "to diligently and loyally promote and foster" the increase of the use and acceptance of Culligan Soft Water service. (Paragraph 2.7.)

8. Moreover, under both the First Post War and Second Buff franchises, the dealer agrees that he will provide capital to establish and maintain offices, sales rooms and service plants acceptable to Culligan; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 8f; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 2.8); that he will maintain sufficient stock and equipment; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 8f; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 2.8); that he will maintain adequate books and records; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 8f; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 2.10(a)); that he will maintain in servicable and clean condition all service units in accordance with Culligan standards; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 8g; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 2.10(b)); that he will cooperate with the defendant in formulating sales promotion plans; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 8h; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 2.12).

9. Culligan has granted to each of those plaintiffs holding First Post War Agreements a designated territory, within which each plaintiff has the exclusive right to distribute Culligan's water conditioning products. (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 2.) Culligan grants to those plaintiffs holding Second Buff Agreements a designated territory, within which each plaintiff has an exclusive right to operate under the Culligan plan which is a comprehensive soft water service plan. (Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 2.1.)

10. Both types of agreements further provide that Culligan will render technical advice; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 7c; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 3.3); that Culligan will provide laboratory analyses of specimens of water; (First Post War Agreement — Paragraph 7a; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 3.1); that Culligan will provide the dealers with instruction in connection with any problems relating to the management and operation of the water conditioning business; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 7b; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 3.2); that Culligan will supply to the dealer bookkeeping and accounting information; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 7h; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 3.7); that Culligan will assist the dealers in promoting and developing their respective territories; (First Post War Agreement—Paragraph 7e; Second Buff Agreement—Paragraph 3.3).

[Severability Clauses]

11. Both types of agreements contain severability clauses. The First Post War Agreement provides (Paragraph 9j):

> "This is an Illinois agreement, and shall be construed according to the laws of the State of Illinois. If any provision of this Agreement is held to be invalid or unenforceable, this contract shall, as to such provisions, be considered divisible, and the balance of the agreement shall be valid and binding."

The Second Buff Agreement provides (Paragraph 4.17):

"This agreement shall be construed according to the laws of the State of Illinois. Any provision of this Agreement prohibited by law shall be ineffective to the extent of such prohibition without in any way invalidating or affecting the remaining provisions of this Agreement."

[Dealers' Investment]

12. Plaintiffs, pursuant to their individual franchise agreements with Culligan and in reliance thereon, have invested substantial sums of money to develop the territories which were granted to them by Culligan, and have at the present time a substantial capital investment in their respective business operations.

13. The plaintiffs have also expended large sums to develop an intangible asset of substantial value in the name "Culligan" in their respective areas, having done this in reliance upon the duration of their franchises and the exclusivity of their territories.

14. Included in such expenditures by plaintiffs has been extensive advertising through such media as newspapers, billboards, radio, television, and direct mailing. Advertising conducted by plaintiffs is done under the name "Culligan Soft Water Service" and plaintiffs do not advertise the name or names of their respective proprietors.

[FTC Action—Consent Decree]

15. On or about October 31, 1956, the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint against Culligan, alleging that Culligan was violating Section 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 14) by requiring its dealers not to purchase or deal in water softening products made by competitors of Culligan; subsequently, Culligan negotiated with the Federal Trade Commission and voluntarily agreed to a Consent Order which was issued by the Federal Trade Commission and became effective on May 23, 1957; This Consent Order provided that Culligan cease and desist from:

"(1) Selling, or making any contract or agreement for the sale of, any such products on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not use, or deal in, or sell, similar or related products supplied by any competitor or competitors of respondent.

"(2) Enforcing, or continuing in operation or effect, any condition, agreement, or understanding in, or in connection with, any existing contract of sale, which condition, agreement, or understanding is to the effect that the purchaser of such products shall not use or deal in similar or related products supplied by any competitor or competitors of respondent."

The Order, however, also provided that:

". . . nothing in this order shall prohibit respondent from entering into an agreement with its dealers prohibiting them from using or selling for use, in the Culligan plan, parts, equipment or material which would adversely affect respondent's water conditioning service unit."

16. The plaintiffs and the other Culligan dealers were not made parties to the Federal Trade Commission proceeding against defendant, Culligan, Inc.

[Termination of Franchises]

17. Subsequent to the entry of the aforesaid Consent Order, and by letter dated July 9, 1957, Culligan notified its dealers including the plaintiffs, that the Consent Order ". . . by its nature invalidated all Culligan franchises . . ."

18. Subsequently, Culligan submitted a new form of franchise agreement to its dealers, including the plaintiffs.

19. The new form of franchise agreement terminated any pre-existing franchise, granted the dealer a non-exclusive territory and eliminated other important rights theretofore enjoyed by plaintiffs under their existing franchise agreements.

20. Plaintiffs declined to execute the new form of franchise agreement and contended that their respective existing franchise agreements were valid and binding agreements.

21. By letter dated December 29, 1958, Culligan wrote to each of the plaintiffs purporting to terminate and cancel the plaintiffs' existing franchise agreements on the sole ground that plaintiffs had failed to execute the new form of franchise. Culligan, in said letter, informed the plaintiffs that Culligan would no longer sell its products to them and demanded that they discontinue the use of the name "Culligan" in their businesses and eliminate all use of Culligan trade names and trademarks.

22. Culligan's letter of termination of December 29, 1958, did not refer to any breach by plaintiffs of their franchise agreements.

[Irreparable Harm]

23. Culligan's refusal to sell to plaintiffs, refusal to acknowledge plaintiffs as its dealers, and refusal to perform its obligations under its franchise agreements with plaintiffs, and demand that plaintiffs discontinue use of the name "Culligan" in their businesses, will cause plaintiffs' businesses substantial and irreparable harm.

Conclusions of Law

[Consent Decree as Defense]

1. A consent order or consent decree, while binding on the parties signatory thereto, has no effect on the rights of others who are not parties thereto.

2. The Consent Order of April 15, 1957, to which Culligan is a party, does not affect the rights of plaintiffs under their franchise agreements with defendant Culligan and does not release or excuse Culligan from performing its contractual obligations under said franchise agreements.

3. While Culligan, by the terms of said Consent Order, cannot enforce plaintiffs' obligation under said franchise agreements not to purchase, use or deal in certain water softening products offered by competitors of Culligan, Culligan cannot interpose the Consent Decree as a defense in this action since Culligan voluntarily agreed to the Consent Order enjoining enforcement of such obligation.

[Illinois Antitrust Act]

4. The products sold by defendant Culligan to the plaintiffs are transported in interstate commerce. The Illinois Antitrust Act (Chapter 38, Section 569 et seq. Ill. Rev. Stat. 1957) is applicable only to intrastate commerce and hence said Act has no application to the franchise agreements entered into between defendant and plaintiffs.

5. Defendant has failed to establish by a preponderance of credible evidence that, even if such Anti-trust Act of Illinois were applicable here, that said franchise agreements are violative of said Act.

[Clayton Act, Section 3]

6. Defendant has failed to establish by a preponderance of credible evidence that said franchise agreements, or any provision thereof, are violative of Section 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 14).

7. Section 3 of the Clayton Act can be violated only by a seller who exacts from the purchaser an undertaking or agreement not to purchase, use or deal in the products of a competitor of the seller. Said Act is intended for the protection of purchasers as well as the public.

[Innocent Party Entitled to Enforcement]

8. Even had defendant proved that it had violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by its exaction from plaintiffs of an undertaking not to purchase, use or deal in products of competitors of defendant, such illegality would not excuse performance by the defendant of its contract obligations where plaintiffs, innocent of any violation, seek enforcement of the contract.

[Severability]

9. Even had defendant proved that it had violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by its exaction from plaintiffs of an undertaking not to purchase, use or deal in products of competitors of defendant, such illegality would not invalidate the franchise agreements in their entirety since the parties had agreed, in the event any provision of the agreement was held illegal, that such provision be severed and that the balance of the agreement be valid and binding.

[Mutuality and Consideration]

10. Even had defendant proved that it had violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act said franchise agreements would not be void or voidable for lack of mutuality or consideration since the plaintiffs are still obligated by said agreements to use their best efforts in the promotion of defendant's products and services.

[Injunction Granted]

11. Defendant has failed to establish any valid defense to plaintiffs' cause of action.

12. Plaintiffs are entitled to a declaratory judgment in their favor and are entitled to the issuance of a permanent injunction to prevent defendant from causing irreparable injury to the businesses of plaintiffs.

Case No. 979 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Tying Arrangements—Industrial Leases—Requiring Lessees to Ship Incoming and Outgoing Freight Over Specified Railroad.—A railroad was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into, enforcing, or renewing any provision contained in its industrial leases which required lessees to ship any outgoing or incoming freight over the railroad's own lines or over the lines of a railroad designated by it. The decree also prohibited the railroad from entering into or claiming any rights under any agreement which restricted the mode of transportation which might be used to ship freight to or from any industrial site purchased or leased from the railroad.

[Consent Decree]

George H. Boldt, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein; defendants, Northern Pacific Railway Company and Northwestern Improvement Company, having appeared and filed their answer to the complaint; the Partial Final Judgment entered herein on August 31, 1956, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States on March 10, 1958, having adjudged unlawful and ordered termination of every provision of any lease (except industrial leases as hereinafter defined) or sale of land or timber providing that the lessee or purchaser shall ship outgoing or incoming freight over the lines of Northern Pacific, and plaintiff and defendants, by their attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein with respect to the claims involved in this action based upon defendants' industrial leases and without said judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party hereto with respect to any such issue; and counsel for defendants having advised the court that defendants have caused to be served upon each of their lessees who is party to an industrial lease a notice of cancellation of traffic clauses contained therein, a copy of such notice being attached hereto, marked "Exhibit A" and made a part of this Judgment;

Now, Therefore, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein with respect to such claims based upon defendants' industrial leases, and upon consent as aforesaid, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I.

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties hereto.

The complaint states claims for relief against defendants under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II.

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Northern Pacific" means the defendant Northern Pacific Railway Company, a Wisconsin corporation having its principal office at St. Paul, Minnesota;

(B) "Northwestern" means the defendant Northwestern Improvement Company, a Delaware corporation having its principal office at St. Paul, Minnesota;

(C) "Industrial leases" mean leases of sites leased for commercial and industrial purposes, and shall include grain elevator and grain warehouse leases;

(D) "Traffic clauses" mean clauses contained in leases which specify that the lessee shall ship incoming or outgoing freight over the railroad of the Northern Pacific or over the lines of a railroad to be designated by either defendant.

III.

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to the defendants Northern Pacific and Northwestern, their officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV.

[Industrial Leases—Specific Relief]

Each of the defendants is enjoined and restrained from adhering to, enforcing, reviving or renewing any provision contained in defendants' industrial leases providing that the lessee shall ship any outgoing or incoming freight over the railroad of the Northern Pacific, or over the lines of a railroad to be designated by either defendant, and the defendants are ordered and directed to file within sixty (60) days from the date of entry of this Judgment proof by affidavit of service upon all holders of industrial leases from defendants of notice of cancellation of any provision contained in such leases providing that the lessee shall ship any outgoing or incoming freight over the railroad of the Northern Pacific or over the lines of a railroad to be designated by either defendant.

V.

[Prohibited Agreements]

Defendants Northern Pacific and Northwestern are enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, or claiming any rights under:

(A) Any provisions of any industrial lease which are identical with or similar to those described in Section IV hereof, or

(B) Any contract, agreement or understanding restricting the mode of transportation which may be used to ship freight to or from any industrial site purchased or leased from either defendant.

VI.

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted (1) access during the office hours of such defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any matter contained in this Final Judgment, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers and employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matter. Upon such request the defendants shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by means provided in this Section VI shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VII.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defense—Attacking Validity of Patent by Licensee—Licensing Agreement as Price-Fixing Arrangement. —A patentee's action to recover royalties under a licensing agreement was dismissed on the ground that the licensing agreement, which provided that neither the patentee nor the licensee would sell at less than agreed prices, was an invalid attempt at price fixing. A restriction on the price of articles entering interstate commerce is a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, unless the restriction is within the protection of a lawfully granted patent monopoly. The patent involved in the instant action had been adjudged invalid, and the licensee was permitted to urge that invalidity in order to attack the licensing agreement as a price-fixing arrangement in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.810; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9041.450, 9044.05.

[Patent Licensing Agreement]

HOFSTADTER, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for an order striking out the answer containing denials and two defenses and for judgment on the complaint and for severance with respect to the counterclaim. The action is to recover royalties under a non-exclusive licensing agreement between the plaintiff patentee and the defendant.

[Invalidity of Patent]

The involved patent has been adjudged invalid. Such invalidity may be urged by the licensee in order thereby to be enabled to attack the licensing agreement as a price-fixing arrangement and thus in violation of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff contends that there is here involved a single licensing agreement which is incapable of generating an unlawful restraint. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the agreement. It provides, among other things: "Licensor hereby grants to Licensee a non-exclusive indivisible right and license, * * * to manufacture and sell * * *. Licensor and Licensee respectively covenant and agree not to sell * * * for less than the price rates set forth in Schedule A annexed hereto. * * * If Licensor has granted or shall in the future grant a license under the invention * * * which is in any respect more favorable in terms than this agreement, then Licensor agrees to modify this agreement to give Licensee the benefit of the more favorable terms. * * * Licensor and Licensee respectively agree that neither party shall sell any other model * * * at prices lower than those set in Schedule A, without written consent of the other party."

[Price-Fixing]

The quoted provisions constitute an invalid attempt at price-fixing. In striking down the licensing agreement involved in Sola Electric Company v. Jefferson Company [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,245] (317 U. S. 173), the court stated: "The contract provided that the license was granted on condition that the 'prices, terms, and conditions of sale, for use or sale' throughout the licensed territory should not be more favorable to petitioner's customers than those prescribed from time to time by respondent for its own sales and those of its other licensees. * * * The present license contract contemplates and requires that petitioner, on sales of the licensed transformers throughout the United States, shall conform to the prices fixed by respondent for the sale of competing patented articles by other licensees and by respondent. Such a restriction on the price of articles entering interstate commerce is a violation of the Sherman Act save only as it is within the protection of a lawfully granted patent monopoly. * * * Agreements fixing the competitive sales price of articles moving interstate, not within the protection of a patent, are unlawful because prohibited by the Sherman Act."

[Defense of Illegality]

In American Optical Company v. New Jersey Optical Company (50 F. Supp. 806), the court stated: "The licensor reserved the right to determine and fix prices, sales plans and terms. * * * An illegal price-fixing clause may so permeate the whole contract as to render the entire agreement violative of the Sherman Act."

And in National Transformer Corporation v. France Manufacturing Company [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,824] (215 F. 2d 343), at page 361 the court stated: "It may be here emphasized that a contract which cannot be performed without violation of a statute is illegal and void. * * * The defense of illegality is allowed, not as a protection to the defendant, but as a disability to the plaintiff. * * * Appellants also submit that inasmuch as the right of price control never came into being, appellee never had the right to challenge the validity of the license patents. The fact is, however, that appellee always had the right, under the contract, to invoke the price-fixing provision whenever its interests required it, and we are of the view that, under Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Co., supra, the price-fixing stipulation was unlawful and gave appellee the right to challenge the validity of the patents."

Accordingly, plaintiff is not entitled to rely upon the agreement for the recovery of claimed unpaid royalties and defendant is entitled to judgment dismissing the complaint. Since the counterclaim is based on the asserted violation of the illegal price-fixing provisions of the agreement, it too must fall, as the defendant concedes. Hence, there is no occasion for severance.

The complaint is dismissed and, on the defendant's consent, the counterclaim is likewise dismissed and the clerk is directed to enter judgment accordingly.

[¶ 69,258] United States v. American Greetings Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 32986. Dated December 2, 1958.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Interfering with Competitors or Their Goods—Violation of Federal Trade Commission Cease and Desist Order—Civil Penalty Suit.—A manufacturer of greeting cards violated a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order when it removed competitors' greeting cards from mounts which bore their trade-marks or trade names and placed the competitors' cards on blank mounts. The Commission's order clearly applied to names which appeared on the mounts themselves as well as to names printed on the cards. While the order did not make illegal the practice of remounting competitors' cards, which was common in the industry, it was illegal to remove trade-marked mounts, remount the cards on blank mounts, and display them in the same cabinet with mounts bearing the trade-mark of the defendant manufacturer. However, by placing the cards in transparent sleeves, trade-marks appearing on the back of the cards were not defaced, destroyed, or obscured. The remounting of a competitor's cards on a blank mount could not be considered a violation of the order where the competitor's previous mount was blank. Also, the evidence sustained charges that the manufacturer violated the order when it (1) arranged with a retail dealer for the display of cards of both the manufacturer and its competitors in the same cabinet over which appeared a sign bearing only the manufacturer's name or motto, and (2) checked over a retailer's supply of competitors' cards, removed the cards deemed to be unsaleable, placed them in a box which was taken and destroyed by an employee of the retailer, and gave the retailer credit for the destroyed cards.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Scope of Cease and Desist Orders—Order as Too Broad.—The Federal Trade Commission is not restricted to prohibiting the illegal practice in the precise form in which it was engaged, but it can go further and inhibit variations of the same practice which it considers necessary to achieve the desired result.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.481.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Penalties for Violation of FTC Order—Fixing Amount of Penalty—Mitigating Circumstances.—A Federal District Court assessed only a nominal penalty on three counts of a complaint charging a manufacturer with violating a Federal Trade Commission order, where the Commission's failure to speak out against the questioned practice, while fully cognizant of it for a period of approximately four years, might have led the manufacturer to believe that the Commission was not objecting to the practice. While it may be true that the Commission's failure to speak out against the practice did not create an estoppel to assert the practice as a violation of the Commission's order, this factor was a circumstance to be considered in ascertaining the amount of the penalty to be imposed for violation of the order. The nominal penalty imposed was $200 on each of three counts. On another three counts, the penalties were: $5,000, $2,500, and $2,500.

Imposing civil penalties for violation of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 5982.

Memorandum

[Civil Penalty Suit]

Weick, District Judge [In full text]: This is a civil action, brought under Section 5(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act [15 U. S. C. § 45(1)], to recover $40,000 in penalties for alleged violations of a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission. The complaint originally contained 11 counts, 3 of which have been dropped. A penalty of $5,000 on each count is sought in the eight remaining counts. The defendant denies violating any of the provisions of the Order.

The defendant is a corporation engaged in an interstate business in the manufacture and sale of greeting cards.

[FTC Order]

The provisions of the cease and desist order which defendant is alleged to have violated are as follows:

(A) Offering to buy or buying and taking over stocks of greeting cards sold and distributed by competitors to retail sellers.

(B) Agreeing or arranging with retail sellers to junk and destroy stocks of greeting cards distributed to such retail sellers by competitors.

(D) Agreeing or arranging with retail sellers of greeting cards distributed to such retail sellers by competitors to take over and remount so as to obscure and to make difficult the identification of trademarks and trade names of competitors.

(E) Acting to return, through interstate commerce, to retail sellers, greeting cards produced by competitors after identification has been obscured and otherwise made difficult through various ways and means, including those specified in the immediately preceding subparagraph; and

(F) Arranging or acting to have its salesmen and its other representatives make arrangements of displays of greeting cards in stores of retail sellers in such way that greeting cards produced by its competitors are displayed as if they were products of respondent.

[Card Displays]

Greeting cards are normally displayed for sale attached to mounts, and contained in a wood or metal cabinet. A mount is a stiff cardboard backing to which the greeting card is attached, either directly or in a transparent cellophane sleeve glued to the mount. In some instances the manufacturer's trade-mark or trade name appears on the mount itself, while in others the mounts are blank. These mounted cards are for display purposes only as the sales inventory is kept in drawers in the cabinet. By displaying the cards on mounts they are kept neat, clean and orderly and shoppers may handle and inspect them without soiling.

[Alleged Violations of Order]

Defendant is alleged in Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8 and 10 to have violated Paragraphs "D" and/or "E" of the Federal Trade Commission's Order when it removed competitors' greeting cards from mounts which bore the trade-mark and trade name of the producer or distributor of the greeting card and placed such competitors' greeting cards on mounts without any trade name or trade-mark appearing thereon.

These blank mounts were mounts of the American Greetings Corporation from which the American Greetings name was blanked out, originally by means of ink or china pencil and later by covering the name American Greetings with a black masking tape. This procedure was followed when American Greetings acquired a new account who had previously dealt with a competitor and had a carry-over inventory of the competitor's cards. It was necessary to do so to enable all greeting cards, old and new, to be displayed in an integrated manner in an American Greetings style display cabinet.

The Government contends that the Order was violated (1) in the removing of the competitor's cards from a mount bearing the competitor's legend and placing them in blank mounts, and (2) in placing the card in a sleeve which is glued to the mount, so that the trade-mark or trade name on the back of the greeting card itself may only be observed by bending the sleeve up or removing the card from the mount.

The defendant contends that Paragraph "D" of the Order is ungrammatical and ambiguous and was not intended to prohibit this practice of remounting competitors' cards, which it asserts was common in the industry.

Defendant asserts that the Order has reference only to obscuring trade names which appear on the cards themselves and that they are not obscured when placed in a transparent sleeve which reveals the names and marks when it is bent upward or when the card is removed from the mount. It is also the claim of defendant that the Order has no application to trade names on the mounts themselves.

[FTC Act]

The purpose of the Trade Commission Act was to outlaw unfair methods of competition and deceptive acts or practices in commerce. 15 U. S. C. § 45(a).

The Supreme Court has declared that:

> "The object of the Trade Commission Act was to stop in their incipiency those methods of competition which fall within the meaning of the word 'unfair'. 'The great purpose of both statutes was to advance the public interest by securing fair opportunity for the play of the contending forces ordinarily engendered by an honest desire for gain.' Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair Co., 261 U. S. 463, 476 . . . In a case arising under the Trade Commission Act, the fundamental questions are, whether the methods complained of are 'unfair' . . . ." Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 283 U. S. 643, 647 (1931).

[Remounting of Cards]

The Order proscribes remounting of cards of competitors "so as to obscure and make difficult the identification of trade-marks and trade names." It clearly applies with equal force to names which appear on the mounts themselves as well as to names printed on the cards.

If the competitors' cards had previously been mounted on blank mounts containing no trade-mark or trade name, then it could hardly be claimed to be an unfair practice for defendant to remount the cards in exactly the same manner as before.

It was certainly not intended by the Order to make illegal the practice of remounting competitors' cards, which was common in the industry.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Nor would it be unlawful to remount on blank mounts competitors' cards which previously had been displayed loosely and unmounted. There was no obligation on the part of defendant to advertise the products of its competitors.

By placing the cards in transparent cellophane sleeves, the trade-marks or trade names appearing on the back of the cards are in no manner defaced, destroyed or obscured. The trade names may be seen by simply turning up the sleeves and looking at them or by sliding the cards out of the sleeves.

It is an entirely different matter, however, for the defendant to remove competitors' cards from mounts which bore the competitors' trade-marks or trade names and remount them in blank mounts. Here the trade-marks and trade names have not merely been obscured or made difficult to read, but they have been entirely obliterated. The cards are being displayed differently than before and to the advantage of the defendant and the disadvantage of the competitors. While there may be no duty on the part of defendant to advertise the cards of its competitors, it is unfair to remove their trade-marked mounts and remount the cards in blank mounts and to display them in the same display cabinet with mounts bearing the trade-mark or trade name of defendant.

Defendant claims that this precise activity was not prohibited by the express terms of the Order; that the subject of the Federal Trade Commission's investigation related to remounting of competitors' trade-marked cards in mounts which bore defendant's trade name or to the stamping of defendant's trade names over the competitors' trade names on the cards themselves.

Even if this were true, the Commission was not restricted to prohibiting the illegal practice in the precise form in which it was engaged, but could go further and inhibit variations of the same practice which it considered necessary to achieve the desired result. This it could do by a general order which is entitled to a liberal construction to encompass variations of the practice.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,279], 343 U. S. 470, 473 (1952) the Supreme Court said:

> "Orders of the Federal Trade Commission are . . . to prevent illegal practices in the future. In carrying out this function the Commission is not limited to prohibiting the illegal practice in the precise form in which it is found to have existed in the past. If the Commission is to attain objectives Congress envisioned, it cannot be required to confine its roadblock to the narrow lane the transgressor has travelled; it must be allowed effectively to close all roads to the prohibited goal, so that its orders may not be bypassed with impunity."

The evidence in Counts 1, 2 and 7 establishes a violation of Paragraph "D" of the Order, and it follows that Paragraph "E" which relates to interstate shipments of prohibited mounts was also violated.

In Counts 3, 4, 8 and 10 the evidence failed to establish to the satisfaction of the Court that the competitor's trade-mark or trade name appeared on the former mounts.

As previously pointed out, the remounting of a competitor's card on a blank mount could not possibly be considered a violation of the Order where the competitor's previous mount was blank and had no trademark or trade name.

Since Paragraph "D" of the Order was not violated in Counts 3, 4, 8 and 10, it follows that there was no violation of Paragraph "E" which relates to interstate shipment of prohibited remounts.

[Display Cabinets]

Violations of Paragraph "F" of the Federal Trade Commission's Order are also alleged in Counts 3, 4 and 5. The basis for these alleged violations was that defendant arranged with the retail dealer for the display of cards of both American Greetings and its competitors in the same cabinet over which appeared a lighted sign bearing only the American Greetings name or motto.

It is obvious that a shopper would thereby be led to believe that this was a display only of American Greetings' cards. The only name he could readily see was American Greetings which was on the sign and also on some of the mounts. Competitors' cards were displayed on blank mounts and unless the shopper went through the motions of turning up the sleeve and looking for a trade-mark on the back of the card or removing the card from the sleeve, he would not know that the blank mount contained the card of a competitor. This was done by the dealer under arrangements with defendant. The evidence sustains the charge in Counts 3, 4 and 5 of violation of Paragraph "F".

[Destroying Competitors' Cards]

Finally, a violation of Paragraphs "A" and "B" of the Order is charged in Count 4.

Gordon Harris, the owner of a retail drug store, testified that defendant's salesman Allan Warneke (now deceased) went through his cabinet and checked over the supply of competitors' cards and removed the cards deemed to be unsaleable and put them in a box which was taken and destroyed by an employee of Harris.

Mr. Harris also testified that he believed he received a credit from defendant of 50% of the retail price of the destroyed cards.

Defendant's sales-manager produced a record of the company which did not show any such credit.

There would seem to be no good reason for Harris to testify as to receiving a credit from defendant if it were not true. He was not unfriendly to defendant and was still doing business with it.

It makes no difference that the cards were unsaleable. Hastings Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,436], 153 F. 2d 253 (CA 6, 1946).

The participation of defendant's salesman in the transaction and the giving of credit violated Paragraphs "A" and "B" of the Order.

[Penalties]

The remaining question to be considered relates to the penalty to be imposed by the Court on the defendant for violation of Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 7.

In its Report of Compliance filed with the Federal Trade Commission, defendant stated its intention to assume the practice of remounting competitors' cards on blanked out American Greetings mounts (Par. 6 Report of Compliance). No objection was made to this proposal nor was its propriety at all questioned. This fact assumes greater significance in view of the statement made in the last letter from the Federal Trade Commission to American Greetings prior to the filing of the report of compliance:

> "If you will give us all the relevant facts in the report of compliance, we will give careful consideration to the report and advise you as to anything lacking . . . ."

Subsequent to the issuance of the Order and prior to the institution of this action American Greetings had dealings with a Federal Trade Commission representative, Mr. Donald Brady. In all the discussions with Mr. Brady the issue of the propriety of the use of a blank remount card was never raised. Rather, it appears that Mr. Brady suggested means of improving the method of blanking out the American Greetings name.

It is asserted by the Government that this failure of the Federal Trade Commission, its officers or employees, to speak out against the practice of remounting competitors' cards on blank mounts does not create an estoppel to assert that practice as a violation of the Commission Order. Utah Power & Light Co. v. U. S., 243 U. S. 389, 409 (1917). This may very well be true, but it is certainly a circumstance to be considered in ascertaining the amount of the penalty to be imposed for violation of the Order. The Government's failure to speak out against this practice while fully cognizant of it for a period of approximately four years might lead the defendant to believe that the Government was not objecting to it, and impels the Court to assess only a nominal penalty. Two Hundred Dollars penalty on each Count is hereby fixed for violation of Counts 1, 2 and 7.

Considerations of acquiescence or estoppel by the Commission are not involved in Counts 3, 4 and 5 and a penalty of $2,500 on Count 3, $5,000 on Count 4 and $2,500 on Count 5 is fixed for the violation thereof by defendant.

[Judgment]

This memorandum is adopted as findings of fact and conclusions of law. Judgment may be entered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant for $10,600 and in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff on Counts 8 and 10.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Dallas Division. Criminal No. 15393. Filed January 21, 1959.

Case No. 1413 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Newspaper's Acquisition of Competitor—Legality Under Sections 1 and 2 of Sherman Antitrust Act—Economic Advantage to Public.—A newspaper which bought out a competitor, after a "fight for survival" in which each of them lost over $100,000, did not violate the antitrust laws. The Government charged, among other things, that the surviving newspaper, which was the property of a financially strong chain of papers, had sought to curtail the credit of its competitor. However, the newspaper's inter-office correspondence discussing the competitor's financial straits, together with the other evidence, could not be said to establish a planned design to destroy competition to the detriment of the advertising public. Advertisers, after the newspaper bought out its competitor, paid some 25 cents per inch less for advertising than they paid before the merger because they had to advertise in only one paper instead of two. Competition between rival enterprises does not create a condition necessarily desirable for the production of either the convenience or economic advantage of the public. Discontinuance of competition is not a violation of the antitrust laws where there is no room for such competition. Although the smallest city in Texas to have more than one newspaper was a city of 300,000 population, the two papers in the instant case were published in a town of only 17,000. One of the penalties of freedom of enterprise is the fact that if two shops of a kind are set up in a village which can support only one, then one of the two will have to go down.

[Competition Between Two Newspapers]

T. Whitfield Davidson, District Judge [In full text]: To Counsel and to the Jury:

We have before us a contest between two newspapers. According to one view it may have been for domination of the other and of the area. According to another view it may have been a fight for existence.

We bear in mind that this is not a civil suit of course between the two papers. One of the papers bowed out of the contest accepting a price of $300,000.00. There was the severest competition between these two papers for a term of years. Much of the evidence discloses the zeal and earnestness of the contestants in this competition with each other.

[Effect on Public]

The Government brings this prosecution based on the charge that the prevailing paper in the contest violated the anti-trust law and thereby destroyed competition between the advertising public and the surviving paper.

The advertising public, however, after the contest, according to the evidence, paid some 25¢ per inch less for their advertising than they did before. This came about by having to advertise only in one paper, whereas before they had advertised in two.

It is insisted that Greenville, a town of only 17,000, could not profitably support two daily papers and that this was apparent to the owners who for several years prior to the merger made proposals and counter proposals to buy out each other.

During this fight between the papers which we might call a fight for survival they each lost over $100,000.00. The Banner sold out to the defendants in this case, some of whom constitute a group or chain of Texas newspapers. Thus the Banner became the property of a financially strong concern and put in more money into its plant and more solicitors in the field and was gaining ground in point of circulation in the Greenville area.

At this stage the Herald agreed to sell and did receive $300,000.00 for its plant.

Our attention is called to the fact that the day of the old hand press with a few sheets of local news when a paper could be operated on a plant of little cost has gone by and that the public are demanding daily papers with ample advertising space and adequate news columns. The machinery to produce papers of this type has become more expensive so that the small papers have disappeared. Where formerly almost every town had two or more local papers this no longer now exists. In fact, the evidence shows that Fort Worth, a city of more than 300,000 people, is the smallest city in Texas to have two daily papers and that Greenville was the last of the smaller towns in which the two papers survived.

[Alleged Destroying of Competition]

It is insisted by the Government that the Banner with its financial backing sought to curtail the credit of the Herald. Mention of the financial status of the papers had taken place in correspondence. One of the letters offered in evidence was from a Fort Worth bank to a Greenville banker advising them that they were acquainted with the Harte-Hanks organization that had bought the Greenville Banner and that they were very reliable people and worthy of credit. In the inter-office correspondence among the defendants appear communications and letters in which they discuss the effect of the financial strain which the Herald would be undergoing. These comments were no more than an expression of the natural outcome of a fight between two papers wherein one of them had received large financial support by reason of its new owners and that both papers had been losing money would in all probability put the Herald in bad financial straits. We think this correspondence simply calls attention to that condition and are not prepared to say that it together with all the other evidence contained in the Government's case in the light of the stipulations made between the parties was a planned design to destroy competition to the detriment of the advertising public.

[Public Advantage]

The evidence shows that newspaper advertising is now considered a necessity to the successful operation of public enterprises. So completely apparent has this become true that their need is regarded as a quasi public service. This service may be performed by one paper or several. The trend of events and commercial activity has seemingly limited it to one paper in most cities. Moreover, competition between rival enterprises doesn't create a condition necessarily desirable for the production of either the convenience or economic advantage of the public. As an example of which might be cited the numerous small telephone systems which in the memory of some of you existed in different small communities and even in small cities. They not only became an added expense but the owner never knew which phone to use and part of his customers might be subscribers to one system and another part to the other. In this case it was a great relief to the public to see one of the concerns buy the other one out and take one of the unnecessary phones off of their tables. It is the contention of the defendants in the case that what was true of the dual telephone system has in a measure become true in the newspaper operation.

Our higher courts have held that even though there is a consolidation of papers in the larger cities that a violation of the anti-trust law does not necessarily follow. Only recently the New Orleans Picayune, a large paper in a large city, acquired its rival the New Orleans Item. They each had a large circulation. The question went to the court, the decision being found in 345 U. S. 594 [Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494] in which the Supreme Court said:

> "The daily newspaper, though essential to the effective functioning of our political system, has in recent years suffered drastic economic decline.
> "Advertising is the economic mainstay of the newspaper business. Generally, more than two-thirds of a newspaper's total revenues flow from the sale of advertising space. * * * Obviously, newspapers must sell advertising to survive. And while newspapers in 1929 garnered 79% of total national advertising expenditures, by 1951 other mass media had cut newspapers' share down to 34.7%."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Freedom of Enterprise]

There must be space and room and subject matter involved to afford a competition such as the law requires and where these things do not exist then discontinuance of competition it has been held is not a violation of the anti-trust law. Judge Learned Hand observed in the United States Aluminum Company of America [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,342], 148 F. 2d 416:

> "A market may, for example, be so limited that it is impossible to produce at all and meet the cost of production except by a plant large enough to supply the whole demand. Or there may be changes in taste or in cost which drive out all but one purveyor. A single producer may be the survivor out of a group of active competitors, merely by virtue of his superior skill, foresight and industry. In such cases a strong argument can be made that, although the result may expose the public to the evils of monopoly, the Act does not mean to condemn the resultant of those very forces which it is its prime object to foster; finis opus coronat."

Justice Holmes has said that a man has a right to set up a shop in a small village which can support but one shop of the kind and although there may be one shop of the kind already in town. It then naturally follows that one of the two will have to go down. This is one of the penalties of the freedom of enterprise.

[Issues of Fact]

The parties to this case have very properly reduced to writing extensive stipulations thus saving a long record. Each stipulation is supported by facts that might have been produced in evidence in court. In the light of the facts as contained in these stipulations and in light of the testimony that has been offered in the case we are unable to find any well defined issue of fact that may be submitted to the jury that has not already become a question of law which the Court must decide. In other words, what can the Court tell the jury to find from the evidence in this case that is not already apparent?

[No Antitrust Violations]

The case as developed does not disclose in our judgment any violation of the antitrust law. It is therefore withdrawn from the jury and judgment entered for the defendants.

Case No. 1150 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Cut-Off Date for Taking of Evidence.—An action charging a conspiracy to fix prices and to monopolize the manufacture and sale of household soaps and detergents was to be tried in two stages where the war period (1941-1945) created a natural gap between the evidence of a violation proximate to the complaint (filed in 1952) and evidence as to a much earlier inception of the alleged conspiracy. The Government had admitted that the war period would not evidence the alleged conspiracy. The first trial stage would be confined to evidence as to the postwar period down to the time of the filing of the complaint. In connection with such trial, the court would consider written representations of all counsel as to prewar evidence of the alleged conspiracy. Such representations, if material and substantial, might become the issues to be tried at the second trial stage. The second stage of the trial might never occur if the Government's evidence of a violation in the postwar years clearly overcomes the defendants' evidence or if it should appear clear that no violation of the Sherman Act existed in the postwar period. To entitle the Government to injunctive relief, it must establish not only that the conspiracy once existed, but that it still existed close to the time of the filing of the complaint so as to create a probable continuing danger to the public.

Opinion Re Cut-Off Date

[Contentions]

HARTSHORNE, District Judge [In full text]: Defense counsel have moved the Court in this case to fix a cut-off date for the taking of evidence to begin immediately subsequent to World War II and some six years prior to the filing of the complaint herein on December 11, 1952. Plaintiff Government asks to have the evidence extend back to 1926, or thereabouts, in order to prove the inception of the alleged conspiracy, same being one to fix prices and to monopolize the manufacture and sale of soaps and detergents for household use throughout the United States. The Government admits that it does not desire to give evidence as to the intermediate war period from, presumably, 1941 to 1946, when the Government's wartime regulations of business were in effect.

[Principles]

In determining this question, certain general principles must be borne in mind:

(1) All agree that these Government antitrust cases, generally characterized as the "Big Case," should be kept down to manageable proportions, not only to enable the Court to serve the many other litigants besieging its doors, but because justice is more apt to emanate from fresh and vigorous intellects than from intellects exhausted by a trial lasting for months on end.

(2) The purpose of a civil injunction suit of this nature is not to punish defendants but to prevent a continued violation of the Sherman Act, to the injury of the public.

(3) To entitle the Government to these equitable remedies, it must establish not only (a) that such a conspiracy once existed, but that (b) it still existed close to the time of the filing of the complaint so as to create a probable continuing danger to the public. Indeed, due to the unusual lapse of time which has existed between the time of the filing of the complaint herein and this motion, due to an act of God, an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, and otherwise, it may even be necessary, should a violation proximate to the complaint be proven, to take further evidence as to the time after the filing of the complaint, to see if any danger of the continuance of any such conspiracy down to date does exist. But that angle of the matter, as to relief, we pass by, pending the determination of the question of the scope of the evidence, as to whether a postwar violation existed reasonably close to the time of the filing of the complaint.

(4) But, even though a conspiracy may have its inception many years previous to the filing of the complaint, that early evidence, here prewar, may still have a bearing on the crucial evidence of violation proximate to the complaint, because this earlier evidence may show the relationship of the parties and the intent with which they acted, not only years ago, but presumptively thereafter. For instance, if parties have been in close and long relationship, it would take much less time and formality to agree to continue a plan of action than if the situation were otherwise.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(5) On this matter of the fixing of cut-off dates, precedents are of little aid, because not only is the world full of "all sorts and conditions of men," as was long ago said by Sir Walter Besant, but, for that very reason, their activities generally, and specifically in fixing prices and creating monopolies, have infinite variations. Of course, it is these very variant facts which we are now determining how to try.

[Application of Principles]

Applying the above principles to the case at bar, the result is:

The prime point which must be established by the Government is that this conspiracy existed proximate to the complaint —from 1946 down to the filing of the complaint in December, 1952. Unless this is established, plaintiff will not have proved a violation of the Sherman Act presently endangering the public. Defendants claim not only that the Government will not be able to prove this conclusion, but call attention to the fact that it will require evidence over the course of some six years, as to the activities of these, the three largest soap and detergent manufacturers in the United States, in regard to their countrywide activities, plus the activity of the Association, to prove this crucial issue. They further call attention to the fact that to prove the entire possible gamut of the case, even omitting the entire war period, for reasons hereafter stated, will more than treble this evidence— to cover more than twenty years, and test the memory of witnesses as to incidents occurring over thirty years ago. Government counsel admit that their discovery so far has resulted perchance in their desire to use almost a million documents, and that even if the bulk of these documents can be submitted to the Court in graph or summary form, subject to checking by the defendants, there will be many hundred crucial documents which must be put individually in evidence.

Obviously, the simpler this maelstrom of papers can be kept, the more likely it is that the human mind will reach a sound and just conclusion. Furthermore, the Government admits that the war period of some five years, from 1941 to 1945, will not evidence this conspiracy, but creates a natural gap between the evidence of a violation proximate to the complaint, crucial to the Government's case, and its potential evidence as to the much earlier inception of the conspiracy.

If, then, this natural gap of the war years is used to separate the trial into stages, several advantages may well result: (a) the first stage of the trial will be expedited, due to the lessening of the preliminary discovery from twenty-odd to six years, (b) the human mind will be better able to cope with two trials, each lasting several weeks, than with a single trial lasting months on end, (c) the second stage of the trial may never have to occur at all. This last will result, if the Government's evidence of a violation in the postwar years clearly overcomes the defendants' evidence. It may result again if the following occurs: Upon the taking of the postwar evidence at this first trial stage, the Court will expect the Government to make explicit written representations as to its prewar evidence covering the fifteen years from 1926 to 1941 concerning the relationship between the defendants and their intent as to a violation of the Sherman Act at that time, and as presumably continuing through the postwar period. If, upon the basis of such representations by the Government, and as well upon the similar representations of the defendants as to their claimed countervailing factors, plus the actual proof as to the postwar period, it should appear clear that no violation of the Sherman Act existed postwar, it would then do no good to take such prewar evidence covering such fifteen year period. On the other hand, if, upon the basis of such actual proof as to the postwar violation, and the above representations as to the prewar period as continuing postwar, there should be a real question as to the existence of postwar violations by the defendants, then the second stage of the trial should occur as to their relations and intent prewar and the fact of its presumptive continuance postwar. For certainly, even assuming a prewar violation, since there was admittedly no violation during the period of the war, if there is no proof of a violation postwar, i.e., no proof of a violation of the Sherman Act by these defendants for the entire ten years before the filing of the complaint, any probability of a present danger to the public therefrom would be simply nonexistent, and it is such danger which can alone justify the granting of equitable relief by this Court.

Of course, the above trial procedure has the disadvantage of proving postwar evidence prior to the possible proof of prewar evidence, and if these two periods were not separated by the war period of some six years, when no evidence of conspiracy admittedly exists, some confusion might perchance be caused thereby. However, this admitted gap of some six years should clearly suffice to obviate confusion on the part of all concerned. Thus that disadvantage cannot outweigh the possibly unnecessary burden of the more than trebled period of proof placed on all concerned, if from the very first the discovery and the trial is to cover not six, but more than twenty years.

[Use of Precedents]

While, as noted previously, specific precedents as to the use or nonuse of cut-off dates by the courts in these "Big Cases" are of small help, due to the infinite variation in the facts in each case, it might be noted that the two Seminars conducted during the last two years in New York City and Palo Alto on "Protracted Cases," under the auspices of the Judicial Conference of the United States, and upon the basis of the well-known Prettyman Report, reached conclusions closely paralleling the above. Specifically, at the New York conference, in 1957, the resolution was adopted that "In determining whether cut-off dates will be established the particular facts of each case must be considered. Varying dates may be adopted for different issues." Similar conclusions were alluded to at Palo Alto. Further, in the 1954 Report of the American Bar Association Committee on Practice and Procedure in the Trial of Antitrust Cases, that study concluded as follows:

"In civil as well as criminal cases, for example, it would seem entirely appropriate for the court to require the plaintiff to present evidence that tends to show a case of present violation of law before permitting any evidence as to the origin of the conspiracy or the background of the industry. Such period could be rather strictly limited to perhaps five or six years."

[Procedure]

Thus, the first trial stage in this cause will be confined to evidence as to the postwar period down to the time of the filing of the complaint, December 11, 1952. In connection with such trial, the Court will consider the written representations of all counsel, pro and con, as to the relationship between, and the intent of, the defendants prewar, as above, as perchance continuing and coloring the postwar evidence in that regard. Should these representations appear material and substantial, such representations will then become the issues to be tried at the second trial stage. See Chaps. VII. Separation of Issues, and VIII. Period of Inquiry, Procedure in Anti-Trust and Other Protracted Cases, A Report Adopted by the Judicial Conference of the United States, September 26, 1951 (Prettyman Report).

Finally, due to the exceptional factors of delay in this case occurring before this Court took control of the situation, it may be necessary, if the plaintiff has established a postwar violation of the Sherman Act; to give further opportunity to the parties to establish by evidence, as to the years succeeding the filing of the complaint in 1952, the extent of the present danger to the public as bearing upon appropriate relief. But no attempt should be made to cross that bridge before it is reached.

An order may be entered accordingly.

into any agreement to (1) fix prices at which alcoholic beverages not manufactured by them should be sold in the State of Maryland, (2) induce or compel any person to establish or enforce adherence to fixed prices, (3) suggest or prescribe the prices at which alcoholic beverages should be sold to any Monopoly County (County Liquor Control Board or Department of Liquor Control selling alcoholic beverages under a county dispensary system in the State of Maryland), or (4) induce or compel any manufacturer to make sales to any Monopoly County upon the condition that it resell at designated prices.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600, 2610.660; Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20, 3015.80.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Resale Price Fixing—Practices Enjoined—Boycotts—Refusal to Deal.—Liquor manufacturers, a wholesaler, an association of retail dealers, and an officer of the retail association were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement to (1) boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale, or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland, (2) induce or compel any person to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland, and (3) induce or compel any manufacturer to refuse to sell directly to any Monopoly County or to require that sales to such Monopoly County be made through wholesalers. The decree also prohibited the coercing of manufacturers for the purpose of requiring them to (1) enforce resale prices, (2) refrain from selling to any person or class of persons, or (3) boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland. Also, the manufacturers were prohibited from combining, conspiring, or agreeing to (1) refuse to sell to any Monopoly County, (2) refuse to sell to any Monopoly County at prices less than the customary wholesale price to licensed retailers, or (3) refuse to sell to any Monopoly County except upon the condition that it resell at designated prices.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.262; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720. Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.70.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Coercion and Intimidation.—Liquor manufacturers, a wholesaler, an association of retail dealers, and an officer of the retail association were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) coercing any manufacturer to establish or enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices for the sale of alcoholic beverages in Maryland, (2) communicating with any manufacturer, wholesaler, or other person for the purpose of coercing any manufacturer or wholesaler to refrain from selling to any person or class of persons, (3) giving preference to, or coercing any other person to give preference to, any specific brand of alcoholic beverage upon the condition that the manufacturer thereof enforce suggested resale prices, boycott, or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale, or distribution of alcoholic beverages, or (4) hindering the sale of, or coercing any other person to hinder the sale of, alcoholic beverages for the purpose of coercing the manufacturer thereof to enforce suggested retail prices, boycott, or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale, or distribution of alcoholic beverages.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.091; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.800.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Trade Associations—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Association Membership as Means of Trade Restraint.—An association of retail liquor dealers was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) discussing or acting upon, at any of its meetings, any matter or thing enjoined or restrained by the decree, (2) accepting contributions from any manufacturer or non-member, (3) having as a member any wholesaler or distiller not engaged in the retail selling of alcoholic beverages, and (4) organizing, being a member of, or participating in the activities of any organization whose purposes are contrary to the decree.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.121, 2017.198.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Trade Associations—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Coercion and Enforcement Provisions.—An association of retail liquor dealers was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) maintaining any program, shopping service, or other means for the purpose of policing or enforcing the prices of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland, (2) inducing or coercing any person to establish or police prices, or (3) inducing or coercing any person to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale, or distribution of alcoholic beverages.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.300.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Contingent Provisions—Cancellation of Fair Trade Contracts—Dissemination of Price Information.—A consent decree provided that upon the entry of a final judgment against one or more liquor manufacturers named in the complaint requiring a suspension of fair trading in the State of Maryland for any period of time, the consenting manufacturers, wholesaler, and individual, as to alcoholic beverages included in such suspension, shall (1) cancel all fair trade contracts to which he is a party and which fix or control the resale price of such alcoholic beverages, (2) be enjoined from entering into any fair trade contract, and (3) be enjoined from enforcing resale prices. The manufacturers and the wholesaler were also to be enjoined from disseminating price lists or other price information containing suggested resale prices, except as provided by Article 2B, § 109, Annotated Code of Maryland, 1957, which directs the state Comptroller to require the filing of schedules of prices and proposed price changes.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8341.20.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Specific Relief—Order to Sell on Non-Discriminatory Terms.—Liquor manufacturers were ordered by a consent decree to sell various brands of liquor to the Department of Liquor Control for Montgomery County, Maryland, at prices which were not higher than those charged to wholesalers, and without discrimination as to availability or other terms or conditions of sale.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8421.

Final Judgment

[Hiram Walker & Sons, Inc.; Hiram Walker, Inc.; Gooderham & Worts Ltd; Jas. Barclay & Co. Ltd.; Natl. Distillers and Chemical Corp.; and McKesson & Robbins, Inc.—October 6, 1958]

THOMSEN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on September 11, 1956, and the plaintiff and the undersigned defendants, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party with respect to any such issue, and the Court having considered the matter and being duly advised,

Now, Therefore, upon consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of all parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief may be granted against the defendants signatory hereto under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" means an individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trustee or any other business or legal entity, including County Liquor Control Boards and Departments of Liquor Control;

(B) "Alcoholic Beverage" means any whiskey, rum, gin, brandy, cordial, wine, cider, alcohol or any other spiritous, vinous, malt or fermented liquor, liquid or compound, by whatever name called, containing one-half of one per centum or more of alcohol by volume, which is fit for beverage purposes, except any brewed alcoholic beverage including beer, ale, porter and stout;

(C) "Manufacturer" means a person who operates a plant within the United States for distilling, rectifying, blending, fermenting or bottling any alcoholic beverage, or imports into the United States any alcoholic beverage from outside the United States for resale therein, or is a distributor selling to a wholesaler for resale to a retailer or other purchasers for resale;

(D) "Wholesaler" means any person engaged in the business of purchasing or acquiring alcoholic beverages from manufacturers for resale or distribution to retailers or other purchasers for resale;

(E) "Retailer" means any person engaged in the business of selling alcoholic beverages to consumers;

(F) "Consenting defendants" means the defendants signatory hereto and each of them;

(G) "Monopoly County" means any County Liquor Control Board or Department of Liquor Control selling alcoholic beverages under a county dispensary system in the State of Maryland.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any consenting defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or participation with such defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise. For the purpose of this Final Judgment, a consenting defendant and its affiliates (whether or not a defendant herein) and their respective officers, agents, servants and employees shall be deemed to be one person. An affiliate of a consenting defendant shall mean any company wholly-owned or substantially wholly-owned by such consenting defendant, any parent company that directly or indirectly wholly-owns or substantially wholly-owns such consenting defendant and any company wholly-owned or substantially wholly-owned by such parent.

IV

[Price Fixing]

(A) The consenting defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or reviving, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any other person to:

(1) Control, fix, adopt, stabilize or maintain prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages are sold or offered for sale to third persons in the State of Maryland;

(2) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any person to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or to police or enforce adherence to prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages shall be sold or offered for sale to third persons in the State of Maryland.

(B) The consenting defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or reviving, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, or understanding, plan or program with any other person to:

(1) Boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with, or threaten to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with, any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(2) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any person to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(3) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any manufacturer or wholesaler to refuse to make sales of alcoholic beverages directly to any Monopoly County or to require sales to said Monopoly Counties to be made through wholesalers;

(5) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any manufacturer or wholesaler to make sales to any Monopoly County upon the condition or understanding that said Monopoly County resell alcoholic beverages at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices, or otherwise require said Monopoly County to resell at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices.

V

[Coercing Manufacturers]

Each of the consenting defendants is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Requiring, compelling or coercing any manufacturer or wholesaler to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police or enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale at which alcoholic beverages are sold or offered for sale in the State of Maryland;

(B) Communicating with any manufacturer, wholesaler or other person for the purpose or with the effect of urging, compelling or coercing any manufacturer or wholesaler to refrain from selling alcoholic beverages to any person or to any group or class of persons in the State of Maryland;

(C) Urging, compelling or coercing, or attempting to urge, compel or coerce any person to promote the sale of, or give preference to, specific brands of alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant upon any condition, agreement or understanding, that the manufacturer thereof establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police and enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale thereof, or boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with persons engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(D) In any manner hindering the sale of, or urging, compelling or coercing, or attempting to urge, compel or coerce any other person to refuse to buy, refuse to promote or in any manner hinder the sale of alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant for the purpose or with the effect of urging, compelling or coercing the manufacturer thereof to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police and influence adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale thereof, or boycott or refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland.

[Permissive Provisions]

Nothing in Subsections (B)(1) and (2) of Section IV, or Subsections (B) and (D) of Section V, shall be construed to prohibit any consenting defendant from negotiating, entering into and adhering to a contract designating a wholesaler as a distributor, on an exclusive basis or otherwise; provided, however, that such designation shall not directly or indirectly prevent any Monopoly County from acquiring alcoholic beverages direct from any source.

Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prohibit the consenting defendants from (a) proposing or supporting legislation or the adoption of local, state or Federal regulations relating to the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages, (b) from individually taking action required by local, state or Federal legislation or regulations, or (c), except as specifically provided to the contrary by Section VI hereof, from doing the things they may legally do under the fair trade laws of the United States and the State of Maryland.

VI

[Contingent Provision]

Upon the entry of a Final Judgment in this case not subject to further appeal against one or more of the defendant manufacturers named as such in the complaint in this case requiring any suspension of fair trading in the State of Maryland for any period of time, each consenting defendant shall:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(A) Within thirty days after the entry of such Final Judgment, cancel all fair trade contracts for the State of Maryland to which it is a party and which fix or control the resale price of alcoholic beverages and shall give to all its Maryland customers and Maryland licensed retailers handling such products notice of such cancellation and termination, informing each of them that the retailer shall individually determine his resale price without reference to fair trade prices theretofore established thereon;

(B) Be enjoined and restrained from entering into or adhering to any fair trade contract in the State of Maryland for the shortest period of any such suspension or two years, whichever is less;

(C) Be enjoined and restrained for the shortest period of any such suspension, or two years, whichever is less, from disseminating or preparing for dissemination to any person in the State of Maryland price lists or other price information containing minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which such alcoholic beverages are to be resold or offered for sale, except as provided by Article 2B, Section 109 of the Annotated Code of Maryland;

(D) Be enjoined and restrained for the shortest period of any such suspension, or two years, whichever is less, from shopping, policing, reporting or otherwise enforcing, minimum suggested retail prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which such alcoholic beverages are to be sold or offered for sale in the State of Maryland;

Provided that, if no such suspension is decreed as to any one of such defendant manufacturers, the provisions of Section VI shall not apply to the consenting defendants.

VII

[Refusal to Sell—Specific Relief]

(A) Consenting defendants are enjoined and restrained from conspiring, combining or agreeing with each other or with any Wholesale Association, Retail Association, or with any Manufacturer, Wholesaler or Retailer to refuse:

(1) To sell any alcoholic beverage to any Monopoly County;

(2) To sell any alcoholic beverage to any Monopoly County at prices less than the customary wholesale price to licensed retailers, or

(3) To sell any alcoholic beverage to any Monopoly County except upon the condition or understanding that the Monopoly County resell the alcoholic beverages at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices or otherwise require the Monopoly County to resell at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices.

(B) Each consenting defendant shall offer to sell and shall sell upon request to the Department of Liquor Control for Montgomery County those brands listed on Appendix A [not reproduced herein], and those brands which are hereafter offered for sale to any monopoly state, at prices which are not higher than those then currently charged to the wholesalers in Maryland, and without discrimination as to availability or other terms or conditions of sale: Provided, however, that if any such brand is withdrawn by the consenting defendant from all markets of the United States, such defendant will not thereafter be obligated to sell or offer to sell such brand to the Department of Liquor Control for Montgomery County for such time as it is so withdrawn.

VIII

[Enforcement and Compliance]

(A) For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any consenting defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted:

1. Access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents prepared or written after the date of this Final Judgment in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

2. Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

(B) Upon receipt of a written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division to any consenting defendant, said defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of said Judgment;

(C) No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VIII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

IX

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

Final Judgment

[Maryland Package Liquor Stores Assn., Inc., and Jack Wulfert—
October 6, 1958]

THOMSEN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on September 11, 1956, and the plaintiff and defendants signatory hereto, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party with respect to any such issue; and the Court having considered the matter and being duly advised;

Now, therefore, upon consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any consenting defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or participation with such defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise. For the purpose of this Final Judgment, a defendant and its respective officers, agents, servants and employees shall be deemed to be one person.

IV

[Price Fixing]

(A) The consenting defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or reviving, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program between themselves, or with any wholesaler or group of wholesalers or with any retailer or group of retailers, to:

(1) Control, fix, adopt, stabilize or maintain prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant are sold or offered for sale to third persons in the State of Maryland;

(2) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel, or coerce, any person to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or to police or enforce adherence to prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant shall be sold or offered for sale to third persons in the State of Maryland.

(B) The consenting defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or reviving, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, or understanding, plan or program between themselves, or with any other person, to:

(1) Boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with, or threaten to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with, any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(2) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any person to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(3) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any manufacturer to refuse to make sales of alcoholic beverages directly to any Monopoly County or to require sales to said Monopoly Counties to be made through wholesalers;

(4) Suggest, designate, prescribe or otherwise influence, or attempt to influence, the price or prices at while sales of alcoholic beverages shall be made by manufacturers or wholesalers to any Monopoly County;

(5) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any manufacturer or wholesaler to make sales to any Monopoly County upon the condition or understanding that said Monopoly County resell alcoholic beverages at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices, or otherwise require said Monopoly County to resell at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices.

[Permissive Provision]

Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prohibit the said consenting defendants from proposing or supporting legislation or the adoption of local, state, or federal regulations, relating to the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages or from individually taking action required by local, state or federal legislation or regulation.

V

[Coercing Manufacturers]

Each of the consenting defendants is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Urging, compelling or coercing any manufacturer to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police or enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale at which alcoholic beverages are sold or offered for sale, in the State of Maryland;

(B) Communicating with any manufacturer, wholesaler or other person for the purpose or with the effect of urging, compelling or coercing any manufacturer or wholesaler to refrain from selling alcoholic beverages to any person or to any group or class of persons;

(C) Promoting the sale of, or giving preference to, or urging, compelling or coercing, or attempting to urge, compel or coerce any person to promote the sale of, or give preference to, specific brands of alcoholic beverages upon any condition, agreement or understanding, that the manufacturer thereof establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police and enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale thereof, or boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with persons engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages;

(D) Refusing to buy, refusing to promote the sale of, or in any manner hindering the sale of, or urging, compelling or coercing, or attempting to urge, compel or coerce any other person to refuse to buy, refuse to promote or in any manner hinder the sale of alcoholic beverages for the purpose or with the effect of urging, compelling or coercing the manufacturer thereof to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police and influence adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale thereof, or boycott or refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages.

VI

[Permissive Provision]

Nothing in Subsections (B)(1) and (2) of Section IV, or Subsections (B) and (D) of Section V, shall be construed to prohibit defendant Jack Wulfert, acting as a retailer, from negotiating, entering into and adhering to a contract authorizing said defendant to sell alcoholic beverages with such defendant's private brand or label; provided, however, that such designation shall not directly or indirectly prevent any monopoly county from acquiring alcoholic beverages direct from any source.

VII

[Contingent Provision]

Upon the entry of a Final Judgment in this case not subject to further appeal against one or more of the defendant manufacturers named as such in the complaint in this case requiring a suspension of fair trading in the State of Maryland for any period of time, consenting defendant Jack Wulfert as to alcoholic beverages included in such suspension which he sells, for and during the period of such suspension, shall:

(A) Within thirty days after the entry of such Final Judgment, cancel all fair-trade contracts to which he is a party and which fix or control the resale price of such alcoholic beverages;

(B) Be enjoined and restrained from entering into or adhering to any fair-trade contract;

(C) Be enjoined and restrained from shopping, policing, reporting, or otherwise enforcing, minimum or suggested retail prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which such alcoholic beverages are to be sold or offered for sale.

VIII

[Association Activities]

The defendant Maryland Package Liquor Stores Association, Inc. is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Discussing, evolving or acting upon any matter or thing enjoined and restrained by any provision of this Final Judgment in any meeting of its members, officers, directors or any committee meeting of the Association;

(B) Accepting financial contributions from any manufacturer, non-member retailer or another non-member association;

(C) Having as a member any wholesaler or distiller not also engaged in the business of retail sales of alcoholic beverages;

(D) Organizing, being a member of, or participating in any trade association or other organization, the purposes or functions of which are contrary to any provision of this Final Judgment;

(E) Maintaining any plan, program, shopping service or other means the purpose or effect of which is to determine, report to any person, police, supervise or enforce prices of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(F) Inducing, compelling or coercing, or attempting to induce, compel or coerce, any person to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or to police or enforce adherence to prices, markups, margins of profits, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages will be sold or offered for sale;

(G) Inducing, compelling or coercing, or attempting to induce, compel or coerce, any person to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages.

IX

[Enforcement and Compliance]

(A) For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any consenting defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted:

(1) Access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

(2) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters;

(B) Upon receipt of a written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, the defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of said Judgment;

(C) No information obtained by the means provided in this Section IX shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

Final Judgment

[The Kronheim Co.—October 14, 1958]

THOMSEN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on September 11, 1956, and the plaintiff and the defendant, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party with respect to any such issue; and the Court having considered the matter and being duly advised;

Now, Therefore, upon consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of all parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief may be granted against the defendant signatory hereto under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" means an individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trustee or any other business or legal entity, including County Liquor Control Boards and Departments of Liquor Control;

(B) "Alcoholic Beverage" means any whiskey, rum, gin, brandy, cordial, wine, cider, alcohol or any other spiritous, vinous, malt or fermented liquor, liquid or compound, by whatever name called, containing one-half of one per centum or more of alcohol by volume, which is fit for beverage purposes, except any brewed alcoholic beverage including beer, ale, porter, and stout;

(C) "Manufacturer" means a person who operates a plant within the United States for distilling, rectifying, blending, fermenting, or bottling any alcoholic beverage, or imports into the United States any alcoholic beverage from outside the United States, or is a distributor selling to a wholesaler for resale to a retailer;

(D) "Wholesaler" means any person engaged in the business of purchasing or acquiring alcoholic beverages from manufacturers for resale or distribution to retailers or other purchasers for resale;

(E) "Retailer" means any person engaged in the business of selling alcoholic beverages to consumers;

(F) The "consenting defendant" means the Kronheim Co., Inc.;

(G) "Monopoly County" means any County Liquor Control Board or Department of Liquor Control selling alcoholic beverages under a county dispensary system in the State of Maryland.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to the defendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or participation with said defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise. For the purpose of this Final Judgment, the defendant and its respective officers, agents, servants and employees shall be deemed to be one person.

IV

[Price Fixing]

(A) The consenting defendant is jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or reviving, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any wholesaler or group of wholesalers, or with any retailer or group of retailers, to:

(1) Control, fix, adopt, stabilize, or maintain prices, markups, margins or profit, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant are sold or offered for sale to third persons in the State of Maryland;

(2) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel, or coerce, any person to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or to police or enforce adherence to prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant shall be sold or offered for sale to third persons in the State of Maryland.

(B) The consenting defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering, or reviving, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, or understanding, plan or program with any other person, to

(1) Boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with, or threaten to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with, any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(2) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any person to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages in the State of Maryland;

(3) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any manufacturer to refuse to make sales of alcoholic beverages directly to any Monopoly County or to require sales to said Monopoly Counties to be made through wholesalers;

(4) Suggest, designate, prescribe or otherwise influence, or attempt to influence, the price or prices at which sales of alcoholic beverages shall be made by manufacturers or wholesalers to any Monopoly County;

(5) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce, any manufacturer or wholesaler to make sales to any Monopoly County upon the condition or understanding that said Monopoly County resell alcoholic beverages at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices, or otherwise require said Monopoly County to resell at a suggested, prescribed or designated price or prices.

Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prohibit the said defendant from proposing or supporting legislation or the adoption of local, state, or federal regulations, relating to the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages or from taking action required by local, state or federal legislation or regulation.

V

[Coercing Manufacturers]

The consenting defendant is enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly:

(A) Urging, compelling or coercing any manufacturer to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police or enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale at which alcoholic beverages are sold or offered for sale in the State of Maryland;

(B) Communicating with any manufacturer, wholesaler or other person for the purpose or with the effect of urging, compelling or coercing any manufacturer or wholesaler to refrain from selling alcoholic beverages to any person or to any group or class of persons;

(C) Promoting the sale of, or giving preference to, or urging, compelling or coercing, or attempting to urge, compel or coerce any person to promote the sale of, or give preference to, specific brands of alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant upon any condition, agreement or understanding, that the manufacturer thereof establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police and enforce adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale thereof, or boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with persons engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages;

(D) Refusing to buy, refusing to promote the sale of, or in any manner hindering the sale of, or urging, compelling or coercing, or attempting to urge, compel or coerce any other person to refuse to buy, refuse to promote or in any manner hinder the sale of alcoholic beverages not manufactured by such defendant for the purpose or with the effect of urging, compelling or coercing the manufacturer thereof to establish, adopt, issue, adhere to, or police and influence adherence to minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions of sale thereof, or boycott or refuse to deal with any person engaged in the purchase, sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages.

VI

[Permissive Provision]

Nothing in Subsections (B)(1) and (2) of Section IV, or Subsections (B) and (D) of Section V, shall be construed to prohibit the consenting defendant, acting as a wholesaler or manufacturer, from negotiating, entering into and adhering to a contract designating said defendant or another wholesaler as a distributor, on an exclusive basis or otherwise; provided, however, that such designation shall not directly or indirectly prevent any monopoly county from acquiring alcoholic beverages direct from any source.

VII

[Contingent Provision]

Upon the entry of a Final Judgment in this case not subject to further appeal against one or more of the defendant manufacturers named as such in the complaint in this case requiring a suspension of fair trading in the State of Maryland for any period of time, the consenting defendant wholesaler as to alcoholic beverages included in such suspension which it sells, for and during the period of such suspension, shall:

(A) Within thirty days after the entry of such Final Judgment, cancel all fair-trade contracts to which he is a party and which fix or control the resale price of such alcoholic beverages and shall give to all Maryland licensed retailers handling such products notice of such cancellation and termination, informing each of them that the retailer shall individually determine his resale price without reference to fair-trade prices theretofore established thereon;

(B) Be enjoined and restrained from entering into or adhering to any fair-trade contract;

(C) Be enjoined and restrained from disseminating or preparing for dissemination to any person price lists or other price information containing minimum or suggested resale prices, markups, margins of profits, terms or conditions at which such alcoholic beverages are to be resold or offered for sale, except as provided by Article 2B, Section 109 of the Annotated Code of Maryland.

(D) Be enjoined and restrained from shopping, policing, reporting, or otherwise enforcing, minimum suggested retail prices, markups, margins of profit, terms or conditions at which such alcoholic beverages are to be sold or offered for sale.

VIII

[Enforcement and Compliance]

(A) For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted:

1. Access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

2. Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters;

(B) Upon receipt of a written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, the defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of said Judgment;

(C) No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VIII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

IX

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 69,262] Staten Island Motors, Inc. v. American Motors Sales Corporation (New York Zone).

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action File No. 38-58. Filed January 21, 1959.

Automobile Dealer Franchise Act

Suit for Damages Under Automobile Dealer Franchise Act—Elements of Violation—Coercion or Intimidation—Good Faith.—An automobile sales company did not fail to act in good faith (1) in performing or complying with the terms of an automobile dealer's 1957 franchise or (2) in not renewing the dealer's franchise for 1958, since there were no acts of coercion or intimidation or threats thereof on the part of the automobile sales company. The plain meaning of the Automobile Dealer Franchise Act indicates that the restrictions which it imposes extend only to those dealings between parties wherein coercion or intimidation or threats of the same are involved. This is borne out in the legislative history of the Act. It was stated in House Report No. 2850 (84th Congress, 2nd Session) that "The term 'fair and equitable' as used in the bill is qualified by the term so as to guarantee the one party freedom from coercion, intimidation or threats of coercion or intimidation from the other party.' In each case arising under this bill, good faith must be determined in the context of coercion or intimidation or threats of coercion or intimidation."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9070.60.

Suit for Damages Under Automobile Dealer Franchise Act—Non-Renewal of Franchise—Coercion or Intimidation—Good Faith.—An automobile sales company did not fail to act in good faith in not renewing an automobile dealer's franchise for 1958. The company, in refusing to renew the dealer's franchise, acted without coercion or intimidation or threats of coercion or intimidation. The dealer did not allege that he resisted pressure of any sort by the company and that this resulted in the non-renewal of his franchise. In view of the fact that the company's representatives never saw or were able to communicate with the dealer personally on his premises during the last half of 1957, the company could have hardly threatened to coerce or intimidate him. This was one of the reasons why the franchise was not renewed. The company in no way attempted to force the dealer to accept automobiles or supplies that he did not want on the pain of non-renewal of his franchise. The Automobile Dealer Franchise Act does not prohibit a manufacturer from terminating or refusing to renew the franchise of a dealer who is not providing the manufacturer with adequate representation or curtail the manufacturer's right to cancel or not renew an inefficient or undesirable dealer's franchise. Furthermore, the dealer could not allow his business, for which he was solely responsible, to be conducted by persons who had not reached their majority, and then seek relief under the Act when the company decides that such conduct affords inadequate representation for its product.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9070.

Suit for Damages Under Automobile Dealer Franchise Act—Performing or Complying with Terms of Franchise—Coercion or Intimidation—Good Faith.—An automobile sales company did not fail to act in good faith in performing or complying with the terms of an automobile dealer's 1957 franchise, since there were no acts or coercion of intimidation or threats thereof on the part of the sales company. Coercion was not exerted on the dealer when the company withheld the delivery of automobiles which were ordered orally by the dealer's minor son, who had no authority to act on behalf of his father. Furthermore, the order was not in accordance with the terms of the franchise. The act of signing the franchise in New Jersey against the dealer's will rather than at the dealer's place of business in Staten Island resulted in no injury to the dealer. With respect to a provision of the franchise requiring the dealer to submit monthly reports, the dealer, even assuming that he signed the franchise against his will and that there was coercion with respect to this provision of the franchise, failed to show how he was damaged as a result of his compliance with the provision. Furthermore, the dealer could not complain that certain other provisions of the franchise were unfair and inequitable. The provisions were not complained of nor even mentioned by the dealer when he signed the franchise. In fact, he did not even read the provisions of the franchise before signing it. Since he did not trouble himself to read the provisions at the time of signing the contract, it cannot be said that he was constrained to sign the contract and accept the provisions against his will. The fact that the dealer did not immediately receive a copy of the franchise after it was signed was immaterial, since it appeared that he did not read the contract until he was later informed that his franchise would not be renewed for 1958.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9070.

Suit for Damages Under Automobile Dealer Franchise Act—Effect of Act on Federal Antitrust Laws—Non-Renewal of Franchise.—In holding that an automobile sales company did not violate the Automobile Dealer Franchise Act when the company refused to renew the franchise of a dealer because he did not adequately represent its product, the court noted that even under the Federal antitrust laws, of which the Act is a supplement, a manufacturer does not violate the Sherman Act when he cuts off the franchise of a dealer who is admittedly doing a good business of selling the manufacturer's product. In this connection, the Automobile Dealer Franchise Act provides that no provision of the Act shall repeal, modify, or supersede, directly or indirectly, any provision of the antitrust laws of the United States.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9070.45.

Opinion

[Causes of Action]

WORTENDYKE, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion for summary judgment by defendant, American Motor Sales Corporation (Sales). Plaintiff Staten Island Motors, Inc. (Motors) has brought suit against Sales as a result of the notification of Motors by Sales that its automobile distribution franchise for American Motors' automobiles would not be renewed for the year 1958. The causes of action alleged by Motors against Sales are breach of contract, violation of New York General Business Law § 197, and violation of the Federal Automobile Dealers' Day in Court Act, 70 Stat. 1125 (1956), 15 U. S. C. §§ 1221-25 (Supp. V, 1958).

[Non-Renewal of Franchise]

Sales, a Delaware corporation having its headquarters in New Jersey, is engaged in distributing cars made by American Motors Corporation, of which Sales is a wholly owned subsidiary, to franchised dealers in the New York metropolitan area. During the year 1957 Motors, a New York corporation, was one of three dealers of American Motors' automobiles on Staten Island. Since 1936 Motors had sold automobiles under franchise agreements with Sales or its predecessors. The franchise agreements between Motors and Sales were operative for one year only, a practice general in the automobile industry. Each year a new agreement would be entered into for the following year. Motors sold defendant's automobiles under one such agreement during the year 1957. This agreement had been executed by Francis DePaolo, president and sole stockholder of Motors, and by a representative of Sales, some time in the latter part of 1956. By its terms this franchise agreement expired at the end of 1957. In October 1957, the zone manager of Sales notified DePaolo that "[a]fter much study and deliberation, we wish to advise you that we do not contemplate entering into a new Franchise Agreement with you [for 1958] at the expiration of the present agreement."

The reasons given by Sales for the nonrenewal of the franchise were that plaintiff's sales for the year did not reflect the increased success of most of the other dealers in the zone in selling defendant's cars; that DePaolo was not personally present at its place of business during a substantial portion of the year; that when he was so absent he left the conduct of its business to his twenty-one year old daughter and nineteen year old son and one mechanic; and that plaintiff did not have a suitable place for display of defendant's automobiles.

[Breach of Contract]

Motors has based its alleged cause of action for breach of contract on the fact that in September 1957, it had ordered eight 1958 Nash Rambler automobiles from Sales, which the latter did not subsequently deliver. Failure of Sales to deliver these automobiles, which is alleged to have been a breach of the franchise agreement, is claimed to have resulted in a corresponding loss of business to Motors. However, it appears that this order for cars was not placed by DePaolo, to whom Sales looked as the key man of the corporation, and who, under the 1957 franchise agreement, was the sole qualified representative of Motors. The order was made orally by DePaolo's nineteen-year-old son at an automobile show in New York. DePaolo's son asked a representative of Sales to ship any eight new 1958 automobiles to Motors. It would take little imagination to visualize that, in a business as complex as is involved in the distribution of new automobiles, Sales would require more definite specifications before such an order could be filled, even if the order were initially made by DePaolo himself. Indeed such specificity would seem to be the reason why the franchise agreement provides that "All orders for motor vehicles shall be submitted in writing on Car Purchase Order Forms supplied by Zone." Plaintiff admits that no written forms were submitted to Sales requesting the automobiles in question, and there is no evidence before me that order forms were requested of Sales or that Motors submitted any written correspondence to Sales concerning the allegedly ordered cars. Motors cannot complain of Sales' inaction in failing to fill the order when it has not fulfilled its obligation to make such request in writing. Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 24 (1877); Williston, Contracts §§ 663, 672 (Rev. Ed. 1936). Plaintiff further complains that Sales breached the 1957 franchise agreement when it disseminated the information that it was not going to renew Motors' franchise for 1958. The dissemination by Sales of this information of an already existing fact to its own employees cannot be said to have caused any damages to Motors. Cf. Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., D. C. Md. 1956, [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,292] 138 F. Supp. 899, aff'd [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,564] 239 F. 2d 176, cert. den. 355 U. S. 823 (1957). It does appear that one prospective customer of Motors did cancel an order with Motors in favor of another dealer. However, in light of the subsequent disposition of this action, such damages as DePaolo might there prove would be far below the jurisdictional amount which governs this Court's cognizance of contract actions based on diversity of citizenship. 28 U. S. C. § 1331 (1952). There being no other justiciable issue of fact as to the alleged breach of contract, this cause of action must be dismissed.

[New York Law]

The second cause of action alleged by Motors arises from an alleged violation by Sales of New York General Business Law § 197, which provides:

> "No manufacturer or distributor, or any agent of such manufacturer or distributor shall terminate any contract, agreement, or understanding or renewal thereof for the sale of new motor vehicles to a distributor or dealer, as the case may be, except for cause." (Emphasis supplied.)

It is clear beyond doubt that the New York statute only covers the situation where the manufacturer terminates an existing contract with its franchised dealer, as compared to the Federal Day in Court Act, infra, and other similar State statutes, which cover terminations or cancellations by manufacturers of dealers' franchises and failures to renew such franchises. Brown and Conwell, Automobile Manufacturer-Dealer Legislation, 57 Col. L. Rev. 219, 224 (1957); and compare e. g. Virginia Code of 1950, Section 46.1-547 (1958 Supp.) and South Dakota Code Supp. Section 54.1103 (1952) to e. g. Ark. Stats. (1947), Section 75-1504 (1957 Replacement) and Minn. Stat. Ann. Section 168.27, Subd. 14 (Supp. 1957). The franchise agreement involved in the present case was not terminated by the letter of October 1957 from Sales to Motors. The agreement was simply allowed to expire without being succeeded by a new form of agreement for the year 1958. Plaintiff, however, contends that defendant's failure to fill his oral order for eight new automobiles constituted an implied termination of the agreement. What has been said previously concerning defendant's obligation in this regard disposes of this contention. Motor's asserted cause of action under the New York statute consequently must fail.

[Federal Act]

Motor's third alleged cause of action is predicated on the Federal Automobile Dealers Day in Court Act of 1956 supra.[1] No reported case has come to my attention which applies the term "good faith" as used in the Act to a particular set of factual circumstances. In Miller Motors v. Ford Motor Co., 4 Cir. 1958 [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,937], 252 F. 2d 441, 451, the issue was withdrawn from consideration by the Court. The plain meaning of the Act indicates that the restrictions which it imposes extend only to those dealings between parties wherein coercion or intimidation or threats of the same are involved. This is borne out in the legislative history. It is stated in H. R. 2850, 1956 U. S. Code, Cong., and Admin. News Vol. 3, p. 4596 at p. 4603, that

> "The term 'fair and equitable' as used in the bill is qualified by the term 'so as to guarantee the one party freedom from

[1] So much of the Act as is applicable herein is as follows:

"Sec. 2. An automobile dealer may bring suit against any automobile manufacturer engaged in commerce, in any district court of the United States in the district in which said manufacturer resides, or is found, or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover the damages by him sustained and the cost of suit by reason of the failure of said automobile manufacturer from and after (August 8, 1956) to act in good faith in performing or complying with any of the terms or provisions of the franchise, or in terminating, canceling, or not renewing the franchise with said dealer: Provided, That in any such suit the manufacturer shall not be barred from asserting in defense of any such action the failure of the dealer to act in good faith." 15 U. S. C. § 1222.

"Good faith" is defined as "the duty of each party to any franchise, and all officers, employees, or agents thereof to act in a fair and equitable manner toward each other so as to guarantee the one party freedom from coercion, intimidation, or threats of coercion or intimidation from the other party: Provided, That recommendation, endorsement, exposition, persuasion, urging or argument shall not be deemed to constitute a lack of good faith." 15 U. S. C. § 1221(e).

coercion, intimidation or threats of coercion or intimidation from the other party.' In each case arising under this bill, good faith must be determined in the context of coercion or intimidation or threats of coercion or intimidation." See also Note, 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1239, 1249 (1957).

A careful analysis of the admitted facts here presented discloses, as a matter of law, the absence of any of the prohibited acts of coercion or intimidation or threats thereof on the part of Sales.

[1957 Franchise—Practices]

Plaintiff first complains that Sales violated the Act and coercion was exerted on Motors by its action in withholding the automobiles which were ordered by DePaolo's son at the automobile show. The son admittedly had no authority to act on behalf of his father. What has been stated previously concerning plaintiff's non-compliance with the express terms of the franchise agreement regarding orders of new automobiles in writing disposes of this issue raised by plaintiff.

DePaolo next alleges coercion on the part of Sales when the matter of signing the 1957 franchise agreement came up between the parties in the latter part of 1956. A representative of Sales called at DePaolo's office on Staten Island and insisted that the franchise renewal had to be signed by DePaolo in New Jersey rather than in DePaolo's Staten Island office. The representative told DePaolo that, if he did not go to New Jersey, the company "would not renew the contract." DePaolo subsequently went to New Jersey to sign the contract. This is the act which DePaolo did against his will. However, the act of signing the 1957 franchise agreement in New Jersey against his will rather than in Staten Island resulted in no injury or damage to DePaolo. The agreement was the same whether the instrument was executed in Staten Island or New Jersey. DePaolo further claims that at this time he desired to obtain some relief from the terms of the agreement which required him to submit monthly financial statements to the Company. He had not fulfilled this requirement during 1956, and Sales was insistent that he comply with this provision. DePaolo states that he was told, while attempting to negotiate a modification of this provision, "This is the contract. Sign it." Even if we assume that DePaolo signed the agreement against his will and that there was coercion under the Act with respect to this particular provision concerning the monthly reports, plaintiff has failed to indicate in any way how he was damaged as a result of his compliance with the provision during the period of the 1957 agreement. Further it would appear that such terms in dealer franchises are in the ordinary course and dictated by sound business practice. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 7 Cir. 1941 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,139], 121 F. 2d 376, 386-87; Kessler, Automobile Dealer Franchises: Vertical Integration by Contract, 66 Yale L. J. 1135, 1144 (1957).

Now that the franchise has not been renewed, DePaolo claims that certain provisions of the 1957 agreement governing the obligations of Sales during the term of the agreement and also the obligations of Sales with regard to repurchase from DePaolo and delivery of new cars and equipment on hand at the date of expiration of the agreement, and a provision for reimbursement for rental of the building occupied by DePaolo are unfair and inequitable. No opinion is expressed as to the fairness of these terms, especially the provision relating to reimbursement for leases entered into by the dealers for their premises. See Ford Motor Co. v. Kirkmeyer Motor Co., 4 Cir. 1933, 65 F. 2d 1001, 1005-06. However, the acceptance of these provisions in the 1957 agreement were not against the will of DePaolo. These provisions were not complained of nor even mentioned by DePaolo at the time of signing the 1957 franchise. Despite the age-old warning against signing a document without reading it, DePaolo did not even read the provisions of the 1957 agreement when he signed it. He further complains that a copy of the agreement was not received by him until the following March of 1957. However, it does not appear at that time that he undertook to read the terms of his contract nor to complain of the provisions. What does appear is that apparently after DePaolo found the franchise was not to be renewed, he for the first time and with the aid of his attorney picked out and listed those provisions of the 1957 agreement which he now claims are burdensome. If we accept the common definition of coercion to be "the application to another of such force, either physical or moral, as to constrain him to do against his will something he would not otherwise have done" Web- ster's International Dictionary (2d Ed. 1936), we see that as to these criticized provisions DePaolo was not coerced. As he did not even trouble himself to familiarize himself with such provisions at the time of signing the contract, it cannot be said he was constrained to sign the contract and accept these provisions against his will.

[Non-Renewal of Franchise]

One last point must be considered, i. e., whether under the Act Sales acted without coercion or intimidation or threats thereof in failing to renew Motors' franchise for 1958. If DePaolo had alleged that he resisted pressure of any sort by Sales and this resulted in the non-renewal of his franchise, he would spell out a good cause of action under the Act. H. R. 2850, 1956 U. S. Code, Cong. and Admin. News, supra, at 4603. However, it is uncontradicted that during the last half of 1957 defendant's representatives never saw or were able to communicate with DePaolo personally on his premises. Under such circumstances they could hardly have threatened to coerce or intimidate him. Indeed, the fact that Sales' representatives could not even communicate a simple business request to DePaolo, their franchised dealer, for several months, was one of the reasons for discontinuing the relationship. Sales in no way attempted to force Motors to accept automobiles, parts, accessories or supplies it did not want, or could not dispose of on the market, on pain of non-renewal of its franchise. Cf. Ford Motor Co. v. United States [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,325], 335 U. S. 303, 316-18 (1948). Certainly a manufacturer has the right to expect its dealer to provide a suitable outlet for its products. If the dealer fails in this respect he must suffer the consequence that the manufacturer will prefer to channel his products through another more acceptable outlet. The Act clearly "does not prohibit the manufacturer from terminating or refusing to renew the franchise of a dealer who is not providing the manufacturer with adequate representation. Nor does the [Act] curtail the manufacturer's right to cancel or not to renew an inefficient or undesirable dealer's franchise," nor "freeze present channels or methods of automobile distribution." H. R. 2850, 1956 U. S. Code, Cong. and Admin. News, supra, at p. 4603. DePaolo cannot allow his business, for which he was solely responsible, to be conducted by persons who had not reached majority, and then seek relief under the Act when the manufacturer decides that such conduct affords inadequate representation for his product. Indeed, in cases brought under the Federal Anti-Trust Laws, of which the Act is a supplement, 70 Stat. 1125, the manufacturer does not violate the Sherman Act when he cuts off the franchise of a dealer who is admittedly doing a good business of selling the manufacturer's autos. Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co., D. C. Cir. 1957 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,682], 243 F. 2d 418, cert. den. 355 U. S. 822; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., supra. In this connection the Act (15 U. S. C. § 1224) further provides that "no provision of this chapter shall repeal, modify, or supersede, directly or indirectly any provision of the antitrust laws of the United States." The asserted third cause of action of Motors under the Dealers' Day in Court Act, supra, must fail.

[Constitutionality]

Defendant has further raised the questions of the constitutionality of the New York and Federal statutes. In the light of the foregoing views, I do not reach these questions.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles. No. 699,496. Dated January 22, 1959.

California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act—Applicability to Acts of Municipality.—In an action by a manufacturer of electrical lighting fixtures against a municipality, it was held that the California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act was not applicable to a political subdivision of the state. In the absence of express words to the contrary, the state and its subdivisions are not included within the general terms of a statute. It could not be said, from a reading of the Act, that it was the intent of the legislature to apply the provisions of the statute to the state or its subdivisions. Also, there were no extraneous or affirmative reasons for believing that the sovereign was intended to be affected by the Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2377.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act—Refusal to Deal—Breach of Contract to Purchase Lighting Fixtures—Reasonableness of Restraint.—A contractor which allegedly breached its contract to purchase lighting fixtures from a manufacturer and agreed, in furtherance of an alleged conspiracy, that only fixtures produced by another manufacturer would be used in constructing an underpass for a municipality, did not prevent competition in the manufacture, sale, or purchase of merchandise in violation of the California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act. Only those restraints which are unreasonable are forbidden by the Act. The manufacturer was still free to manufacture and sell its products; it was not prevented from competing in other fields and was not restrained from selling its products to other persons not parties to the action. The only effect of the alleged conspiracy was a breach of contract which was not, in any sense, a restraint of trade as defined by the Act.

Memorandum Decision

BENJAMIN LANDIS, Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Defendant, City of Long Beach, entered into a contract with defendant Boespflug Construction Company for the improvement of the Long Beach Municipal Airport. One provision of the contract called for the installation of certain lighting fixtures in and on the airport facilities which were to be submitted for approval within thirty (30) days of awarding of the contract.

Thereafter, defendant Contractor entered into a sub-contract with defendant Subcontractor for furnishing all labor, material and equipment necessary to complete the electrical work required under the terms of the contract; the defendant Subcontractor then placed a purchase order with the General Electric Supply Company for the furnishing of the lighting fixtures; and the General Electric Supply Company then placed a purchase order with plaintiff for the manufacture of the lighting fixtures.

However, in the contract between defendant Subcontractor and General Electric Supply Company, the purchase order stated that delivery of samples for approval were to be made within four (4) to six (6) months. Plaintiff's contract with General Electric Supply Company contained the same provision.

[Alleged Breach of Contract]

Plaintiff, in its complaint, alleges that defendant City, acting through its employees, officers and agents, refused to accept any lighting fixtures manufactured by plaintiff or any other company other than Sunbeam Lighting Company. Defendant City notified defendant Contractor that it would not accept plaintiff's fixtures, and thereby intentionally induced defendant Contractor to breach the contract between himself and defendant Subcontractor, and further thereby injured the other Subcontractors, including this plaintiff.

[California Antitrust Act]

Plaintiff claims its contract with General Electric Supply Company was breached as a result of the acts of the City and other defendants, and brought this action for damages for tortious interference with contractual relations and for violation of the California Anti-Trust Act.

III

[Alleged Restraint of Trade]

For its Second Cause of Action, plaintiff alleges that defendant City, by its conduct, restrained plaintiff from engaging in the business of manufacturing and selling lighting fixtures, all in violation of the Cartwright Act (California Business and Professions Code, secs. 16,700-16,758). This Act forbids unlawful combinations and conspiracies to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

[Applicability to City]

The question is whether or not the Cartwright Act can be held to apply to defendant City. It is the decision of this court that it cannot.

It is well settled that the absence of express words to the contrary, neither the State, nor its subdivisions, are included within or bound by the general terms of a statute. (Inglewood v. Los Angeles County (1929), 207 Cal. 697, 280 Pac. 360; Miller Estate (1936), 5 Cal. 2d 588; 55 P. 2d 491; City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County (1937), 9 Cal. 2d 624, 72 P. 2d 138.)

> ". . . Unless there are extraneous and affirmative reasons for believing that the sovereign was intended to be affected, or unless the general statutory limitations on the rights of citizens embrace the State and its agencies by express words or necessary implication, general terms do not have the effect of restricting sovereign or governmental powers of the State or its subdivisions, and cannot injuriously affect its capacity to perform its functions or establish rights of action against it." (45 Cal. Jur. 2d sec. 25, p. 551, and cases cited therein.)

From a reading of Sections 16,700-16,758 of the California Business and Professions Code, it cannot be said that it was the intent of the Legislature to apply the provisions of the Cartwright Act to the State or its subdivisions. Therefore, since the State was not expressly included within the provisions of the statute, and since this court has not found, nor has counsel presented, any extraneous or affirmative reasons for believing that the sovereign was intended to be affected, the general rule holds true. The same rule is applicable to a county or city, each being a political subdivision of the State, as the same is applied here. (Inglewood v. Los Angeles County (1929), 207 Cal. 697, 280 Pac. 360; Miller Estate (1936), 5 Cal. 2d 588, 55 P. 2d 491; City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County (1937), 9 Cal. 2d 624, 72 P. 2d 138.)

[Alleged Conspiracy]

Defendant Boespflug by his Demurrer raises the question whether or not as against him plaintiff's complaint states a cause of action under the provisions of the Cartwright Act? (Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code, secs. 16,700-16,708.)

Plaintiff contends that defendant Contractor conspired with others to carry out restrictions in trade and to prevent competition in manufacturing and selling fluorescent lighting fixtures manufactured by any company other than Sunbeam Lighting Co.; that in furtherance of such conspiracy, defendants agreed that only Sunbeam lighting fixtures would be accepted for installation in the underpass.

[Cases Considered]

In Field v. Barber Asphalt Company (1903), 194 U. S. 618, plaintiff claimed a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act because the Board of Aldermen of Westport, Missouri, made a contract with defendant for certain paving, and required paving to be constructed of Trinidad Lake asphalt. Said asphalt was a product of a foreign country, and there were other deposits in the States from which suitable asphalt could be obtained. As a result of the requirement of such asphalt, competitive bidding was eliminated. The court in this case held that the Sherman Act was inapplicable as the Act was not intended to affect contracts which have remote and indirect bearing upon commerce between the States.

The facts in the Field case and the instant case are distinguishable in that a specific asphalt was called for in the original contract in the Field case, while in the instant case the specific lighting fixtures [Sunbeam] were not called for in the original contract, but were later made a specification by the defendant City. However, analogy can be drawn between the two cases as to the effect of requiring a specific product and its effect upon restraint of trade. The effect was to eliminate other competitors from supplying their product in both cases. But, this did not prevent them from further competition in the sale of their products in other markets. There was at most an indirect bearing on restraint of trade, and as pointed out in the Field case, the antitrust laws were not meant to cover such situations.

Since the Cartwright Act differs from the Sherman Act primarily in that the Cartwright Act concerns itself with intrastate commerce, while the Sherman Act deals with interstate commerce, the court is of the opinion that the Field case is applicable here.

Also in Schweizer v. Local Joint Executive Board [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,620] (1953), 121 Cal. App. 2d 45, 52; 262 P. 2d 568, the court held:

". . . It is true, as pointed out in Kold Kist v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,695], 99 Cal. App. 2d 191 [221 P. 2d 724], that combinations for the purpose of controlling prices and creating a monopoly are not the only ones forbidden by the Cartwright Act since that act also forbids combinations for the purpose of carrying out restrictions in trade or commerce, limiting or reducing the production of any commodity or preventing competition in the sale or purchase of any commodity. It does not follow, however, that any agreement or combination which has the effect of interfering to some extent with the purchase or sale of merchandise, is covered by the act and not unlawful by reason thereof. As we read that case, it supports the conclusion that the real test in a particular case is the primary purpose of the agreement or combination in question, and that if this primary purpose is to interfere with the trade in, and prevent the sale of, certain products the agreement or combination is unlawful."

[Reasonableness of Restraints]

In Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,791] (1957), 152 Cal. App. 2d 418, 313 P. 2d 936, it was held that the antitrust laws are concerned only with unreasonable restraints.

In Rolley, Inc. v. Norman (Merle) Cosmetics, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,937], 129 Cal. App. 2d 844, defendant offered to furnish his cosmetics to certain retailers on condition they handle his brand exclusively. Four retailers agreed to such arrangement. Plaintiff, a competing manufacturer, then sued defendant and the retailers for illegal restraint of trade. The court, in sustaining defendant's demurrer, held that the contracts between defendant and the retailers would in no way prevent competition so as to sustain a cause of action under the Cartwright Act.

And so it is with the instant case. The alleged acts of defendants did not in any sense operate to prevent competition by the plaintiff in other fields—he was and is still free to manufacture and sell his products and is not restrained from doing so by the defendants, or any of them.

Thus, it appears from a reading of the cases that the Cartwright Act is not so broad as to include every and all combinations which result to some extent in a restraint of trade. Rather, it is only those restraints which are unreasonable that are forbidden, such as restraints which include all of commodity or trade, or create restrictions which materially affect freedom of commerce and those in which the primary purpose is to interfere with trade.

[Effect of Alleged Conspiracy]

It now becomes necessary to determine if defendants' activities had the tendency to accomplish any of the results which the Cartwright Act was designed to prevent. What was the effect of defendants' alleged conspiracy?

From the complaint, it appears that the acts of the defendants operated only to prevent the plaintiff from installing his lighting fixtures in the underpass. This may have constituted in itself a tort but plaintiff was not restrained in any manner from further conducting the manufacture and sale of his lighting fixtures to other persons not parties to this action. The fact that a person causes another to breach his contract with resulting injury to a complainant does not, of itself, establish a conspiracy in restraint of trade which is actionable under the Cartwright Act, though the complainant may well have a cause of action for wrongful interference with contractual relations.

Thus, the effect of the alleged conspiracy was not to prevent competition in the manufacture, sale, or purchase of merchandise in violation of the Cartwright Act. Its only effect was to cause a breach of contract which cannot, in any sense, be deemed a restraint of trade as defined by the provisions of the California Business and Professions Code, secs. 16,700-16,758.

[Demurrer Sustained]

The Demurrer of defendant Boespflug Construction Company to plaintiff's Second Cause of Action is sustained. The Motion to Strike as to the Second Cause of Action is ordered off calendar.

[¶ 69,264] Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Williams Electric Cooperative, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. No. 16,014. Dated February 10, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of North Dakota.

North Dakota Contracts in Restraint of Trade Law

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Contract Not to Compete—Territorial Division of Markets—Legality—Rule of Reason—Application of Prohibitions to Public Utilities.—A contract under which a public utility and an electrical cooperative (1) divided the territory within which each would render electric service to customers and (2) agreed not to solicit each other's customers for electric service is contrary to public policy and is therefore void and unenforceable. Such contracts are illegal under North Dakota law. The contentions that under the rule of reason, the contract did not constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade, and that the public policy of North Dakota, as exemplified by statute, is opposed to unrestricted competition between corporations engaged in the distribution of electrical power, were rejected. While resort must be had to the rule of reason in determining liability under the Sherman Act and analogous statutes, the general rule is that contracts between quasi-public corporations, having for their object the division of territory, are against public policy, and being so, are absolutely void, untempered by any application of the rule of reason. Parties engaged in rendering service which is public in nature cannot disable themselves from performing the public duties which they have undertaken. Also, it is not necessary to establish that the contract has proved detrimental to the public. Furthermore, the Supreme Court of North Dakota had held that one of the companies had the right to render electrical service in the territory allocated to the other company.

Before JOHNSEN, VOGEL and MATTHES, Circuit Judges.

[Breach of Contract]

MATTHES, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an action for damages for alleged breach of a contract in which Williams Electric Cooperative, Inc., a North Dakota corporation, plaintiff below, recovered a jury verdict and judgment for $35,000 against Montana-Dakota Utilities Co., a Delaware corporation. Failing in its effort to obtain favorable action on its after trial motion for judgment, the defendant has brought the case to this court.

[Contract—State Proceedings]

On July 21, 1952, plaintiff and defendant entered into the contract, here in question, in which it was recited that the Cooperative (plaintiff) and the Company (defendant) have electric facilities available for the distribution of electricity in the Williston, North Dakota, community, and with expansion and growth in that community taking place, a dispute has arisen between the parties concerning the right to serve customers in that area. In order to settle differences between the parties amicably, they agreed, inter alia:

"1. That the map attached hereto marked Exhibit 'A' and made a part hereof is a true representation of the Williston community and surrounding area experiencing growth and development wherein the dispute exists between the parties as to the right to serve new customers with electricity and there is indicated thereon by a heavy red line the boundary to be observed by the parties, the Cooperative to render electric service to new customers situated to the west, north and east of said red line and the Company to render electric service to new customers within the boundaries of said line."

"4. Neither party will solicit the customers of the other party for electric service."

After the contract was entered into, events occurred which form the basis for this litigation, in that defendant, upon formal consumer request to do so, extended its facilities whereby it was enabled to and did furnish service to three electric consumers that were located in the area designated by the contract as plaintiff's territory. This provoked a dispute between the two companies and ultimately resulted in plaintiff's filing a complaint before the Public Service Commission of North Dakota in which that agency was requested to issue an order restraining defendant from serving present and prospective customers in the prohibited area. In support of its complaint before the Commission, plaintiff relied, first, on the contract here in question, and second, on the charge that defendant was acting within the disputed area without authority of a certificate of public convenience and necessity, contrary to § 49-0301 N. D. R. C., 1943, 1953 Supp. The Commission dismissed the complaint and this action was subsequently affirmed in all respects by the Supreme Court of North Dakota, which ruled that the extensions of service by defendant, although made without a certificate of public necessity, were lawful within the exceptions of Paragraph 3 of § 49-0301, supra, which allowed extensions without certificates "* * * into territory contiguous to that already occupied by it and not receiving similar service from another utility, or electric cooperative * * * or if no certificate of public convenience and necessity has been issued to any other public utility."[1] Williams Electric Coop. v. Montana-Dakota Util. Co., 79 N. W. 2d 508. The court further held that the Commission properly declined to determine the contractual rights of the parties, this being a judicial function for the courts, stating at p. 517: "If any contractual rights exist between the appellant and the respondent under the agreement dated July 21, 1952, which we do not determine, the enforcement of such rights must be sought in the courts of this state." (Italics supplied.)

Being unsuccessful in its effort to force defendant to discontinue furnishing electric service in its claimed territory, plaintiff instituted this action for damages, thus bringing the question of the validity of the contract squarely into issue.

[Division of Territory—Legality]

Defendant contends that since the contract in question has for its principal object the dividing of trade territory between parties affected with a public interest, it is contrary to public policy and is therefore void and unenforceable. This position is sound and must be sustained.[2]

[North Dakota Statutes]

In general, a contract which unreasonably restrains trade is contrary to public policy and void. This is such an elementary and universally recognized rule of law that citation of authorities should not be necessary.

[1] Apparently, under Rule 23, Standards of Electric Service, promulgated by the North Dakota Public Service Commission, the defendant could have been compelled to furnish service to outlying areas, upon proper consumer application. This rule provides: "A utility will be required to make extensions * * * where the estimated net income will yield a net return of approximately six per cent (6%) on the investment to be made." The manager of the Cooperative conceded in his testimony that the return on investments made in the disputed area "would be well over 6 per cent."

[2] The trial judge instructed the jury that the contract was valid and binding, and that service in the disputed area was not required of defendant by statute or rule.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

For discussion and survey of the principle both at common law and under more modern statutes, see United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 6 Cir., 85 F. 271, modified 175 U. S. 211, and consult Corbin on Contracts, Vol. 6, Chap. 80; Vol. II, Restatement of the Law of Contracts, §§ 513-517; Williston on Contracts, Rev. Ed. Vol. 5, § 1633 et seq.; 17 C. J. S. Contracts § 238. North Dakota, like many states, has outlawed such contracts by statute. Section 9-0806, N. D. R. C. 1943, provides:

> "Every contract by which anyone is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business of any kind is to that extent void, except * * * (Two exceptions not here present are set out)."

See also § 51-0801 et seq. N. D. R. C. 1943, relating to Pools and Trusts.

[Rule of Reason]

Plaintiff does not dispute the foregoing principle, but takes the position that under the "rule of reason," the contract does not constitute an unreasonable restraint on trade. As a corollary proposition, plaintiff suggests that the public policy of North Dakota, as exemplified by the enactment of Chapter 235, S. L. N. D. 1927, now § 49-0301 N. D. R. C. 1943, 1953 Supp., supra, "is unalterably opposed to unrestricted competition between corporations engaged in the transmission and distribution of electrical power and, on the contrary, supports firmly any method of eliminating competition without detriment to the consuming public." We agree that, with the exception of certain "illegal per se" situations,[3] resort must be had to the "rule of reason" in determining liability under the Sherman Act and analogous statutes. As this court said in Adams Dairy Company v. St. Louis Dairy Company [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,158], 260 F. 2d 46, p. 53: "(T)he principle is firmly entrenched that in determining whether a restraint is unreasonable and therefore illegal and violative of the Sherman Act, resort must be had to the Rule of Reason." The rule has been adhered to since its promulgation by the Supreme Court in 1911 in Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, and was applied by the Supreme Court of Minnesota to a state statute modeled after the Sherman Act in Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Paine & Nixon Co., 182 Minn. 159, 234 N. W. 453, where a manufacturer had agreed not to solicit work in a particular locality.

[Quasi-Public Corporations]

However, of paramount importance to our case is a consideration of the nature of the business of the contracting parties. One is a public utility, the other, an electrical cooperative corporation — quasi public in character—both engaged in supplying a commodity to the public in the territory they are authorized to serve. In determining the relative freedom to contract and the validity of contracts which tend to restrict trade, the courts have definitely distinguished the limited power of corporations impressed with a public trust and duty, from the greater freedom allowed to private enterprise. By the great weight of authority in this country, the rule has been promulgated and consistently applied that contracts between quasi-public corporations, having for their object the division of territory between such companies, are against public policy, and being so, are absolutely void, untempered by any application of the "rule of reason." A concise summation of the pronouncements made on this precise question is the following in 36 Am. Jur., Monopolies, Combinations, etc. § 97:

> "Many cases hold that all contracts, combinations, and agreements between competing carriers and other public utilities for the elimination of competition, fixing of rates, division of territory, or pooling of profits, are illegal and void as tending toward monopoly or the restraint of trade and competition to the public detriment; and this is held to be true regardless of the fact that the restraint is partial and without regard to whether or not actual injury has resulted to the public." (Italics supplied.)

Typical of such holdings is Chicago Gas-Light & C. Co. v. People's Gas-Light & C. Co., 121 Ill. 530, 13 N. E. 169, where the contract purported to divide the city of Chicago between two gas companies, each having charters to serve all of the city, and actually undertaking so to serve, prior to the contract under which one covenanted not to serve a particular section of the city. In a thorough and well-reasoned opinion, the court refused specific performance, stating at page 175:

> "The ordinary rule, that contracts in partial restraint of trade are not invalid, does not apply to corporations like appellant and appellee, because they were engaged in a public business, and in furnishing that which was a matter of public concern to all the inhabitants of the city."

In Gibbs v. Baltimore Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 399, the Supreme Court was concerned with a contract between two gas companies, which contained, among others, the following provision:

> "5. Neither party hereto shall solicit any business belonging to the other, but either party may take such consumers of the other as may voluntarily, without any solicitation, desire to change from one to the other."

While the contract also attempted to fix prices, which is not a subject of the contract under consideration here, the court was careful to point out, at page 406, that the contract provided: "that one of the companies should lay no more pipes or mains for the supply of gas in the city; * * * (i)t will be perceived that this was an agreement for the abandonment by one of the companies of the discharge of its duties to the public, * * *." Getting down to the law, the Court stated at pp. 409-410:

> "There are two principal grounds on which the doctrine is founded that a contract in restraint of trade is void as against public policy. One is, the injury to the public by being deprived of the restricted party's industry; the other is, the injury to the party himself by being precluded from pursuing his occupation, and thus being prevented from supporting himself and his family. * * * Innumerable cases, however, might be cited to sustain the proposition that combinations among those engaged in business impressed with a public or quasi public character, which are manifestly prejudicial to the public interest, cannot be upheld. * * * It is also too well settled to admit of doubt that a corporation cannot disable itself by contract from performing the public duties which it has undertaken, and by agreement compel itself to make public accommodation or convenience subservient to its private interests." (Italics supplied.)

Of more recent vintage is Pennsylvania W. & P. Co. v. Consolidated G., E. L. & P. Co., 4 Cir., 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,704], 184 F. 2d 552, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 906, where a contract between two utilities fixing prices and dividing territory was held to violate the Sherman Act, despite the fact that the public might actually benefit. Pertinent to the instant question, the Court stated, at p. 558:

> "Similarly illegal is any agreement for the division of territory between competitors which in this case was effectuated by permitting Consolidated to determine to what customers and in what territory Penn Water might sell. U. S. v. Aluminum Co., 2d Cir., 148 F. 2d 416; U. S. v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 6 Cir., 85 F. 271, 291, 46 L. R. A. 122."

See also and compare, South Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Calumet Elec. St. Ry. Co., 171 Ill. 391, 49 N. E. 576; *Huntington Telephone Co. v. We recognize the general rule that public utilities have the right to enter into contracts between themselves free from control or supervision of the State—see 73 C. J. S. Public Utilities, § 5, and compare Georgia Power Co. v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Com'n, 211 Ga. 223, 85 S. E. 2d 14—and we have considered the decisions cited by plaintiff upholding contracts between utilities which did restrain trade, either because there was no showing of detriment to the public, or because affirmative benefit to the public resulted therefrom. *McKinley Telephone Co. v. tiff's contention, they are definitely minority holdings. The decision in Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Paine & Nixon Co., 182 Minn. 159, 234 N. W. 453, supra, also cited by plaintiff, may be readily distinguished because there, private companies were involved.

[Detriment to Public]

From the overwhelming majority of cases, it is quite clear that parties engaged in performing a duty or rendering service which is public in nature, such as the companies here involved, cannot disable themselves by contract from performing the public duties which they have undertaken. Further, it is not necessary to establish that the contract has proved detrimental to the public. Williston states, after pointing out that in England contracts of such nature have been upheld—"In the United States, however, such agreements have been held illegal whether they were proved in fact to be detrimental to the public or not." § 1648, Vol. 5, Rev. Ed. See Custer Public Pow. Dist. v. Loup River Public Pow. Dist., 162 Neb. 300, 75 N. W. 2d 619, 628; Pennsylvania W. & P. Co. v. Consolidated G., E. L. & P. Co., 4th Cir. As to illegality of contracting away public duties which might arise in the future, see South Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Calumet Elec. St. Ry. Co., 171 Ill. 391, 49 N. E. 576, 578:

> "The interest of these companies, and the interest of the public, to have the streetcar lines extended as the demand therefor should arise, are the same. * * * Any contract which tended to deprive the public of that benefit is clearly violative of the public right, against public policy, and void. The principle is that such corporation shall not bind themselves by contract not to serve the public interest as the demand arises. To say the defendant was not bound to extend its lines, though it might be necessary to do so to serve the public convenience, is one thing; but to say that it shall not do so, because of the binding force of its contract with an individual or corporation, is quite another, and very different, thing."

Compare Doane v. Chicago Ry. Co., 160 Ill. 22, 45 N. E. 507; Custer Public Pow. Dist. v. Loup River Public Pow. Dist., 162 Neb. 300, 75 N. W. 2d 619, 162 Neb. 821, 77 N. W. 2d 590 (Increased power needs called for erection of new plant); Union Trust & Savings Bank v. Kinloch Long-Distance T. Co., 258 Ill. 202, 101 N. E. 535 (although utility not bound to furnish long distance service, once it is undertaken, the assumed duty cannot be fettered by exclusive dealing contract).

[Extensions Lawful]

In the case before us, and apart from any affirmative duty imposed by Rule 23 of the North Dakota Public Service Commission,[4] it was conclusively determined by the Supreme Court of North Dakota in Williams Electric Coop. v. Montana-Dakota Util. Co., 79 N. W. 2d 508, supra, that defendant's extensions here complained of were lawful and within the contemplation of § 49-0301 N. D. R. C., 1943, 1953 Supp., supra. As seen before, one of the complaints made by plaintiff in the proceeding inaugurated by it before the Public Service Commission was that defendant's extensions into the disputed territory were unlawful and in violation of the foregoing statute. In a careful analysis of the statute, and in view of the factual situation existing, this contention was disallowed. Thus, although apparently the territory was not included within defendant's existing certificate of public convenience and necessity, nevertheless, because of the circumstances which brought defendant within Paragraph 3 of § 49-0301, supra, it had the legal right to serve the disputed area. That being the situation, we cannot escape the conclusion that the parties could not impair or restrict by contract the right, power, and correlative duty of defendant to serve all within that area desiring service.

[Contract Void]

Examination of the contract discloses that its sole and only purpose and function was to divide and set apart the territory each was to serve, with the further agreement that neither would solicit the customers of the other party for electric service. It of course follows that if legal sanction is given to such an agreement, consumers of electricity in the area, which the competing companies have divided, without pretense of authority from the proper regulatory body,[5] would be completely and effectively deprived of the right to electric service from the utility which was legally empowered to render such service. In our view, such a contract adversely affects the public interest, and apart from the fact that such contracts are denied specific enforcement, we further determine that, being void, this contract cannot support an action and judgment for damages.

[4] See discussion, footnote 1, supra.

The judgment is reversed.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, Branch I. No. 58-CR-58. January 21, 1959.

Case No. 1384 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Jurisdiction of United States District Courts—Transfer of Proceedings—Convenience of Parties and Witnesses.—A criminal action charging three natural gas companies with engaging in a combination and conspiracy to unreasonably restrain and monopolize the transmission and sale of natural gas was transferred from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. The evidence was overwhelming that the convenience of all parties and the interests of justice would best be served by the transfer. Affidavits by the companies indicated that a subsidiary of one of the companies was the only alleged co-conspirator with offices in the Eastern District of Wisconsin; that witnesses located outside of both districts would have readier transportation to Chicago than to Milwaukee; that trial in Milwaukee would result in additional expense; and that the companies' businesses would suffer less disruption if the case were transferred to Chicago. The Government would undergo no hardship by reason of the transfer; the documents upon which it intended to rely were located in Washington, D. C., and the majority of its witnesses, as indicated by those it summoned before the grand jury, were more conveniently located with respect to Chicago than to Milwaukee. The court rejected the Government's argument that the State of Wisconsin was entitled to a "front row seat" in the controversy because the Governor of the State, as a result of natural gas shortages in Wisconsin, made the complaint that gave rise to the proceeding.

Opinion

[Motion for Change of Venue]

The Court [Robert E. Tehan, Chief Judge, In full text]: This case is before the Court on the joint motion of the defendants, filed December 1, 1958, for transfer of this action to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, pursuant to the provisions of Rule 21 (b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Indictment]

On April 30, 1958, the Grand Jury in the Eastern District of Wisconsin, returned an indictment against the defendants herein, none of whom are residents of this State, charging them with (1) engaging in a combination and conspiracy to monopolize interstate trade and commerce, (2) engaging in a combination and conspiracy unreasonably to restrain interstate trade and commerce, (3) attempting to monopolize interstate trade and commerce, and (4) monopolizing interstate trade and commerce in the transmission and sale of natural gas in the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and parts of Illinois and Michigan in violation of Title 15 U. S. C., §§ 1 and 2.

[Prior Proceedings]

On June 26, 1958, the defendants moved for a bill of particulars for use on contemplated motions attacking venue in this District or seeking a transfer of the proceedings to the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. The Government voluntarily furnished a Partial Bill of Particulars specifying acts allegedly justifying venue in this District. The Court denied defendant's motion relative to particularization of events and occurrences in the Northern District of Illinois when the Government stipulated that venue would properly lie in that District. Absent particulars as to events and occurrences in the Northern District of Illinois, and upon the representation of counsel for the Government that it would rely substantially in the presentation of its case upon documents now in its possession as a result of subpoenas duces tecum issued in connection with the Grand Jury hearing, the defendants have relied on facts within their knowledge or obtained through their knowledge of the Grand Jury proceedings in presenting this motion.

[Affidavits—Convenience of Parties]

The defendants have filed twelve affidavits in support of their motion to transfer, the material substance of which is uncontroverted. All of these affidavits indicate that Chicago is more accessible than Milwaukee to witnesses coming from places removed from either forum because of its superior transportation facilities.

The affidavits filed on behalf of defendant, Peoples Gas Light and Coke Company, herein called Peoples, indicate that none of the documents furnished to the Grand Jury related to meetings, conversations or conferences in this District, nor did Peoples furnish any letters sent to or received from this District. Peoples conducts no business in this District, and has no offices here. Its office, wherein are located all of the records pertinent to this case, is in Chicago. Its officers, and the officers of its subsidiaries, live in the Chicago area, with the exception of three officers who live in Texas. The Northern District of Illinois would be, clearly, a more convenient forum for those persons and other employees of Peoples and trial there would result in less disruption of business than would trial in this District. The additional expense incurred in the event of trial here (assuming a three-month trial period) is estimated to be $104,900.00.

The defendant, James F. Oates, Jr., former Chairman of Peoples Board, states in his affidavit that, although he presently resides in New York, his duties as Chairman of the Board of Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States could be more easily performed and his business less disrupted if this motion were granted, since Equitable maintains a large office in Chicago. He further states that all of the records to which he will refer are located in Chicago and since he has been absent from the company's office for over a year he will have to spend considerable time reviewing them in preparation for the trial.

Affidavits filed on behalf of the defendant, American Natural Gas Company, and the defendant, Ralph T. McElvenny, its President, indicate that many of American's files are in Chicago. The majority of the meetings upon which the Government relies to prove its charges were held in Chicago, and only one was in this District. Milwaukee Gas Light Company, a subsidiary of American, is the only alleged co-conspirator with offices here, and that company was able to produce only four documents and two letters in response to a Grand Jury subpoena. No officers of that company were called to testify before the Grand Jury. The expense of temporary offices, not necessary if this case is transferred, would result from trial in Milwaukee.

Affidavits of the defendant, Northern Natural Gas Company, herein called Northern, indicate that of the documents it presented to the grand jury, 296 related to Chicago meetings, and 15 related to two meetings here.

The affidavit of John F. Merriam, President of Northern, stated that trial in Chicago would permit him to attend to business and personal affairs with less disruption and better prepare for trial in the City of Chicago.

[Government's Affidavit]

The affidavit filed by the Government states that 53 of its tentative witnesses are Wisconsin residents and would be less inconvenienced by trial here than by trial in Illinois. These witnesses include persons present with representatives of American at one meeting held in Madison, Wisconsin, in August 1955, and persons contacted by one F. H. McIntire, a representative of American, on tours to Wisconsin during which he contacted officials of local gas distributing companies and city officials. The defendants suggest that these witnesses would be called to establish venue of the action here, an issue that would disappear were the case transferred. The Government, however, indicates that some of the witnesses will be called to prove the substance of the charges made in the indictment.

[Most Convenient Forum]

We think, on the whole of the record before us, that the evidence is overwhelming that the convenience of all parties and the interest of justice will be best served by a transfer.

It appears that the Northern District of Illinois is by far the most convenient forum for the parties defendant and their witnesses, and a transfer would impose no hardship, or a minimal one, on the Government or its material witnesses. The defendants, American and Peoples, have shown that trial here would result in additional expense. All defendants have shown that their businesses would suffer less disruption if the case is transferred. Witnesses located outside of both Districts will have readier transportation to Chicago than to Milwaukee.

[Hardship]

In addition to the added convenience to the defendants and their witnesses, it would appear that the Government would undergo no hardship by reason of the transfer of this case to the Northern District of Illinois. The documents upon which it intends to rely are presently located in Washington, D. C. Only one or two of the 52 companies or individuals summoned to appear before the Grand Jury is more conveniently located with respect to this District than with respect to the Northern District of Illinois, and in most cases the latter District is much more accessible. The Government has indicated that the documents presented to the Grand Jury will form the basis of its case. Although it is true that the Government does not have to present its entire case to the Grand Jury, it is reasonable to assume that the witnesses and documents subpoenaed are representative of the general nature of the proof and the type of witnesses upon which the Government intends to rely. The statistical studies made by the defendants, while limited in scope by the material available, indicate that the overwhelming balance of convenience is in favor of the Northern District of Illinois.

[Other Considerations]

This is a criminal case and a matter of grave concern to the defendants as well as to the Government. There are very real considerations to the defendants even beyond the express penalties of the Act. No one who has had experience in protracted litigation involving important stakes such as are involved here can be at all realistic and not recognize the need and value of close contact between clients, officers of corporations, and records, and attorneys immediately prior to and during the course of the trial. The contact could best be maintained by most of the parties if trial were held in the Northern District of Illinois.

[Applicable Case Law]

Under the facts of this present case we see no need to elaborate on the law, except to state that we find that this case falls within the scope of such cases as United States v. National City Lines, Inc. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,600], 7 F. R. D. 393 (S. Dist. Calif., 1947) and United States v. American Linen Supply Company [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,149], 134 F. Supp. 21 (East. Dist. Wis., 1955).

[State's Connection With Case]

The Government has argued that the State of Wisconsin has a substantial connection with the case, as evidenced by the fact that the Governor of Wisconsin made the complaint giving rise to this proceeding because of the natural gas shortages in some areas and complete lack of natural gas in other areas of the State, all of which entitles Wisconsin to a "front row seat" in this controversy.

There are disturbing implications in this position, which, however, we will not go into upon the assurance of the Government, which we accept, that it does not mean thereby to suggest that it wants any unfair advantage in the trial of this case.

[Expeditious Trial]

We are completely satisfied that the citizens of Wisconsin have the fullest confidence in the integrity of the Federal Courts and would want this case tried in a forum where the interests of justice would best be served. This forum, it is abundantly clear, is the Northern District of Illinois. Such a transfer imposes no burden on any party—plaintiff or defendant—but relieves parties, in varying degrees, of some burdens and, in addition, accrues to the parties, in varying degrees, positive conveniences, making for easy access to sources of proof, diminishing costs, and increases rapidity in bringing in witnesses, and reduces the burden on the businesses of the defendants during the trial, and would, moreover, promote every public interest in an expeditious trial.

Since criminal cases such as this must be given priority, all this can be achieved without delay of prompt disposition of this action.

[Transfer of Venue Granted]

The motion to transfer this proceeding to the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, is therefore granted.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suits for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Modification—Approval of Plan for Operation of Bid Depository—Practices Enjoined.—A judgment, declaring that certain rules of a bid depository are illegal under the Sherman Act and enjoining certain bidding practices, was modified to permit the operation of a bid depository in accordance with a plan approved by the court. The modified judgment provided that the court is of the view that the method of operating a bid depository as outlined in the plan does not violate the antitrust laws. The original judgment contained a provision permitting the defendants to submit, for court approval, a plan for the operation of a bid depository. The modified judgment (1) was made applicable to any user of any bid depository operated by the defendants who has actual notice of the judgment, (2) prohibited any agreement or practice found to have been unlawful and certain other bidding practices, and (3) specified the manner in which bid openings should be conducted.

Modified Final Judgment

[Operation of Bid Depository]

Leon R. Yankwich, Chief District Judge [In full text]: This is a proceeding filed by the Government on June 28, 1955 against the above-named defendants, alleging an unlawful combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal, and electrical supplies, materials and fixtures, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The relief sought is of an equitable nature. The defendants appeared and filed their joint and several answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof. The case was tried by the Court sitting without a jury.

After trial, the Court considered the evidence presented, the proposed findings and counter-findings prepared respectively by counsel for plaintiff and defendants, in accordance with the Court's Order of December 30, 1957, and after having held hearings on April 25, 1958 and May 2, 1958 for the purpose of settling such findings and judgment in this matter the Court on May 26, 1958 filed its findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment. The aforesaid judgment which was entered in the docket of the above-entitled Court on May 29, 1958, provided in part as follows:

> "Provided, however, that the defendants may within a period of one year after the entry of this judgment, upon notice to the Government, present to the Court a plan for the operation of a bid depository, and if, after hearing, the Court approves of such plan or any modification thereof, the Court may, within said period of one year from the date of entry of this judgment, modify this judgment to permit the operation of a bid depository in accordance with such plan or modification thereof."

On October 21, 1958, pursuant to the aforesaid provision in such judgment, the defendants filed their petition for approval of a plan for the operation of a bid depository in accordance with certain rules which are fully set forth in such petition. A copy of such rules is attached as Exhibit A. On November 17, 1958, a hearing was held on said petition, at which evidence was offered by defendants in support of their petition for modification of such judgment.

[Judgment Modified]

The Court having considered the matters presented at the previous proceedings, having read such petition for modification of the judgment heretofore entered, having heard the evidence in support of such petition, and having found nothing objectionable in the rules which are attached as Exhibit A insofar as this proceeding is concerned,

It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the judgment heretofore entered be modified to provide as follows:

I

[Antitrust Violations]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties herein. The defendants Bakersfield Associated Plumbing Contractors, Inc., Kern, Inyo and Mono Counties Sheet Metal Contractors Association, Inc., and Kern County Electrical Contractors Association, Inc., by adopting on or about October 27, 1954 and enforcing Rules 6, 8, and 12B of the Bakersfield Construction Industry Bid Depository hereinafter described, have combined and conspired among themselves and with others to unreasonably restrain interstate trade and commerce, in violation of Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this judgment:

(a) The term "Bakersfield Trade Area" shall refer to and include the city of Bakersfield, and the county of Kern, State of California.

(b) The term "construction supplies" shall refer to plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal, and electrical supplies which are furnished by subcontractors in connection with the performance of construction contracts.

(c) The term "bid depository" shall refer to a facility through which bids of subcontractors are received and processed and made available to general contractors, in accordance with the rules for the operation of such bid depository.

(d) The term "Bakersfield Construction Industry Bid Depository" is a facility established, maintained, and operated by the defendants, through which bids of subcontractors are received and processed and made available to general contractors in accordance with the rules for the operation of such bid depository. A copy of such rules is attached to plaintiff's complaint as Exhibit A and has been incorporated in the findings of fact made by the Court in this action.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, directors, members, managers, agents, employees, successors and assigns, and to all persons acting or claiming to act under, through, or on behalf of them, or any of them, and to any user of any bid depository operated by the defendants, or any of them, who shall have had actual notice of the provisions of this judgment.

IV

[Practices Prohibited]

The defendants, and each of them, are enjoined and restrained from:

(a) engaging in or participating in agreements, understandings, practices, or arrangements having a purpose or effect of continuing, reviving, or renewing the aforesaid combination or conspiracy;

(b) adopting, enforcing, or continuing in effect, any of the provisions of any rule for the operation of a bid depository which

(i) requires the submission of separate bids for plumbing, or separate bids for heating and ventilating;

(ii) attaches any condition with respect to the price at which any combination bid for plumbing and heating and ventilating may be submitted;

(iii) requires that subcontractors who have been awarded contracts as a result of bids deposited at such bid depository shall pay any fees which, in the aggregate and in combination with any other fees collected pursuant to any such rule, are in excess of the amount reasonably required for the operation and maintenance of such bid depository;

(c) coercing, inducing, or attempting to coerce or induce, any contractor who has submitted a bid through a bid depository operated by defendants, or any of them, to withdraw such bid after it has been opened, announced, or published at such bid depository; and

(d) soliciting, receiving, or accepting money or any other things of value as an inducement to the withdrawal of any bid submitted through a bid depository operated by the defendants, or any of them, after it has been opened, announced, or published at such bid depository.

IV A

[Opening of Bids]

The defendants are ordered and directed:

(a) to open in public at the office of any bid depository operated by the defendants, or any of them, a copy of each bid received at such bid depository, and to announce or publish such bid to those present at such bid opening at least six hours prior to the time specified by the awarding authority for the opening of general contractors' bids, and two hours prior to the time when the sealed bids received at such bid depository are available to the general contractors to whom they are addressed;

(b) to notify all general contractors and subcontractors known to be interested in bidding on any project through which bids have been or are invited to be received at a bid depository operated by the defendants, or any of them, of the time when such bids will be opened at such bid depository; that such bids shall be opened under the conditions specified in paragraph IV A(a) hereof and that they are at liberty to attend; and

(c) to notify all general contractors and subcontractors who in the past have taken bids from, or placed bids with, a bid depository operated by the defendants, or any of them, that bid openings are to be conducted under the conditions specified in paragraph IV A(a) hereof, and that they are invited to attend such openings.

IV B

[Legality of Depository]

The Court is of the view that the method of operating a bid depository as outlined in Exhibit A attached to this judgment, does not violate the antitrust laws of the United States, provided that the defendants in so operating shall, in all other respects, be subject to all of the provisions of this judgment.

V

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted (1) access during the office hours of such defendant to those parts of the books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant which relate to any of the subject matters contained in this judgment; and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section V shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized employee of the Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States of America is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

VI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling either party to this judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction of or the carrying out of this judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, and for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

VII

[Costs]

Judgment is entered against the defendants, and each of them, for all costs to be taxed in this proceeding.

Kern County Electrical Contractors Association, Inc.

Dated .....

1. PURPOSE: These rules are established for the purpose of providing fair and open competition between the members of the plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal and electrical industries and to eliminate the unfair practice of bid peddling.

2. APPLICABILITY: The rules herein established shall govern any proposal, tender or offer to contract the installation of plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal or electrical, upon all projects within the Counties of Kern, Inyo and Mono for the plumbing, heating and ventilating, and sheet metal industries, and the County of Kern for the electrical industry, wherein the awarding authority has designated and advertised a specific time for the opening of contract bids for the performance of work upon said project by a user of the bid depository or member of the associations.

3. DEPOSITORY: To achieve the objects of this agreement, the Bakersfield Associated Plumbing Contractors, Inc., Kern, Inyo and Mono Counties Sheet Metal Contractors Association, Inc., and the Kern County Electrical Contractors Association, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the associations, will establish and maintain a bid depository at 1421-24th Street, Bakersfield, California. The bid depository box shall be equipped with two locks; the first two persons depositing bids on any specified project that will be present for the opening of such bids will lock the depository box and retain the keys thereto; upon the specified time for the opening of such bids, the persons retaining the keys will unlock the box; all bids will then be publicly announced and tabulated by the respective associations' secretaries.

4. DEPOSIT OF BIDS: The bid depository maintained by the associations shall be available to all plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal and electrical contractors desiring to bid upon the designated project.

5. TIME OF DEPOSIT: All bids must be received by the depository normally not later than six hours prior to the time designated for the opening of bids by the awarding authority; provided, however, that if the time designated by the awarding authority for opening bids is such that deposit six hours prior thereto would not be during normal working hours, then the Board of Directors of each association shall coordinate and designate the time at which bids must be deposited; in the event of time designation by the association Board of Directors all bidders known to be interested in bidding the project shall be notified sufficiently in advance of the time of deposit by the office of the depository. Bids received later than the time hereinabove provided shall be returned to the bidding contractor unopened.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

6. COMBINATION BIDS: Contractors submitting bids to the depository may submit separate bids for plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal and electrical work, and may submit a bid representing a combination of all or any two or more thereof. All bids are to be submitted to the depository upon the condition that either the plumbing, or heating and ventilating, or sheet metal or electrical portion of any bid may be used by the general contractor with any other plumbing, or heating and ventilating, or sheet metal or electrical bid or portion of a bid submitted through the depository. Any bid purporting or attempting to restrict such use in combination with other depository bids shall be invalid.

7. BID OPENING: The procedure for submission and opening of bids shall be as follows:

A. To assure uniformity of bids, all bids must be submitted upon the bid forms supplied by the depository; forms will be mailed by the depository to all contractors indicating an intent to bid the project; bids not submitted upon the depository bid form will not be recognized.

B. Bidders shall submit to the depository a separate, sealed bid addressed to each general contractor with whom the bidding contractor intends to bid, and shall submit an additional bid addressed to the depository.

C. Bids addressed to the depository will be opened at 1421-24th Street, Bakersfield, California, six hours prior to the bid opening of the awarding authority, unless a different time has been designated in Paragraph 5; bids will be opened at such time solely for the purpose of determining whether the bids conform to depository requirements; bids so opened shall not be deemed an offer to any general contractor at the time of such opening.

D. Bids addressed to the general contractors shall be available to the general contractors two hours following the opening of bids addressed to the depository; provided, however, that no bid shall be delivered to a general contractor until said contractor has agreed in writing to accept the bid if it is the low bid accepted through the depository.

E. Bids shall be opened, in public, and all general contractors and subcontractors, known to be interested in bidding on the project, shall be notified that they are at liberty to attend and witness the opening of bids; likewise all general contractors who have in the past, taken bids from the depository shall be notified in writing by the secretaries of the respective associations, contract awarded to each bidder for plumb- that bid depository openings are open to the public and that they are invited to attend all bid openings.

8. DEPOSITORY FEE: The successful bidder or bidders shall pay to the depository fund, as a depository fee, a sum equal to one-half of one per cent (½ of 1%) of the contract awarded to each bidder for plumbing, one-half of one per cent (½ of 1%) of the contract for heating and ventilating, one-half of one per cent (½ of 1%) of the contract for sheet metal and one-half of one per cent (½ of 1%) of the contract for electrical; provided, however, that the depository fee pertaining to any one of the aforementioned subcontracts shall not exceed $250.00. The depository fee shall be paid at the time the contractor receives the first payment on the contract. A contractor failing to pay the required depository fee within thirty (30) days of the date specified herein shall be denied the privileges of the depository until the fee has been paid.

9. COLLECTION OF DELINQUENT FEES: In the event of litigation to collect a delinquent depository fee, or to collect a delinquent withdrawal fee, the delinquent contractor shall pay all attorneys' fees, costs of suit, and other expenses reasonably incurred in connection with such litigation.

10. REOPENING OF PROJECTS: When bids for a specified project are once opened, there shall be no further bidding on said project for a period of one hundred twenty (120) days by contractors who did not bid such project in the first instance unless the plans and specifications have been revised in an amount exceeding twenty-five per cent (25%) of the work and/or materials prescribed in the original plans and specifications.

11. CONDITIONS OF BID: All plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal and electrical bids shall be submitted upon the condition that the bid may be used only in combination with a plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal or electrical bid which has been submitted through the depository. Said condition of bid will be printed upon the bid form provided by the depository.

12. WITHDRAWAL OF BID: The procedure for withdrawal of a bid shall be as follows:

A. Any bid in the depository may be withdrawn, without penalty, at any time prior to the opening of bids as outlined in Paragraph 7 hereof.

B. After the opening of bids as outlined in Paragraph 7 hereof, a bid may be withdrawn prior to the time that bids are made available to the general contractors; provided, however, that a bid may be withdrawn at that time only upon payment of one per cent (1%) of the total amount of said bid, said penalty not to exceed $1,000.00. Payment of the penalty herein provided must be made within ten (10) days of the withdrawal. Notification that a bid is to be withdrawn must be made by the contractor or his agent.

C. In the event that a bid is not withdrawn prior to delivery to the general contractor, the bid shall become an irrevocable offer to the general contractor and shall not be withdrawn thereafter; the consideration for the option herein provided shall be the execution by the general contractor of the agreement to accept low bid at the time of receipt of the subcontract bid.

13. NAMING OF SUBCONTRACTORS: In the event that any plumbing, heating and ventilating, sheet metal, or electrical contractor intends to subcontract a part of his bid to another contractor signatory to this agreement, such contractor shall designate the name of said subcontractor to be used by him on the bid form; subcontractors so named shall not be changed thereafter in the absence of showing good cause therefor.

14. RECORDATION OF BIDS: All bids submitted through the depository shall be accurately recorded and placed on file in the office of the depository; said bids will be available for inspection by any participant or user of the depository or any other person or persons approved by the Board of Directors. All such bids shall be maintained in the files of the depository for a period of one year after date of opening.

In consideration of the observance of the foregoing rules by other participants in the depository, and in consideration of the maintenance of the bid depository, I hereby agree to abide by the rules and conditions hereinabove prescribed, and to pay any fee or fees provided in said rules and conditions.

Case No. 1424 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Suit for Injunctive Relief —Motions and Defenses—Pretrial Determination of Jurisdiction Over Defendant.—A Government motion for a preliminary hearing to determine whether or not the court had jurisdiction over the person of a defendant was granted. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, it is within the discretion of the court to hear such an affirmative defense before or at the trial. If there is no jurisdiction over that defendant, there is no reason why he should be put to the unnecessary expense of time and effort involved in a long antitrust case. The question should be determined promptly and before trial.

Memorandum

[Jurisdiction]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: In this case the plaintiff United States of America has moved for an order pursuant to Rule 12(d) of the Rules of Civil Procedure directing that a preliminary hearing be held to hear and determine before trial the issue of jurisdiction over the person of defendant N. V. Philips' Gloeilampenfabrieken.

[Affirmative Defense]

This is an anti-trust action brought by the Government against three defendants. In the answer of the defendant N. V. Philips' Gloeilampenfabrieken this defendant alleges as an affirmative defense that the Court is without jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

Rule 12(d) of the Rules of Civil Procedure provides that when such defense is interposed the defense "shall be heard and determined before trial on application of any party, unless the court orders that the hearing and determination thereof be deferred until the trial." Whether the court should direct that the defense be heard before trial, or be reserved for the trial, is a matter of discretion of the judge. United States v. Central States Theatre Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,902], 159 F. Supp. 552 (D. C. D. Neb. 1959 [1957]).

[Unnecessary Expense]

There is every good reason why this preliminary question of jurisdiction over the defendant in a major anti-trust case should be determined before trial. If the Government does not have jurisdiction over the person of this defendant there is no reason why it should be put to the unnecessary expense of time and effort involved in a long anti-trust case. If it does have jurisdiction the issue of that jurisdiction should be determined promptly and before the trial.

[Preliminary Hearing Ordered]

The motion of the plaintiff is therefore granted and it is ordered that the defense of lack of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant shall be heard and determined before trial of the action. This will require that an application be made to the Chief Judge for the assignment of a judge to hear this particular aspect of the case. See Rule 2 of the Calendar Rules of the Southern District of New York. It is so ordered.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Dismissal of Action as to Certain Plaintiffs—Failure to Appear for Examination.—A treble damage action would be dismissed with prejudice as to five of the plaintiffs who were residents of Belgium, unless they appeared for examination by the defendants within the time specified by the court. The defendants had sought the dismissal of the action as to all of the plaintiffs for the failure of the five to appear for examination. They had contended that the five plaintiffs were indispensable parties to the action, and that without them the action must fall as to all of the plaintiffs. Also, the defendants as well as intervening plaintiffs contended that their cases would be prejudiced if the action was dismissed as to the five plaintiffs. The court ruled that the issue of indispensable parties was not properly raised by the defendants' instant motions, but could be raised when the five plaintiffs are no longer parties to the action. In giving the five plaintiffs a final opportunity to appear for examination, the court took into consideration the interests of the intervening plaintiffs and the other original plaintiffs.

Memorandum

[Motion to Dismiss]

BRYAN, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant National Cash Register Company moves, pursuant to Rules 37(d) and 41, F. R. C. P., to dismiss this action with prejudice against all of the plaintiffs for failure of five of them to appear for examination in New York pursuant to orders of this court, or, in the alternative, for such a dismissal unless these five plaintiffs duly submit to such examination. The other defendants join in the motion.

Plaintiffs cross-move, pursuant to Rule 12, F. R. C. P., to dismiss the complaints of the intervener and additional intervener plaintiffs upon the ground that they are not proper parties to the suit.

[Nature of Action]

This action, commenced in 1952, has had a long and spotty career. It is brought to recover treble damages in the sum of $75,000,000 for alleged conspiracy by defendants to destroy plaintiffs' cash register business in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 3 and 5. The individual plaintiffs, all members of the same family, are Belgians, five of whom, Jeanne, Irma, Irene, Paul and Alfred, are residents of Belgium, and the other two of whom reside in the United States. They are collectively referred to in the complaint as "The Demeulenaeres", and are alleged to have been the owners and inventors of cash registers and other calculating and registering machines which were patented, some of which were licensed to the other plaintiff, Universal Cash Register Corporation. Alleged acts of the defendants in preventing the production and marketing of these machines are the gravamen of the complaint.

[Prior Proceedings]

At times this litigation has been dormant. At others it has been fairly active. Recently, after a period of lethargy, it appears to have been revived with some vigor upon the substitution of a new attorney for the plaintiffs about a year ago.

However, it has been on the assignment calendar twice and was finally stricken therefrom in April of 1956. Since then it has been on the dismissal calendar four times, and on each occasion plaintiffs' time to file a note of issue has been repeatedly extended on one excuse or another.

The defendants' motions to dismiss arise out of the failure of the five Belgian Demeulenaeres to appear for examination in New York pursuant to notices to take their depositions here, served by the defendants in 1952, immediately after the commencement of the action. These examinations were adjourned by numerous stipulations, the last two of which were approved by order of the court, and on April 8, 1953 an order entered by Judge Knox provided that these examinations should be taken after a preliminary deposition of the plaintiff Marcel Demeulenaere had been completed "without loss of priority of [defendants'] right to conduct and complete the said noticed examinations before plaintiffs examine defendants".

The preliminary examination of Marcel was concluded on August 19, 1953, and thereafter Robert Demeulenaere, the other individual plaintiff resident here, was produced for examination. His examination has not yet been completed and there is further examination to be taken of Marcel.

When plaintiffs' new attorney was substituted (on the eve of a dismissal for lack of prosecution) counsel for the defendants rescheduled the depositions of the five Belgian plaintiffs. None of them appeared for examination on the rescheduled dates. Thereafter these plaintiffs twice moved to require the examinations on which they had already defaulted to be taken by written interrogatories instead of by oral examination in New York. Such relief was twice denied them.

On the last occasion, March 11, 1958, a plea for such relief was again made upon the grounds of financial hardship. Judge Cashin found such hardship had not been shown and refused to permit written interrogatories instead of oral examination in New York. He ordered that the depositions proceed on the basis of the original notices for oral examination in New York. The plaintiffs apparently still refuse to appear and their attorney has indicated that they have no intention of so doing.

There is no doubt that these five plaintiffs are in default for failing to appear for examination pursuant to orders of this court as their attorney concedes, and that their testimony is material and necessary to the defense of the action.

[Contentions]

The attorney for the five plaintiffs apparently has no very serious objection to the dismissal of the complaint as against them because of their default since he now asserts that they are not proper parties to the suit anyway. He strenuously objects, however, to dismissal as to all the plaintiffs.

The position of the defendants, on the other hand, is that the action should be dismissed against all of the plaintiffs because of the default of the five Belgian plaintiffs. Defendants assert that the five Belgian plaintiffs are indispensable parties to the action and that therefore without them the action must fall as to all of the plaintiffs. They therefore argue that since they are entitled to dismiss as to the Belgian plaintiffs the court must, at the same time, dismiss as to the other three for lack of indispensable parties.

They urge, moreover, that to dismiss as to the five Belgian plaintiffs only would merely operate to deprive them of the opportunity of examining these plaintiffs and prevent them from obtaining material essential to their defense, and that the only remedy which would afford them relief to which they are entitled would be a dismissal as to all.

The intervener and additional intervener plaintiffs take the position that the dismissal of the actions as to the five Belgian plaintiffs would be highly prejudicial to them since as a practical matter a substantial portion of the proof in the action is in their hands and that for the same reason dismissal as to all would destroy the possibility of their establishing their causes of action.

[Indispensable Parties]

I do not think that the position of the defendants that the complaint should be dismissed with respect to all eight plaintiffs because five of them have failed to appear for examination is well taken. The issue as to whether or not the five Belgian plaintiffs are indispensable parties so as to require the dismissal of the complaint as to the other three plaintiffs if the Belgian plaintiffs are eliminated, is not properly raised by defendants' motions under Rules 37(d) and 41(b). These motions relate only to dismissal for failure to appear for examination and to comply with orders of the court. There is no showing here that there has been any such lack of compliance by plaintiffs Robert and Marcel Demeulenaere and Universal Cash Register Corporation. If the complaint be dismissed as to the five Belgian plaintiffs and they are no longer parties to the action then the defendants may properly move for dismissal of the complaint for lack of indispensable parties pursuant to Rule 12(c). Such a motion has not been made and indeed is not appropriate now.

[Last Opportunity]

In view of the importance of the question as to whether the action on behalf of the three remaining plaintiffs can be maintained if the Belgian plaintiffs are eliminated and the possible prejudice to the intervener plaintiffs which would arise, I am not prepared to dismiss as to the five Belgian plaintiffs without giving them a last opportunity to appear for examination in New York in compliance with the court's orders. The defendants themselves, by their prayer for alternative relief, plainly envision such a disposition. It may well be that the parties to this suit who are interested in keeping these plaintiffs in to preserve their position in the action may be able to persuade them to appear in New York for examination. That is up to them.

[Ruling]

I will therefore dispose of the defendants' motions by directing, as to each of the five plaintiffs, Jeanne, Irma, Irene, Paul and Alfred Demeulenaere, that unless they appear for examination by the defendants in New York within forty-five days of the date of the order to be entered on this motion the complaint will be dismissed with prejudice as to each of them who does not do so. As an alternative to examination in New York they may agree to submit to examination in Belgium under the Federal Rules within such forty-five day period after providing defendants' counsel with sufficient funds to cover defendants' expenses, including counsel fees, for such examination.

[Intervener Plaintiffs]

Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss the complaints of the intervener and additional intervener plaintiffs requires little discussion. The intervener plaintiffs were permitted to intervene in the action by order of the court pursuant to stipulation of the parties. The additioial intervener plaintiffs were permitted to intervene by Judge Palmieri in his memorandum decision of January 2, 1957, after a hearing on the merits. The plaintiffs have shown no grounds whatsoever for overriding these previous dispositions of the questions they now seek to raise. Their motion to dismiss is in all respects denied.

Settle order on notice.

Georgia Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Employee's Contract Not to Compete With Former Employer—Legality—Reasonable Limitations as to Time and Territory.—A restrictive covenant under which an employee agreed that he would not engage in the business of tunnel digging in a five-state area for a period of two years after the termination of his employment was held valid and enforceable. Although contracts in general restraint of trade are void, a contract concerning a useful and lawful business in partial restraint of trade, reasonably limited as to time and place and not otherwise unreasonable, is not void. The two-year restraint as to time was unquestionably reasonable. Since tunneling and boring work is limited and is scattered over a wide area, the five-state area was required for profitable operations and was conceded to be a reasonably sized territory.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.12.

For the plaintiffs: Charles A. Moye, Jr., James C. Hill, and Harold N. Hill, Jr., all of Gambrell, Harlan, Russell, Moye & Richardson, Atlanta, Ga.

For the defendants: Edward E. Carter and William R. Harp, both of Atlanta, Ga.

[Syllabus]

By the Court: 1. Although contracts in general restraint of trade are void (Code, Ann., § 20-504), a contract concerning a useful and lawful business in partial restraint of trade and reasonably limited as to time and place, and not otherwise unreasonable, is not void. The restraint as to time of two years in this case is reasonable.

2. The restriction to any territory assigned to him within two years next preceding termination of his employment, which in this case included the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina, under the facts and circumstances of his employment, was reasonable and valid.

3. In the absence of evidence to support the allegation that the corporation was aiding or abetting the defendant Robinson in the violation of the restrictive covenant in his contract of employment, or that Robinson acting as agent or officer of the corporation was doing so, the trial judge did not err in denying an injunction against the defendant, Robinson Tunneling Company, Inc.

[Contract Not to Compete]

The petition is for injunction to restrain defendants, Dan W. Robinson and Robinson Tunneling Company, Inc., from breaching a restrictive covenant contained in an employment contract entered into by defendant Dan W. Robinson with plaintiffs. The following is the restrictive covenant in question: "As part of the consideration of this agreement, Employee agrees that for two (2) years following the termination of his employment with Employer, regardless of how such termination is brought about, he will not engage in the business of boring, digging or drilling horizontal holes or tunnels in the earth, either as a principal, partner, employee, stockholder, or otherwise, within any territory assigned to him at any time during his employment by Employer, within two years next preceding such termination, and Employee understands that this is a material part of his agreement with Employer, and that Employer would not have hired or employed him unless this condition is a part of this agreement."

[Territory]

The territory assigned to defendant in the contract was the "Dixie Division" of plaintiff corporation, consisting of the states of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, South Carolina and North Carolina, which territory could be changed at any time by plaintiffs.

[Prior Proceedings]

After a hearing at which both parties presented evidence, the trial judge denied an interlocutory injunction prayed for. In their bill of exceptions, the plaintiffs assign as error the ruling of the trial judge.

[Time Limitation]

MOBLEY, Justice [In full text]: 1. While contracts in general restraint of trade are void (Code, Ann., § 20-504), a contract concerning a useful and lawful business in partial restraint of trade and reasonably limited as to time and place, and not otherwise unreasonable is not void. Black v. Horowitz, 203 Ga. 294 (1) (— S. E. 2d —), and cases cited. See also National Linen Service Corporation v. Clower, 179 Ga. 136, 145 (— S. E. —), and Shirk v. Loftis Bros. & Co., 148 Ga. 500 (— S. E. —). The restraint as to time in this case, two years, is unquestionably reasonable. Aladdin, Inc. v. Krasnoff [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,167], 214 Ga. 519 (— S. E. 2d —), and cases cited.

[Territorial Limitation]

2. In determining the question as to reasonableness of territorial limitation, ". . . the court will consider the nature and extent of the trade or business, the situation of the parties, and all the other circumstances" . . . "all such contracts are void, if considered only in the abstract, and without reference to the situation or objects of the parties, or other circumstances under or with reference to which they were made . . . But if, considered with reference to the situation, business, and objects of the parties, and in the light of all the surrounding circumstances with reference to which the contract was made, the restraint contracted for appears to have been for a just and honest purpose, for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed, reasonable as between them, and not specially injurious to the public, the restraint will be held valid." Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 195 (— S. E. —). See also Hood v. Legg, 160 Ga. 620, 625 (— S. E. —), and Orkin Exterminating Co. of South Ga. v. Dewberry, 204 Ga. 794, 803 (— S. E. 2d —).

It is clear that the territorial limitation fixed by the contract is that specific territory assigned to him within two years before termination of his employment; and at the time of his employment, the territory was defined in the contract as the "Dixie Division," consisting of the states of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina. The contract provided that this territory could be changed at any time. There was no change in the defendant's territory during his employment.

[Employee's Duties]

At the time of his employment, defendant was living in Texas and had had no prior experience in the tunneling or boring business. The "Dixie Division" of the company was then in existence with headquarters in Birmingham, Alabama. He moved there and later to Decatur, Georgia, where for three years he was the alter ego of the company in the five states. To the trade, he was the company in his territory, personally conducting its business with all customers and potential customers throughout his territory. At the company's expense, he traveled his territory, becoming personally acquainted with contractors, public utilities, and other customers and prospective customers, submitting bids on jobs and performing other duties for the company. The evidence demands the conclusion that the business acquired by the company in this territory depended largely upon the establishment by the defendant of close personal contacts and of the confidence and friendship of those requiring tunneling or boring work to be done. He did all this at the expense of the company.

The defendant admits that he is now competing with the company in this territory, that he has secured work when he was not the low bidder because of personal friendship established while in the employ of and in pursuance of his work with the company. He admits that he entered the contract understanding fully its terms.

[Territory Reasonable]

It is conceded that the five states composing the "Dixie Division" of the company are a reasonably sized territory, because the tunneling and boring work is limited and is scattered over a wide area, and this much territory is required for profitable operations.

The company has done jobs in all five states since the establishment of the Dixie Division. The defendant worked all five states, submitted bids on jobs in each and secured jobs in all except the State of Florida.

The facts and surrounding circumstances in this case clearly establish that the limitation as to territory was reasonably necessary to protect the interests of the plaintiffs; that the defendant voluntarily and with knowledge of its provisions entered the contract and allowed the plaintiffs to expend large sums of money building up the defendant in this territory as their representative; and that for him now to engage in a competing business will work great harm to plaintiffs. The interests of the public will not be unduly prejudiced, as the evidence discloses keen competition in this field in this territory. The limitation as to territory is valid.

[Contract Valid]

The facts material to the decision of this case are not in dispute. The contract is valid, and the evidence is uncontradicted that the defendant is violating it. The trial judge, accordingly, erred in denying the interlocutory injunction as prayed against the defendant Robinson. Ballard v. Waites, 194 Ga. 427, 429 (2) (— S. E. 2d —); Habif v. Maslia [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,246], case number 20264.

[Corporate Defendant]

3. The petition alleged that, "The defendant Robinson Tunneling Co., Inc., by and through its President and employee, had knowledge of the above-quoted provision of the employment contract, and even so, wilfully caused, aided and abetted Dan W. Robinson to breach his contract with petitioners," and also alleged that the defendants were violating the terms of the restrictive covenant in the contract. However, the only evidence as to the defendant corporation is that elicited from the defendant Robinson, to wit: "I am the stockholder and president of Robinson Tunneling Company. I organized that as a corporation. I was granted charter the thirtieth day of June. I obtained my charter the last day of June, and before that I worked for Boring and Tunneling Company of America until, I believe, the fifteenth of June." This is not sufficient to establish a case for the plaintiffs against the defendant corporation. There is no evidence that the corporation has done anything; that it has aided and abetted the defendant Robinson in violating the contract as charged; or that Robinson, acting as president or agent of the corporation, has violated the contract. See Kessler v. Puritan Chemical Co., 213 Ga. 845 (2) (— S. E. 2d —). The trial judge did not err in denying the grant of an interlocutory injunction as to the defendant corporation, Robinson Tunneling Company, Inc.

[Patent Infringement Action]

LUMBARD, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The outcome of the plaintiffs' appeal from the dismissal of their suit for patent infringement turns on whether there is invention in a bandage which is made by taking an open-ended tubular fabric, placing part of it over the member to be bandaged, twisting the fabric intermediate its ends and then retroverting it over the member to make a double thickness. We agree with Judge Dawson that this was not invention, 158 F. Supp. 540 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,974], and accordingly affirm the judgment.

[Facts]

The facts are undisputed. In 1941 Louis Hochman, president of the plaintiff, Surgitube Products Corporation, applied for a patent on a bandage to be constructed of any tubular fabric. The patent, 2,326,997, was issued to him on August 17, 1943. On April 1, 1943, Surgitube, as exclusive licensee of Hochman, and defendant Scholl Mfg. Co., Inc., made a contract granting to Scholl the exclusive distributorship of the unpatented tubular gauzes then used for making the bandage. Scholl purchased the gauze from Surgitube for resale. In August 1944, one year after the bandage patent was issued, Scholl exercised a right to cancel the contract and made other arrangements to obtain tubular gauze so as to continue its business of selling gauze for closed-end bandaging.

In November 1948 Surgitube and Hochman sent two written notices to Scholl claiming infringement of the Hochman patent. The following month Surgitube sued Scholl in the Supreme Court of New York alleging unfair competition by reason of Scholl's selling tubular gauze similar to "gauze manufactured under the Surgitube patent by plaintiff." It is conceded that this New York state action has slumbered ever since. In December 1948 Scholl first purchased the unpatented seamless tubular gauze which since 1949 it has sold under the name of "Tubegauz" and which was specially developed for use with its applicators in closed-end bandaging. It was apparently not until 1949 that both parties began selling unpatented instruments specially developed to aid in applying the bandage. In 1953 Scholl first introduced an additional unpatented instrument adapted to the application of large bandages which it called a "cage." Scholl attributes its subsequent business success to the introduction of the "cage."

This action against Scholl for contributory infringement, in which no claim of unfair competition has been made, was not actually commenced until February 1955.

Claim 1 of the patent is conceded to be typical and reads:

> A bandage produced from an open-ended tubular fabric structure twisted intermediate its ends and one portion being returned over the remaining portion to provide a tubular covering open at one end and closed at the other end.

[Lack of Invention]

It is conceded that any material can be used which is tubular and which can be twisted and then retroverted or folded backwards. Since the specially made gauze and specialized instruments for use in applying and twisting the gauze to create the bandage are unpatented, the sole element for which invention is claimed is the technique of the bandage itself.

Such a double covering or bandage is not novel. Housewives have long used old stockings in this way. A covering so constructed was claimed in prior patents, as for example in connection with a scouring ball in 1927 when a patent was issued to one Kingman. Claim 2 of the Kingman patent refers to:

> an exterior tubular cover body of knitted metallic fabric twisted together intermediate its ends with one section folded back upon itself to provide a plurality of thicknesses and at the same time close one end of the cover body thus constructed.

The district court properly rejected Hochman's claim that the mere application of this technique to bandaging involves sufficient invention to justify the issuance of a patent. 35 U. S. C. § 103 (1952); Welsh Mfg. Co. v. Sunshine Products Co., 236 F. 2d 225 (2 Cir. 1956); Young's Rubber Corp. v. Allied Lastex Corp., 188 F. 2d 945, 948 (2 Cir. 1951).

Plaintiff's challenge to this conclusion is based primarily on the testimony of doctors and nurses that they required special instruction in the use of the bandage in order to comprehend and exploit its usefulness. But this need for instruction, like the parties' tardy commercial success, appears to have resulted from the introduction of the unpatented applicators previously referred to, and not from anything inherent in the claimed invention.

[Patent Misuse—Mootness]

Since the lack of invention in the patent renders moot any question of laches in the commencement of the action, we need not pass on that defense. Similarly, we need not examine the alternative ground of Judge Dawson's decision below, namely, that Surgitube had improperly marked the box containing the gauze with a patent notice "with intent to deceive the public and to restrain trade in an unpatented tubular gauze" and thus had misused the patent so as to foreclose its right to bring suit.

[Judgment Affirmed]

Judgment affirmed.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Notice of Fair Trade Contracts—Receipt of Notice After Purchase of Merchandise—Failure to Allege Facts Specifically.—A fair trader was granted a temporary injunction against a concessionaire which contended that notice of the fair trade pricing came to its attention "after some delay" and after it had purchased substantial quantities of the fair trade merchandise. The concessionaire's failure to more specifically state the date when it received notice and purchased its stock of merchandise, and to relate those facts to the dates of the offending sales, rendered the defense insufficient. Moreover, the concessionaire failed to state that it made no purchases after receiving notice of the fair trade pricing.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3268.34.

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—"Concessionaire" Defense.—In a fair trade enforcement action, the court rejected the defendants' "concessionaire" defense where the offending sales were made at the defendants' place of business. The facts and circumstances of the offers for sale, at the place of sale, were sufficiently established to warrant temporary injunctive relief.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3252.34.

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Resale Price Fixing—Fair Trade Contracts Between Competitors—Manufacturer's Retail Selling as Part of Advertising Program.—A manufacturer's fair trade enforcement action was not defeated by its operation, as a part of its advertising program and as an incident to its consulting service, a salon in which the manufacturer sold its products at retail. Under these circumstances, the court rejected the contention that the manufacturer could not enforce its fair trade program because of its retail sales in competition with the retail trade.

See Resale Price Fixing—Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3100.

[Fair Trade Action]

HOFSTADTER, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for temporary injunction in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act. The offending sales were made at the place of business operated by the defendants. In a subsequent action brought against another defendant, a similar application is before the court. On both motions, defendants urge the "concessionaire" defense, which alone require any consideration. The facts and circumstances of the offers for sale at the place of sale are sufficiently established to warrant temporary injunctive relief. The concessionaire's position is based on evasion. It is stated on behalf of that defendant that the notice given to the other defendants and dated November 7, 1958, came to its attention "after some delay" and after it had purchased substantial quantities of merchandise for sale for the next several months. The offending sales were made as early as November 19, 1958, and as late as January 15, 1959. The failure to more specifically state the date when the defendant received notice and made, as claimed, the purchase of its present stock, and to relate these facts to the dates of the offending sales, renders the defense insufficient, at this time at least, to defeat the present application. Indeed, it is not stated that there were no purchases made since the time when the defendant received notice. Defendants urge that plaintiff may not enforce its fair trade program because it sells at retail in competition with the retail trade. This contention is based on the operation by plaintiff of a salon on Fifth Avenue in New York City, which it maintains as part of its advertising program and where alone it sells at retail at the fair traded prices as an incident to its consulting service, also offers as part of the advertising campaign. In these circumstances, the application is not thereby defeated. The motions are granted and the bond is fixed in each instance in the sum of $500. Settle orders accordingly.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Commission Misrepresentation Order by Court of Appeals—Violation of Court Order—Contempt of Court—Failure to Apply for Modification of Order.—A tobacco company was held to be in contempt of court when it advertised that the nicotine and tar content of its cigarette is less than the nicotine and tar content of other leading brands of cigarettes in violation of a decree of a United States Court of Appeals enforcing, on the company's petition for review, a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting the company from misrepresenting the nicotine or tar content of its brand of cigarettes. In enforcing the order, the court had ruled that if, in the future, advertising of the sort prohibited should become truthful because of a change in the character of the cigarettes, application could be made to the Commission for a revision of the order. In the instant action, the court found that the advertisements found to be in violation of its decree were released by the company without having applied for or obtained from the court or the Commission a revision of the order. The Commission advanced no contention that the advertisements were in fact false. The company was fined $40,000, and its petition for modification, which was filed after the advertisements were made, was dismissed, with leave to the company to petition the Commission for modification of its order.

Findings, Judgment and Order

[Prior Proceedings]

[In full text]: On December 29, 1950, in a proceeding in this Court entitled "P. Lorillard Company, a corporation, v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 6140," which was a petition by the said company for review of a cease and desist order issued against it by the Federal Trade Commission, the

* The order read as follows: "It is ordered by this Court that the caption of the order filed and entered in the above entitled matter on January 7, 1959, be corrected by deleting therefrom the word 'criminal.' "

Court refused to set aside the order of the Commission but enforced it and enjoined the company to abide by and perform the directions of the Commission therein contained, requiring the company, among other things, to cease and desist to "represent by any means, directly or indirectly: . . .

"(3) That Old Gold cigarettes or the smoke therefrom contains less nicotine, or less tars and resins, or is less irritating to the throat than the cigarettes or the smoke therefrom of any of the six other leading brands of cigarettes;" [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,747] 186 F. 2d 52, 54 (1950).

In the opinion of this Court it was said:

". . . If, in the future, advertising of the sort prohibited should become truthful because of a change in the character of the cigarettes to which it has reference, a very remote contingency, application can be made to the Commission for a revision of the order. It will be time enough to give consideration to that matter when the occasion for it arises. . . ."

[Violation of Decree]

On June 5, 1958, the Federal Trade Commission brought to the Court's attention an alleged violation of its decree by the company, by the dissemination through the medium of television broadcasts and newspapers of advertisements in various cities and towns throughout the United States, in inter-state commerce, the representation that the nicotine and tar content of its tobacco products, Old Gold cigarettes, are less than the nicotine and tar content of other leading brands of cigarettes.

The broadcasts and advertisements complained of were released by P. Lorillard Company without having applied for or obtained from this Court or the Commission a revision of the order.

[Contempt—Fine]

Thereupon, after notice to the said P. Lorillard Company, hearings were held by this Court at Richmond, Virginia, on October 23, 1958, and at Charlotte, North Carolina, on January 7, 1959. Upon consideration of the answers of the company, and the representations and affidavits filed on its behalf and the statements contained therein, and counsel having been fully heard, the Court finds that the P. Lorillard Company has violated the order of December 29, 1950, and is in contempt of this Court.

Upon consideration of the facts above set forth and the explanations offered by the P. Lorillard Company through its counsel and the affidavits submitted on its behalf, and the Federal Trade Commission having advanced no contention in this proceeding that the advertising complained of is in fact false, we hereby order and impose a fine of $40,000 to be paid to the Treasurer of the United States within sixty (60) days.

[Modification]

And It Is Further Ordered that the Petition for Modification filed by P. Lorillard Company in this Court on August 22, 1958, be and the same is hereby dismissed with leave to P. Lorillard Company to petition the Federal Trade Commission for modification of its order.

Memorandum

[Conspiracy Charged]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56 of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

The action is a treble damage action under the anti-trust laws, in which plaintiff alleges a conspiracy among the defendants to prevent plaintiff from engaging in, and to drive it from, the business of licensing performance rights in musical compositions. The complaint is lengthy and there are numerous defendants. By its motion plaintiff seeks to secure summary judgment for a substantial part of the relief demanded in the complaint, including an injunction against licenses issued by BMI and a divestiture of its stock.

[Issues of Fact]

On a motion for summary judgment the first issue to be determined by the Court is whether there is "no genuine issue as to any material fact." The papers submitted on this motion show that there are numerous issues of fact which are controverted in this case. The motion is of the type referred to by Judge Learned Hand in Bozant v. Bank of New York, 156 F. 2d 787 (2d Cir. 1946), where Judge Hand pointed out in that case

> ". . . that the case is another mistaken effort to save time by an attempt to dispose of a complicated state of facts on motion for summary judgment." (P. 790)

The Court cannot reach the conclusion that there are no genuine issues as to material facts. Under those circumstances the Court cannot conclude that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Furthermore, this is an important case involving a substantial industry and the application of the summary judgment rule to such an action is questionable. United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corporation [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,914], 157 F. Supp. 877 (S. D. N. Y. 1958).

It would be much better if this case is tried on the facts. See Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,630], 352 U. S. 992 (1957), which reversed a summary judgment entered in a triple damage anti-trust action; Syracuse Broadcasting Corp. v. Newhouse [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,468], 236 F. 2d 522 (2d Cir. 1956).

The motion for summary judgment is denied.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Misuse of Patents and Violation of Decree—Jurisdiction of Court to Determine Issues—Power to Enjoin Relitigation of Issues by Private Parties.—Where the United States District Court for the District of Delaware had ruled that a patentee could not enforce its patents against a defendant because of their misuse and the patentee's actions in violation of a Government antitrust consent decree entered in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, the Delaware court subsequently enjoined the patentee from relitigating in the Ohio court matters dealt with adversely to the patentee and in favor of the defendant in the Delaware court. The Delaware court ruled that the patentee should not be permitted to proceed against the defendant in the Ohio court to litigate anew the issues upon which the Delaware court had already ruled. The contention that the Ohio court had primary jurisdiction over the matters since the Government consent decree was entered in that court was rejected. Under the circumstances in the instant action, jurisdiction to construe the consent decree did not rest exclusively with the Ohio court. The jurisdiction which the Ohio court acquired by the initiation of the Government action which eventuated in the consent decree gave it no jurisdiction over the defendant in the instant proceeding. Also, the Ohio court did not acquire jurisdiction over the defendant when it applied to that court for a determination of a reasonable royalty for the patents involved in the Government suit. The fact that no order had been entered upon the Delaware court's opinion was of no moment. The significance of the opinion was to show the advance point to which the patent misuse and decree violation issues had been litigated in the Delaware court.

Memorandum

[Injunctive Order]

Edwin D. Steel, Jr., District Judge [In full text]: The Court has today signed an injunctive order to which reference is made for a statement of the facts which gave rise to its issuance. The entry of the order was based upon the legal conclusions that the Court possessed the power to grant injunctive relief and that in the exercise of its discretion it should do so. The considerations upon which these legal conclusions were based are stated herein.

[Duplicate Litigation]

In Crosley Corporation v. Hazeltine Corporation, 122 F. 2d 925 (3d Cir. 1941) it was held that the District Court in which a declaratory judgment action had been brought to adjudicate the invalidity and non-infringement of a defendant's patents had the power to, and in the exercise of its discretion should, enjoin the defendant from prosecuting an action begun 17 days later in another District Court for infringment of certain of the patents involved in the first suit, the parties being the same in both actions. This decision was based upon the view that it is important to litigants to have a single determination of their controversy, that a party who first brings an issue into a court of competent jurisdiction should be free from the vexation of subsequent litigation over the same subject matter, and that the issuance of an injunction would prevent the economic waste involved in duplicating litigation which would necessarily adversely affect the prompt and efficient administration of justice. Upon parallel facts the same conclusion was arrived at in Crosley Corporation v. Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., 130 F. 2d 474 (3d Cir. 1942); cert. den. 317 U. S. 681 (1942) even though the second action was brought only one day after the first suit had been begun.

Here, unlike in the Crosley cases, it is not the plaintiff (Securit) who seeks to protect at an early stage of the case the jurisdiction which it has invoked. It is the defendant (Shatterproof) who seeks to have the plaintiff (Securit) prohibited from running away from the court of its choice long after a judicial pronouncement has been rendered upon a controlling aspect of the litigation. The principles of the Crosley cases therefore have a fortiori application to the situation at bar, and substantiate the power of the Court to grant injunctive relief and the wisdom of its doing so as a matter of discretion.

[Parties and Issues]

Securit argues that the Crosley cases are without application unless the same parties and issues are involved in both actions; and it points out that neither the United States nor the Hamilton Glass Corporation are parties to the Delaware litigation although both are parties in the Ohio proceeding. Furthermore, Securit asserts that the issues involved in Ohio are broader than those dealt with by Judge Leahy. These distinctions are not important. The injunction which has been issued is limited to the prevention of the relitigation between Securit and Shatterproof of the matters dealt with adversely to Securit by Judge Leahy. It does not foreclose Securit from litigating against the United States, Hamilton Glass Company, or anyone else any issues which it pleases. Nor does it foreclose Securit from litigating in Ohio against Shatterproof any matters other than those dealt with adversely to Securit by Judge Leahy in his opinion. Triangle Conduit & Cable Co. v. National Electric Products Corporation, 138 F. 2d 46 (3d Cir. 1943) relied upon by Securit does not require the Court to deny injunctive relief of the limited scope which is indicated. Indeed, that decision, when read in the light of Triangle Conduit & Cable Co. v. National Electric Products Corporation, 125 F. 2d 1008 (3d Cir. 1942); cert. den. 316 U. S. 676 (1942) supports the propriety of the injunctive order which has been entered.

In Kerotest Mfg. Co. v. C-O-Two Fire Equipment Co., 189 F. 2d 31 (3d Cir. 1951); aff'd 342 U. S. 180 (1952) it was held error for this Court to enjoin litigation in the Illinois District Court between a patentee and an alleged infringing manufacturer who were parties in Delaware and a customer of the alleged infringer which was not a party to the Delaware action. A mere reading of the opinion will disclose its several points of distinction from the case at bar. But if the test of determining precedence of judicial action stated in Kerotest is applied—viz., expedition in affording relief, it is clear that Securit should not be permitted to proceed against Shatterproof in Ohio to relitigate anew the issues upon which Judge Leahy has already spoken.

[Decree—Primary Jurisdiction]

Securit resists the issuance of an injunction upon the asserted ground that Ohio has primary jurisdiction with which this Court should not interfere. But the jurisdiction which Ohio acquired by the initiation of the anti-trust action which eventuated in the Toledo decree in 1948 gave it no jurisdiction over Shatterproof. Even under Securit's theory the earliest time when the Ohio Court acquired jurisdiction over Shatterproof was in July, 1955 when Shatterproof filed its application with the Ohio Court seeking a determination of a reasonable royalty for the patents in suit. While it may be assumed that some of the issues which the Ohio Court might have decided in connection with that application * were identical with those with which Judge Leahy dealt, still the submission of these issues to the Ohio Court was subsequent to the institution of the suit in Delaware and, in any event, the Ohio Court dismissed the application. In the order of dismissal jurisdiction was neither reserved over Shatterproof nor over the subject matter of Shatterproof's application. Securit's contention that the Ohio Court had primary jurisdiction of such kind as to foreclose the granting of injunctive relief by this Court is therefore untenable.

[Absence of Order]

Securit attempts to make capital of the fact that no order has been entered upon Judge Leahy's opinion. This is of no moment. The opinion is not relied upon as a basis of res judicata or a collateral estoppel. Its significance is to show the advance point to which the patent misuse and Toledo decree violation issues have been litigated in Delaware. This is a consideration of obvious importance in determining whether an injunction should issue.

[U. S. Gypsum Case]

The power of the Court to grant injunctive relief is not negatived by United States Gypsum Co. v. National Gypsum Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,627], 352 U. S. 457 (1957). There it was held that the Court rendering an anti-trust decree had jurisdiction in the anti-trust action to construe the decree as between the parties to it, to enjoin litigation in other courts between such parties which involved a construction of the decree, and following a construction which would bar the other actions, to direct the plaintiffs therein to dismiss the same with prejudice. The Court did not hold directly or by implication that a court other than that rendering an anti-trust decree is without power to construe the decree, or in the exercise of its discretion should restrain from doing so, when it has litigation before it between a party to the decree and a non-party thereto in connection with which the interpretation of the decree is pertinent and no interpretive relief antedating the suit has been sought from the anti-trust court. That is the situation which confronts this Court. Under comparable circumstances it was held in American Securit Company v. Hamilton Glass Company [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,018], 254 F. 2d 889, 895 (7th Cir. 1958) that jurisdiction to construe the Toledo decree did not rest exclusively with the Ohio Court but that the Indiana District Court was empowered to do so. This conclusion, it held, was not inconsistent with the Gypsum decision.

The Ohio Court, having rendered the Toledo decree, is of course peculiarly competent to construe it and to determine whether the activities of Securit have been in derogation of its terms. But this is only one factor to be considered in determining whether in the exercise of its discretion the Court should direct the issuance of an injunction. This factor is substantially outweighed in the case at bar by the duplication of judicial effort and the inconvenience and expense to the parties which will necessarily be occasioned if Securit, which has chosen this Court as the forum for litigating its rights, should be permitted to proceed against Shatterproof in Ohio for a determination thereof long after Judge Leahy's opinion has been rendered upon an issue critical to the patent infringement aspect of the litigation in this Court.

Undoubtedly, a timely application for the construction of an anti-trust decree made to the Court rendering the decree will, in some instances, as illustrated by the circumstances of the Gypsum case, avoid multiple litigation and conflict of decisions. This consideration is scarcely relevant to the pending motion in view of the current status of the Delaware litigation and the long delay by Securit in soliciting the aid of the Ohio Court after previously invoking this Court's jurisdiction.

[Scope of Relief]

The restraint which has been granted is narrower than that sought by Shatterproof's motion. The relief prayed for in the motion, counsel for Shatterproof concede, was unduly broad. The scope of the relief which has been granted corresponds to that which counsel for Shatterproof requested at the argument. Particularization in phraseology of the order is accounted for by the requirement of Rule 65(d).

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defense—Unfair Competition Claims—Misuse of Patents and Violation of Government Consent Decree—Relation Between Patent and Unfair Competition Claims.—Unfair competition claims asserted by a patentee in its patent infringement action were dismissed where it had been held that the patentee was not entitled to enforce its patents because of its misuse of the patents and actions in violation of a Government antitrust consent decree. The unfair competition claims were related to the patent claims. Since the patentee could not enforce its patents against the defendant, the defendant's alleged acts of unfair competition with respect to those patents did not constitute actionable wrongs. In other words, unless the patentee was entitled to enforce its patents against the defendant, the defendant's alleged acts of unfair competition constituted no invasion of any right possessed by the patentee. The substantive infirmity of the unfair competition claims could not be cured by characterizing such claims as a cause of action sounding in fraud, duplicity, or bad faith. Also, the patentee's motion to amend its complaint was denied on the ground that the proposed amendments would be similarly defective.

Opinion

Edwin D. Steel, Jr., District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The action is before the Court upon the motion of defendant to dismiss Counts V and VI of the complaint and upon the motion of plaintiff to amend the complaint. In addition to disposing of these motions the opinion contains an explanation why the Court, acting under Rule 54(b), has today entered a final judgment dismissing Counts I through IV, and acting similarly will today enter a final judgment dismissing Counts V and VI, notwithstanding the existing fringe issues as yet undecided.

Motion To Dismiss Counts V and VI

[Jurisdiction]

The jurisdiction of the Court to adjudicate Counts V and VI will first be considered. Underwood v. Maloney, 256 F. 2d 334, 340 (3rd Cir. 1958).

The complaint contains six counts. Counts I to IV each allege plaintiff's ownership of a different patent and the defendant's infringement thereof. Counts V and VI each purport to state a cause of action for unfair competition related to and growing out of the patent infringement.[1] Jurisdiction over the patent infringement claims, sometimes herein denominated "federal claims", is conferred by 28 U. S. C. § 1338(a). Since both parties are Delaware corporations, the unfair competition claims must find jurisdictional support, if at all, under 28 U. S. C. § 1338(b). It provides:

"The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action asserting a claim of unfair competition when joined with a substantial and related claim under the copyright, patent or trademark laws."

Under this section jurisdiction of an unfair competition claim in a non-diversity case exists only when it is joined with a claim under the patent laws which is both "substantial" and "related".

Judged by these standards, it is clear that the claims asserted by plaintiff under the patent laws are substantial. The complaint alleges patent infringement in conventional terms. No evidence has been adduced to indicate that the claims are frivolous or colorful or contrary to controlling decided cases. The fact that in the case at bar it has been held that the patents are not enforceable because of their misuse and plaintiff's actions in violation of an antitrust decree to which it was a party (American Securit Company v. Shatterproof Glass Corp. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,802], 154 F. Supp. 890 (1957); reh. den. Sept. 18, 1957 and Jan. 17, 1958)[3] does not deprive the patent claims of their jurisdictional substantiality. Schreyer v. Casco Products Corp., 190 F. 2d 921, 923-924 (2d Cir. 1952); cert. den. 342 U. S. 913 (1952). This is conceded by defendant.[4]

Accordingly, I hold that the so-called unfair competition claims alleged in Counts V and VI are not separate and distinct causes of action from the patent claims alleged in Counts I to IV. On the contrary, when Counts V and VI are taken in conjunction with each of the respective patent claims, they, together with each such patent claim, constitute a single cause of action. The claims for unfair competition are therefore sufficiently related to the patent infringement claims to come within the jurisdiction of this Court under § 1338(b).

[Right to Enforce Patents]

Jurisdiction to adjudicate Counts V and VI having been determined, the question remains whether substantively those counts allege valid causes of action. As stated, both counts charge that defendant has infringed plaintiff's patents. It was defendant's deception in simulating a desire to take a license which, according to the complaint, lulled plaintiff into deferring infringement action to its injury. It has now been determined, however, in this very litigation that plaintiff is not entitled to enforce its patents against defendant, and a final judgment has been entered under Rule 54(b) dismissing Counts I to IV. This fact must be recognized even though ordinarily the sufficiency of a complaint should be determined solely upon the basis of the pleaded facts. Since it has been adjudged that plaintiff cannot enforce its patents against defendant, it is clear that defendant's alleged deception constituted no actionable wrong. Unless plaintiff was legally entitled to enforce its patents against the defendant, defendant's alleged guile in inducing plaintiff to forebear action constituted no invasion of any right possessed by plaintiff. Furthermore, if Counts V and VI were held to state good causes of action without regard to the patent infringement charges as plaintiff contended at the argument,[7] then Counts V and VI would be dismissible because of lack of jurisdiction. On the stated hypothesis Counts V and VI would be so clearly unrelated to Counts I to IV that § 1338(b) would be of no jurisdictional help.

Plaintiff argues that Counts V and VI, if not alleging a good cause of action of unfair competition, nevertheless states a valid cause of action sounding in fraud, duplicity or bad faith. But the substantive infirmity of Counts V and VI is not cured by the manner in which they are characterized.

A final judgment will be entered under Rule 54(b) dismissing Counts V and VI of the complaint.

Motion To Amend The Complaint

The proposed amendment to the complaint withdraws charges of infringement of two patents and substitutes charges of infringement of two other patents. Otherwise the proposed amendment is substantially the same as the original complaint.

During the argument plaintiff conceded that if the patent misuse and the anti-trust decree violations are valid defenses to the infringement charges made in the original complaint, they would likewise be valid defenses to the infringement charges made in the proposed amendment.[8]

The unfair competition charge in the proposed amendment is substantially identical with that alleged in the original complaint. Since for the reasons previously stated in this opinion no valid unfair competition cause of action has been alleged in the original complaint, the proposed amendment, if permitted, would be similarly defective. Under these circumstances the Court is warranted, in the exercise of its discretion, in denying leave to file the amendment, Stephens v. Reed, 121 F. 2d 696, 699 (3d Cir. 1941). The motion to amend is therefore denied.

An order will be entered accordingly.

The Entry of Final Judgments Pursuant to Rule 54(b)

Acting under Rule 54(b) I have today entered a final judgment granting the motion of defendant for summary judgment addressed to Counts I to IV and dismissing those Counts. Acting under similar authority I propose to enter a final judgment dismissing Counts V and VI of the complaint for failure to state a cause of action. A word of explanation for my actions appears desirable.

The judgments referred to will completely dispose of the litigation except with respect to the following matters:

(a) A motion to dismiss the counterclaim is pending. The counterclaim seeks a declaratory judgment of invalidity, noninfringement and misuse of the patents sued on. The misuse issue was settled by the judgment dismissing Counts I to IV. This judgment likewise probably makes moot the invalidity and non-infringement issues, but I am reluctant to dispose of the counterclaim without giving counsel an opportunity to be heard. In any event, if the issues of invalidity and non-infringement have not been rendered moot, they are so completely unrelated to the matters adjudged by the judgments as to make it undesirable to delay further giving the judgments finality status.

(b) Plaintiff has one or more motions for costs and attorneys fees incurred in connection with pre-trial discovery. The parties agree that it is desirable that these be decided at the end of the litigation.[9] These motions will involve limited considerations unrelated to the merits of the final judgments.

The final judgment which has been entered dismissing Counts I to IV reserves jurisdiction to the Court to pass on these two matters. The final judgment dismissing Counts V and VI will also do so.

Summary judgment dismissing Counts I to IV was sustained by opinion over a year ago. Plaintiff asserts its desire to obtain an early review of that decision. This is made possible by the final judgments. They will, in my opinion, expedite a final disposition of the litigation and, in the event of a reversal of either or both of the judgments, the issues for trial will have been constructively defined. The entry of the judgments, it is believed, is not inconsistent with the caveat in Panichella v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 252 F. 2d 452 (3d Cir. 1958).

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,606. Filed February 12, 1959.

On Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Character of Product—Failure to Make Material Disclosures—Disclosure of Motor Oil's Previous Use—Defenses—Quality of Product—Absence of Harm to Public.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting an oil company from selling previously used motor oil without disclosing the fact of its previous use was affirmed. There was sufficient evidence upon which the Commission could find that dealers and the purchasing public were misled by a mistaken belief that the company's products were derived from crude or virgin oil rather than re-refined from crankcase drainings. Many jobbers and members of the purchasing public preferred to buy unused oil. The fact that the reclaimed oil was in no respect inferior to that refined from virgin oil was beside the point; substitution would be unfair even if equivalence were shown. The public is entitled to buy what it chooses. The court rejected the company's defense that there was no showing of a specific or substantial public interest because its products were identical in quality with all other finished motor oils and that no harm, therefore, could come to the public. The statute prohibiting unfair and deceptive practices would be emasculated if manufacturers could surreptitiously substitute their judgment for that of the purchaser as to the article to be purchased. Also, the offense was not lessened by being one of omission; one who deceives by telling less than the whole truth cannot excuse the deception by relying upon the truthfulness of the partial truth by which it has been accomplished.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.552, 5105.61; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.13, 8611.65.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Procedure Against Unfair Practices—Expert Testimony—Relevancy of Evidence.—The Federal Trade Commission did not err in striking from the record evidence of expert witnesses who testified that it was not the practice of the oil industry to disclose to the trade or to the purchasing public the sources of motor oils. That industry practice was immaterial to the Commission's charge that an oil company violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by failing to disclose that motor oil had been previously used. The record amply demonstrated that dealers and the purchasing public preferred not to dispense or buy motor oils re-refined from crankcase drainings; it was irrelevant that some dealers and some customers were not misled by the company's practices.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.27, 8611.71.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Procedure Against Unfair Practices—Variance Between Complaint and Proof.—A Federal Trade Commission complaint which charged an oil company with selling "reclaimed" oil was at variance with the proof since the evidence offered by the Commission's witnesses demonstrated that the company produced its lubricating oil by "re-refining." However, even if the proceedings before the Commission were conducted as strictly as a suit at law, that variance would be deemed too insubstantial to be material.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.93.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Procedure Against Unfair Practices—Discovery—Production of Documents—Undue Influence by Commission—Timeliness of Motion for Production.—The Federal Trade Commission did not commit error in denying an oil company's motion for the production of correspondence between the Commission's staff and witnesses. It was contended that witnesses who testified as to whether or not the public had a preference for motor oil refined from virgin oil, as distinguished from that re-refined from crankcase drainings, were unduly influenced by such correspondence. "Good cause" was not shown for production of the correspondence; the company's reference to the testimony of witnesses who received questionnaires from the Commission established no more than that the witnesses were made aware of reclaimed oil as distinguished from virgin oil. Moreover, the formal motion for production was not made until more than four months after the termination of the hearings. In view of the delay, it was not error for the Commission to deny the motion on the ground that the information sought was confidential and could only be released pursuant to Section 1.134(b) of the Commission's Rules.

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6588.

Before Biggs, Chief Judge, and Maris and McLaughlin, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Labeling Motor Oil]

By Biggs, Chief Judge [In full text]: The Federal Trade Commission charged that the petitioners, in violation of Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 66 Stat. 632, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a)(1952), engaged in the business of "reclaiming used motor oil and in selling and distributing such lubricating oil, or a blend of such oil and new oil, in [interstate] commerce to jobbers and dealers for resale to the purchasing public"; that the petitioners' oil consisted "in whole or in substantial part of used motor oil, obtained from drainings of motor crankcases and from other sources, which has been reclaimed by subjecting the used oil to a treatment designed to remove the impurities therefrom"; that the petitioners' "[O]il . . . [was] sold in containers of the same general size, kind and appearance as those used for new oil, and has the appearance of new and unused oil"; that "The containers have no markings of any kind indicating that . . . [the] product is reclaimed used oil"; and that the petitioners' practices mislead the dealers who in turn mislead the purchasing public into believing erroneously that the petitioners' oil is "new oil".

[Proof Offered]

The proof offered before the Hearing Examiner demonstrates that the petitioners do not engage in the business of "reclaiming" used motor oil except as a necessary preliminary to their re-refining process, and that the petitioners' finished product results from a series of processes which may be defined as re-refining crankcase drainings of previously used lubricating oils to produce a finished motor lubricating oil though sometimes the oil re-refined is blended with "crude" oil not used prior to its use by the petitioners and sometimes called virgin oil.[1] It appears also that the petitioners' lubricating oil is sold by them in interstate commerce under various brand names in containers which do not disclose that the oil is re-refined from used oil and that many purchasers have been deceived or misled into buying the petitioners' oil thinking it to be oil refined from crude oil, virgin oil, not oil previously used in motor crankcases; that during each of the years 1954 and 1955 the petitioners sold approximately two million gallons of oil, from which they realized about $500,000; and that of this total between 75% and 90% represented oil produced by the petitioners by their re-refining processes as distinguished from crude oil purchased by them for blending purposes; and that the sales of the petitioners in interstate commerce were substantial and in competition with individuals, firms and corporations engaged in the production and sale of lubricating oil.

The record also shows that the Society of Automotive Engineers' viscosity rating of the petitioners' oils was up to the standards required by the trade, and no charge or implication was or is made that their oil was lacking in lubricating qualities, in efficiency, or in adaptability for the purpose for which it is sold, or was in any respect inferior to lubricating oil refined from crude oil, virgin oil. The proof shows also that many jobbers and members of the purchasing public prefer to buy oil refined from crude oil, virgin oil, as opposed to oil such as the petitioners' which has been re-refined from oil previously used, and that the public buys motor oil largely on the basis of price, believing that higher priced oils will give better service in a motor vehicle.

[FTC Order]

The Commission entered an order requiring the petitioners forthwith to cease and desist "from representing . . . that their lubricating oil is refined or processed from other than previously used oil" and from advertising, offering for sale or selling oil which has been "reclaimed or in any manner processed from previously used oil, without disclosing such prior use to the purchaser or potential purchaser in advertising, in sales promotion material, and by a clear and conspicuous statement to that effect on the container." The petition to review followed.

[Alleged Errors]

The petitioners attack the opinion and the final order of the Commission as arbitrary and capricious and contend that each lacks substantial supporting evidence. They assert also that the Commission erred as a matter of law in holding that the failure to disclose the source or origin of the petitioners' finished product was a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The petitioners contend as well that the Commission committed prejudicial error in excluding from the record the testimony of certain witnesses and exhibits offered by them and in refusing to permit them to examine certain Commission records and correspondence on which, it is alleged, the Commission wrongfully relied.

[Purchasers Misled]

It will be observed that there was a variance between the charge set out in the complaint and the proof in that the Commission charged the petitioners with selling "reclaimed" oil, as distinguished from "re-refined" oil. Even were the proceedings before the Commission conducted as strictly as a suit at law this variance would be deemed too insubstantial to be material. The evidence offered by the Commission's witnesses demonstrated that the petitioners produce their lubricating oil by re-refining and that the factor of reclamation was a minor one. The evidence shows also that without notification to the trade and to the customer that the petitioners' oil was not manufactured from crude oil, virgin oil, many persons in the trade and individual customers thought that the petitioners' product was manufactured from crude oil. The record proves further that such persons preferred to distribute and sell and to buy lubricating oil manufactured from crude oil or virgin oil, and not oil re-refined from crankcase oil, and thought that they were doing so. Accordingly, there was sufficient evidence upon which the Commission could find that dealers and the purchasing public were misled by a mistaken belief that petitioners' products were derived from crude oil.

[1] Both witnesses and counsel, the Hearing Examiner and the Commission, on occasion have used the term "new oil" to refer to lubricating motor oil refined from virgin oil, crude oil and have employed the term "used oil" to refer to lubricating motor oil re-refined from used crankcase oil.

[Quality of Substituted Product Immaterial]

It is true, as the petitioners point out and as the Commission found, that the petitioners' oil is as satisfactory for lubricating purposes as lubricating oil produced from crude oil or virgin oil, but this is beside the point. As was said by the Supreme Court through Mr. Justice Cardozo in Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,041], 291 U. S. 67, 77-78 (1934): "We have yet to make it plain that the substitution would been unfair though equivalence were shown. . . . The consumer is prejudiced if upon giving an order for one thing, he is supplied with something else. . . . In such matters, the public is entitled to get what it chooses, though the choice may be dictated by caprice or by fashion or perhaps by ignorance. . . . Dealers and manufacturers are prejudiced when orders that would have come to them if the lumber had been rightfully named, are diverted to others whose methods are less scrupulous." Moreover, it does not serve to palliate the petitioners' offense by the fact that their sin was one of omission in failing to label the containers or make known to the purchasers that their oil was not produced from crude oil. Chief Judge Parker put this succinctly in P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,747], 186 F. 2d 52, 58 (4 Cir. 1950), when he said: "To tell less than the whole truth is a well known method of deception; and he who deceives by resorting to such method cannot excuse the deception by relying upon the truthfulness per se of the partial truth by which it has been accomplished."

[Public Interest]

The petitioners assert as a defense that there was no showing here of a specific and substantial public interest because their products are identical with all other finished motor oils as to composition, quality and utility and hence no harm can come to the purchasers or to the public generally. But as has been indicated the public is entitled to buy what it chooses. A manufacturer may not surreptitiously substitute his judgment for that of the purchaser as to the article to be purchased, even if the manufacturer's judgment is equal or even superior to that of the dealer or the customer. If this were not so, the substituted judgment of the manufacturer would always prevail over the will of the dealer or customer and the provision of the statute prohibiting unfair and deceptive practices would be emasculated. The public has the right to purchase motor oil manufactured from crude oil, if it desires to do so, and that desire may not be balked by a failure to disclose pertinent facts.

[Industry Practice]

For the reasons stated the Commission did not err in striking from the record evidence of two expert witnesses of the petitioners who testified that it was not the industry practice to disclose to the trade or to the purchasing public the sources of motor oils and that these are bought and sold on the basis of grades established by the Society of Automotive Engineers and service classifications made by the American Petroleum Institute. These facts are immaterial to the issue raised by the Commission or on the instant appeal. The fact that some dealers and some customers were not misled by the petitioners' practices, even if such persons were in large numbers, is irrelevant. As we have said the record amply demonstrates a desire on the part of the dealers and purchasing public not to dispense or buy motor oils re-refined from crankcase drainings. Cf. Federal Trade Com'n v. Winsted Co., 258 U. S. 483 (1922) and Independent Directory Corp. v. Federal Trade Com'n, [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,817], 188 F. 2d 468, 471 (2 Cir. 1951).

[Undue Influence]

The petitioners also contend that the Commission committed error by withholding from them and from the record in the instant case correspondence between the Commission's staff and witnesses who appeared on behalf of the Commission. They assert that by such correspondence witnesses testifying on behalf of the Commission on the factual issue as to whether or not the public had a preference for motor oils refined from crude oil, virgin oil, as distinguished from motor oils re-refined from crankcase drainings, might have been and were unduly influenced. The petitioners assert also that, being deprived of this correspondence they were limited in their cross-examination.

The hearings before the Hearing Examiner began on September 20 and were concluded on December 11, 1956, being held on six different days. The fourth day of hearing was November 20. It then appeared, apparently for the first time, that witnesses appearing on behalf of the Commission had received the letters referred to. On that day petitioners' counsel moved orally that the Hearing Examiner require the Commissioner to produce all the correspondence.[2] The Hearing Examiner stated that though he felt that the correspondence should be produced that he could not require the Commission to produce it. It was not until April 26, 1957 that the petitioners filed a motion with the Hearing Examiner that the correspondence should be produced and incorporated in the record. The matter was referred to the Commission. The Commission, by an administrative order dated May 10, 1957, denied the motion, stating that the information sought was confidential and the correspondence could be released only pursuant to the provisions of the Commission's Rules, Section 1.134(b).[3]

["Good Cause"]

We cannot say that "good cause" was shown as to why the correspondence should have been produced. Petitioners' assertion that there was actual influence exerted by the Commission through the correspondence is not supported by the record. Petitioners' reference to testimony of witnesses who had received questionnaires establishes no more than that the witnesses were made aware through the questionnaires of re-refined, reprocessed, or reclaimed oil as distinguished from crude, virgin, oil.

[Delay]

Moreover, the formal motion for production and incorporation in the record was not made to the Hearing Examiner until more than four months after the termination of the hearings and nearly one month after the petitioners had submitted proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law to the Trial Examiner. The validity of the Commission's Rules of Practice is not questioned by petitioners and in view of the delay it was not error for the Commission, relying upon Section 1.134(b), to deny the motion. Cf. NLRB v. General Armature & Mfg. Co., 192 F. 2d 316 (3 Cir. 1951); NLRB v. Adhesive Products Corp., 258 F. 2d 403, 406 (2 Cir. 1958).

[Order Affirmed]

We can perceive no error in the Commission's decision. Consequently, it will be affirmed. An appropriate judgment will be entered in this court requiring the petitioners to comply with the order of the Commission.

[2] One letter, dated October 11, 1956, from the Federal Trade Commission to Topline Store was produced by trial counsel for the Commission from his file and was introduced as respondents' (here petitioners') exhibit No. 1. It is in the form of a questionnaire and dealt in substance with the issue of whether or not the motor oil was invoiced to Topline as re-refined oil and whether it was represented by Topline to its customers as re-refined oil and similar questions, with Topline's answers thereto.

[3] 16 C. F. R. § 1.134 (Supp. 1958) states: "§ 1.134 Release of confidential information. (a) Upon good cause shown, the Commission may by order direct that certain records, files, papers, or information be disclosed to a particular applicant.

year statute of limitations. Application of that statute limited banana distributors' claims against an importer and its subsidiary to those claims which arose after March 4, 1954. However, the Federal statute contains a provision that it is not to be construed to revive rights which had expired under state law prior to its effective date, January 7, 1956. It was accordingly asserted that all claims accruing more than one year before that date were barred under a Connecticut one-year statute of limitations, which was applicable to suits for forfeitures on penal statutes, and that, therefore, January 7, 1955, was the cut-off date. However, Connecticut courts would not hold the instant action for treble damages to be one for a forfeiture; therefore, the applicable state statute was a three-year statute, which was applicable to torts. That did not, however, entitle the distributors to go back beyond March 4, 1954. It only meant that rights of action between that date and January 7, 1955, had not been lost on January 7, 1956. The proviso of the Federal statute that no dead rights should be revived did not mean that all rights then existing were to remain preserved forever.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations—Tolling of Limitation Period During Pendency of Government Action.—Connecticut banana distributors seeking treble damages against a banana importer for alleged Sherman Act violations were held to have a recovery period of more than seven years. The running of the Federal four-year statute of limitations was tolled, under Section 5(b) of the Clayton Act, for more than three years by the pendency of a Government action against the importer. The instant action was brought within one year after the termination of the Government action and was "based in whole or in part" on the matters complained of in the Government action. The Government's allegations of a combination and conspiracy were paralleled by specific allegations in the distributors' complaint; the acts, conspiracies, and purposes were the same in both actions. However, the distributors were limited to a four-year recovery period as to alleged violations of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act. No references were made in the Government's action to any violations of that statute; therefore, the limitation period, as to those charges, was not tolled by the Government action. Also, the distributors were limited to a four-year recovery period as to all of their charges against a subsidiary of the importer. The four-year statute of limitations was not tolled by the pendency of the Government action as to the subsidiary since it was not a party to the prior Government action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.275.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Monopoly "Thrust" Upon Defendant—Justification.—Banana distributors which charged a banana importer and its subsidiary with monopolization of the banana trade were denied a motion to strike the defense that the importer's position was "thrust" upon it by reason of its superior skill, natural advantages, and efficiency. The distributors contended that the defense was good only if the monopoly position were achieved solely as a result of those facts alleged in the defense. The importer and its subsidiary were entitled to explain and justify their position, and the issue of justification was raised by the pleadings as they stood.

Memorandum of Decision

[Statute of Limitations]

ANDERSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a suit by several Connecticut banana distributors against the United Fruit Company (hereinafter called United Fruit) and its subsidiary, the Fruit Dispatch Company (hereinafter called Fruit Dispatch). Count 1 of the complaint alleges violations of the Sherman Act, and Counts 2 and 3 allege violations of the Robinson-Patman Act. The answer sets up, inter alia, the defenses of the Federal four year statute of limitations and the Connecticut one year statute of limitations with the Connecticut three year statute of limitations in the alternative. The defendants also especially plead in their answer a justification of their economic position by attributing it to their superior skill and to the operation of natural forces. The plaintiffs have moved to strike the defenses of the statutes of limitations as to the defendant United Fruit on the ground that they were tolled during the pendency of a criminal anti-trust action brought against United Fruit in a United States District Court in Louisiana, and to strike the justification for so-called "thrust upon" defense because that defense does not expressly allege that the defendants acquired their economic position solely by virtue of matters beyond their control. The plaintiffs have also moved for the production of certain documents.

[Applicable Statute]

Prior to the passage of Section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. Section 15b, there was no federal statute of limitations governing civil anti-trust suits, and state statutes were applied by the federal courts. Section 4B became effective on January 7, 1956, and this suit, brought March 4, 1958, is governed by its provisions. LaRouche v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 166 F. Supp. 633 (D. Mass. 1958); Goodfriend v. Kansas City Star Co. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,023], 158 F. Supp. 531 (W. D. Mo. 1958); Cardinal Films Inc. v. Republic Pictures Corp. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,584], 148 F. Supp. 156 (S. D. N. Y. 1957). Therefore, the application of the federal statute limits claims against these defendants to those claims arising after March 4, 1954. However, Section 4B contains a provision that it is not to be construed to revive rights which had expired under state law prior to the effective date of its passage, and the defendants accordingly assert that all claims accruing before January 7, 1955, (i. e. one year before the effective date of the federal statute), should be barred. It is, of course true that if prior to January 7, 1956, the effective date of the federal statute, the Connecticut one year limitation applicable to suits for forfeitures on a penal statute applied to an anti-trust suit, January 7, 1955 would be the cut-off date. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, assert that it is not this one year statute but the Connecticut three year tort statute which applied. These sections of the 1949 Revision of the Connecticut General Statutes provide:

"Section 8325. Suit for forfeiture on penal statute limited to one year. No suit for any forfeiture upon any penal statute shall be brought but within one year next after the commission of the offense."

"Section 8316. Action founded upon a tort. No action founded upon a tort shall be brought but within three years from the date of the act or omission complained of."

[Construction of State Statutes]

The applicability of state limitations on penalty suits to anti-trust litigation has caused a great deal of difficulty to courts in the past. See Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Anti-Trust Laws, March 31, 1955, p. 381, n. 71; Note, 60 Yale L. J. 553 (1951). Prior to the enactment of Section 4B, limitation was, as above stated, a matter of local law. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390 (1906); Gordon v. Loew's, Inc. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,820], 247 F. 2d 451 (3rd Cir. 1957); Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,925], 191 F. 2d 912 (7th Cir. 1951). And for the purpose of determining what causes of action had expired under state limitations statutes on the effective date of the federal limitation law, i.e., January 7, 1956, the federal courts must direct their inquiry to state statutes, and to local interpretations of those statutes. Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647 (1893); Dibble v. Bellingham Bay Land Co., 163 U. S. 63 (1896); Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co., supra; Greene v. Lam Amusement Co. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,309], 145 F. Supp. 346 (N. D. Ga. 1956).

Connecticut courts have construed Section 8325 on numerous occasions. The leading case, Plumb v. Griffin, 74 Conn. 132 (1901), was an action to recover treble damages from a defendant who had cut timber on the plaintiff's land. Holding that the action was not governed by the one year statute, the court said at page 134-135:

"The present suit is not barred by [the one-year limitation] unless Sec. 1345, on which it is brought, is a penal statute: one that declares a forfeiture, and one that deals with an offense. Moreover it must be a forfeiture and an offense in the sense in which these terms are used in a penal statute.

"A brief examination shows that Sec. 1345 is not a penal statute, within the meaning of Sec. [8325]. Penal statutes, strictly and properly, are those imposing punishment for an offense against the State; and the expression 'penal statutes', does not ordinarily include statutes which > give a private action against a wrong-doer. Bouvier's Law. Dict. The words 'penal' and 'penalty' in their strict and primary sense, denote a punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the State for a crime or offense against its laws. . . . [A] statute which gives no more than a right of action to the party injured to recover increased damages, is not a penalty statute." (Italics added.)

An action to recover double damages for forgery was early held to be not governed by the one year statute. Ross v. Bruce, 1 Day 100 (Conn. 1803). And most recently a suit for double damages for violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act was held not limited by Section 8325. Hitchcock v. Union & New Haven Trust Co., 134 Conn. 246 (1947). In the Hitchcock case, it is true, the court said it did not have to consider whether a "penalty" was involved, because it was bound by a United States Supreme Court determination that such recoveries were "liquidated damages". 134 Conn. at 257. But in the Chattanooga Foundry case, the United States Supreme Court held that an anti-trust treble damage claim was not a "penalty" within the meaning of a federal statute placing a five-year limitation on suits for penalties and forfeitures. 203 U. S. 390, 398 (1906).

[Cases Distinguished]

The cases cited by the defendants are not persuasive. The only decisions holding an action to be for a forfeiture within the meaning of Sec. 8325 are Borough of Wallingford v. Hall, 64 Conn. 426, (1894), Atwood v. Lockwood, 76 Conn. 555 (1904), and Wells v. Cooper, 57 Conn. 52 (1888). The Wallingford case involved a forfeiture of $25 to the Borough itself; Atwood concerned a forfeiture of $20 to anyone who sued a delinquent administrator; and Wells dealt with a forfeiture of $5 to anyone who sued a non-filing mortgagee. In none of these cases was there any relation between any actual damages and the amount recovered. Indeed, in two of them, anyone who sued might have recovered. This has long been considered a key distinction between penal and remedial statutes. See Sullivan v. Associated Billposters and Distributors, 6 F. 2d 1000, 1009; 42 A. L. R. 503, 515-516 (2nd Cir. 1925).

[Action Not One for Forfeiture]

It must, therefore, be concluded that Connecticut courts would not hold this action to be one for a forfeiture within the meaning of Sec. 8325. Discussions of the meaning of the word "penalty" in decisions not involving the statute of limitations have been cited by both the plaintiffs and the defendants, but they are only peripherally relevant. Compare Swanson v. Boschen, 143 Conn. 159 (1956); Cristilly v. Warner, 87 Conn. 461, 468-469 (1913) with Hallenbeck v. Getz, 63 Conn. 385 (1893) and Porpora v. New Haven, 122 Conn. 80, 96 (1936).

[Federal Law]

It is argued that the characterization of an action of this kind as penal or compensatory should be determined by reference to federal, rather than state law. A few courts adopting this theory have concluded that an anti-trust action is penal under federal authorities: see e.g., Banana Distributors, Inc. v. United Fruit Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,881], 158 F. Supp. 160 (S. D. N. Y. 1957). But the majority of courts interpreting federal law have for the purpose of avoiding a short statute of limitations, found the cause of action to be compensatory. See Fulton v. Loew's Inc. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,571], 114 F. Supp. 676 (D. Kan. 1953); Electric Theater Co. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,560], 113 F. Supp. 937 (W. D. Mo. 1953); Wolf Sales Co. v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,321], 105 F. Supp. 506 (D. Colo. 1952); Christensen v. Paramount Pictures [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,751], 95 F. Supp. 446 (D. Utah 1950). It is the conclusion of this court, however, as above stated, that for this purpose reference must be made to state law and that the applicable Connecticut statute is the three year, rather than the one year limitation.

Still, this finding does not entitle the plaintiffs to go back beyond March 4, 1954, it means only that the rights of action between that date and January 7, 1955 had not been lost on January 7, 1956, the effective date of the federal statute. Section 4B's proviso that no dead rights should be revived does not mean that all rights then existing were to remain preserved forever.

And since the federal statute rather than the Connecticut statute applies, the possible absence of the defendants from Connecticut for purposes of tolling the Connecticut statutes under Conn. Gen. Stat. Section 8330 (Rev. Ed. 1949) is not an issue in this case except as hereinafter noted [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,299]. Cf. Banana Distributors Inc. v. United Fruit Co., supra.

[Tolling of Statute]

The plaintiffs have acknowledged that all claims against the defendant Fruit Dispatch are barred as of March 4, 1954 because Fruit Dispatch was not a party to the Government suit referred to below. Schreiber v. Loew's, Inc. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,595], 147 F. Supp. 319, 323 (W. D. Mich. 1957); Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,722], 213 F. 2d 284 (7th Cir. 1954). However, as to the defendant United Fruit, the plaintiffs assert that all claims are open until July 3, 1950. They arrive at this date by virtue of Section 5B of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. Section 16b, which provides:

> "(b) Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the anti-trust laws, . . . the running of the statute of limitations in respect of every private right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter . . ."

[Government Action]

The United States brought an anti-trust action against United Fruit in the District of Louisiana on July 2, 1954. This action was not terminated until February 4, 1958 at the earliest, and since the plaintiffs brought this suit within one year of that date, the federal statute of limitations as to United Fruit would be suspended during the pendency of the Government action. But such suspension only applies to the rights of action asserted here which are "based in whole or in part on any matter complained of" in the Government proceeding.

["Same Acts"]

Section 16(b) has been strictly construed by the courts to limit the tolling effect of the Government action to situations where the United States and the private plaintiff complain of virtually identical acts. See Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corp. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304], 232 F. 2d 190 (9th Cir. 1956). In conspiracy cases, the test approved by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals was: "The matters complained of in the private proceeding must be the same acts to achieve the same conspiracy complained of in the action brought by the United States." 232 F. 2d at 196.

The defendants claim that the acts or conspiracies alleged by the plaintiffs are different from those complained of in the Government action. "Of course, the test of the validity of [this] position is a comparison of the two suits." Christensen v. Paramount Pictures [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,751], 95 F. Supp. 446, 451 (D. Utah 1951).

[Comparison With Government Action]

This comparison, made on the basis of the amended complaint, statement of issues of fact, and consent decree in the Government suit, juxtaposed against the complaint in the present action, leaves no doubt that the first count of the present action is based in whole or in part on matters complained of in the former suit. The statement of issues of fact sets forth United Fruit's monopolization of banana supply and distribution, its power to set prices and exclude others from the market, and its interference with banana jobber associations. The amended complaint alleges with considerable particularity the combination and conspiracy to monopolize trade in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Such allegations are paralleled by specific allegations in the instant complaint. For an example directly on point Paragraph 54F alleged that "By withdrawing sources of supply, selling bananas as a jobber to retailers at unreasonably low prices, and by other means, [United] forced some banana jobbers in the New England area out of business and restricted the growth and operations of remaining jobbers in that area."

[Statute Tolled]

The four year federal statute is, therefore, tolled as to the allegations of the first count against United Fruit and the plaintiffs may go back to July 3, 1950 with respect to this part of the action.

If the plaintiffs can prove that the price overcharges, service charge discriminations and price discriminations were engendered by economic position illegally achieved, such acts will provide the basis for recovery of damages.

[Amended Complaint]

It is argued that the cut off date under the first count cannot be extended back to 1950 because while the Government action was brought on July 2, 1954, the Government's amended complaint, carrying the specific references to the New England area set out above, was not filed until January 12, 1956. To support this proposition, the defendants cite Momand v. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,360], 172 F. 2d 37, 49 (1st Cir. 1948), where the plaintiff's amended complaint of 1934 was not allowed to relate back to 1931, when his action was brought. That case is clearly distinguishable, since the plaintiff in Momand did not possess his causes of action until 1933 when they were assigned to him. The present problem concerns an amended, rather than a supplemental complaint. Since the matters stated in the amendment merely clarify and particularize the original complaint, the amendment relates back to the date when the original pleading was filed. F. R. C. P. 15(c). cf. Christensen v. Paramount Pictures, supra.

[Relationship of Parties]

The defendants also contend that different acts or conspiracies must be involved in Count 1 than in the Government complaint, because the claims in the Government action related to customers of United Fruit. The defendants say the plaintiffs do not claim to be customers of United Fruit under the first count. But there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are jobbers within the meaning of that term in Paragraph 54F, quoted above, and I am convinced, on reading of the Government complaint against Count 1 of the plaintiffs' complaint, that the essence of the acts, conspiracies and purposes is the same in both.

[Robinson-Patman Act Allegations]

On the other hand, Counts 2 and 3 of the instant complaint are not based in whole or in part on matters complained of in the Government action. No reference was made by the Government to Robinson-Patman Act violations.

While Paragraph 54F did charge United Fruit with interfering with jobbers "by other means" this is too vague an allegation to support tolling of the statute of limitations as to Robinson-Patman claims, when the Government suit was conceived and brought under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The cut off date under the 2nd and 3rd counts as to both defendants is, therefore, March 4, 1954.

Motion to Strike Thrust Upon Defense

In Paragraph 32 of the answer the defendants allege:

> "32. The matters complained of in the First Count of the complaint as being monopolization of the banana trade were necessary and proper consequences of the superior skill of the defendants, the superiority of their products, natural advantages, their economic and technological efficiency, scientific research, and other manifestations of diligence and industry on the part of the defendants, and were necessitated and justified by the nature of the banana business, and by conditions of the industry resulting from forces beyond defendants' control."

The plaintiffs moved to strike this defense as insufficient as a matter of law. The theory behind the motion is that the defense is good only if the defendants achieved their monopoly position solely as a result of the facts alleged in the defense. The plaintiffs assert that the defendants cannot, in good conscience, amend their answer to comply with that requirement.

The plaintiffs' motion is grounded on a statement by Judge Wyzanski in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,436], 110 F. Supp. 295 (D. Mass. 1953) aff'd per curiam [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,755], 347 U. S. 521 (1954). At page 342 Judge Wyzanski wrote:

> ". . . the defendant may escape statutory liability if it bears the burden of proving that it owes its monopoly solely to superior skill, superior products, natural advantages . . ."

Such a statement is not authority for requiring the defendants to plead as the plaintiffs suggest.

Existing case law clearly allows the defendants to explain and justify their position. See United States v. Aluminum Co. of America [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,342], 148 F. 2d 416 (2nd Cir. 1945); United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,633], 118 F. Supp. 41 (D. Del. 1953); aff'd [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377 (1956). The issue is clearly raised by the pleading as it stands.

[Judgment]

The plaintiffs' motion to strike the defense of justification in Paragraph 32 of the answer is, therefore, denied.

The plaintiffs may go back to July 3, 1950 with respect to the matters alleged in the First Count against United Fruit.

The plaintiffs may go back to March 4, 1954 with respect to the matters alleged in the First Count against Fruit Dispatch, and in the Second and Third Counts against both United Fruit and Fruit Dispatch.

[Discovery Allowed]

To conform with the rulings above, the order of this court dated September 17, 1958 is hereby amended to allow discovery, disclosure and production of documents back to July 3, 1950 as to United Fruit.

[¶ 69,278] Charles D. Bender v. The Hearst Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 20—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25016. Argued December 10, 1958. Decided February 11, 1959.

Cross appeals from a judgment of the District Court for the District of Connecticut, Robert P. Anderson, J., sitting without a jury, dismissing plaintiff's claims for treble damages under the antitrust laws for insufficiency of proof, and awarding plaintiff $87,500 damages under the law of Wisconsin for loss of future profits caused by defendant's tortious inducement to plaintiff's supplier to terminate and thereby breach an exclusive distributorship agreement with plaintiff. Affirmed.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Practices—Acquisition of Assets of Competitor—Termination of Exclusive Distributorship—Legality Under Sherman Act, Section 1—Relevant Market.—A trial court's ruling that a publisher of an automobile repair cost manual did not unreasonably restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act by acquiring all of the assets of a competitor was affirmed. A distributor of the competitor who lost his franchise as a result of the transaction appealed on the ground that the trial court incorrectly defined the relevant market to encompass the entire area of the manual's circulation rather than the more restricted area of the distributor's own exclusive sales territory. Approximately one-half of the total sales of the manual were made outside his territory. Buyers purchased in a national market, and there was neither allegation nor proof that they could not purchase outside their own area. Purchasers often had more than one manual in their library, and the ones chosen did not depend upon the geographical location of the seller. There was nothing to indicate that the only area of genuine competition, or even that the primary area of competition, was within the distributor's sales territory. The fact that he had competed with salesmen of the acquiring publisher did not make his sales territory a relevant market area; he was not a publisher but merely one of many conduits from a publisher to the consuming public. There was no proof whatever of an unreasonable restraint of a separate competitive enterprise of distribution in his territory.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.600, 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.500, 2515.40, 2520.30, 2610.120, 2610.720.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Acquisition of Competitor's Assets Under Section 7 of Clayton Act—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Injury to Plaintiff.—A publisher of an automobile repair cost manual which bought the assets of an individual competitor who also owned a sales corporation was not liable in damages for the termination of a distributorship agreement between the competitor and one of its distributors where the distributor claimed the acquisition of corporate assets as the cause of his injury. The sales corporation had been formed by the individual owner to act as his sales agent. The sales territory transferred to the corporation, however, did not include the distributor's exclusive sales territory. Therefore, even assuming a prohibited transfer of corporate assets to the publisher from the sales corporation, the termination of the distributor-ship could not have resulted from any act of the corporation. Consequently, the distributor failed to allege or prove that he sustained any private injury as a result of the transfer of corporate assets.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, District of Connecticut, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,750.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, HINCKS and LUMBARD, Circuit Judges.

[Breach of Contract]

LUMBARD, Circuit Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: These are cross appeals from a judgment of the District Court for the District of Connecticut, Anderson, J., (1) awarding plaintiff $87,500 on his claim advanced in counts 1 and 2 of the complaint that the defendant tortiously induced one Reidl to commit a breach of an exclusive distributorship contract with plaintiff, and (2) awarding judgment to defendant on plaintiff's claim for treble damages under the antitrust laws for alleged violations growing out of the same transaction. The primary question presented on the defendant's appeal is whether and to what extent a distributor under the law of Wisconsin may recover damages from a third party who buys out his supplier with knowledge of a resulting breach of the exclusive distributorship agreement. There are subsidiary questions of the validity of the distributorship contract under the governing substantive law of Wisconsin. We hold that the facts as found by Judge Anderson, in his excellent opinion below, are supported by the record, and that under the law of Wisconsin the defendant's acts constituted an underprivileged invasion of the plaintiff's interest in the protection of his contract.

[Restraint of Trade]

The third and fourth counts of the complaint alleged claims for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act based separately on §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act. The primary question presented by the plaintiff's appeal on the Sherman Act claims is whether the district court correctly defined the relevant market to determine the existence of an unreasonable restraint of commerce. We hold that the market was correctly defined and that the record supports the findings upon which Judge Anderson rested the conclusion that there was no unreasonable restraint. We do not reach the issues presented by the defendant's contention on the claim under § 7 of the Clayton Act that Crash Book Sales, Inc., the transferor of assets to the defendant Hearst Publishing Co., was not a corporation within the meaning of that statute, because we find that the plaintiff has failed to show that private injury resulted from the merger even if it was unlawful.

I—The Facts

[Exclusive Distributorship]

The facts stated in the opinion below are amply supported by the record. We repeat here only so much as is necessary to our disposition. Until 1953 the plaintiff, Bender, was an automobile damage appraiser. In December of that year he became a part-time distributor of a loose-leaf reporting service known as Crash Book Service which provided insurance companies, damage appraisers and automobile repair shops with data on the current costs of automobile repairs conveniently displayed in loose-leaf form. The copyright covering the book was held by one Reidl, who traded under the name Crash Book Service. In October 1954 the plaintiff was persuaded by Reidl to give up all other employment and enter an agreement to act as a full-time exclusive distributor of Crash Book Service in an area of the United States generally comprised of the New England and Middle Atlantic States. By October 10, 1956 when this agreement was terminated by the acts of Reidl and the defendant, plaintiff employed three full-time and twenty part-time assistants in the distribution of Crash Book Service.

The distributorship agreement was partly established by letters and partly by oral conversations. It was primarily drafted by Reidl, who, by a letter in September 1955 attempted to integrate it. It included representations by Reidl that by plowing back into the distributorship the commissions on initial sales the plaintiff would profit, in the manner of insurance salesmen, from renewal commissions after a base of initial sales had been established in the first few years. The plaintiff acted upon these representations so that by September 30, 1956, after two years of full-time work, he had sustained a cash loss of a few hundred dollars, but had accounted for more than 3,000 sales, about one half of all sales of Crash Book Service. The agreement also provided prices to the distributor and for resale and certain wholesale discounts. Under it the plaintiff secured a commission of $10 on most initial sales and $5 on renewals, with smaller amounts on bulk sales.

The plaintiff's territory was defined, and it was provided that the agreement would continue in force so long as the distributor remained active in the territory, with activity measured by the maintenance of a reasonable number of subscribers. On the distributor's wrongful conduct all of Reidl's obligations under the contract were to cease, but if the distributor withdrew voluntarily and without wrongful behavior provision was made for him to receive the benefits of the contract for one year. If the distributor died payments were to be made to his family for two years. There was no express provision for the withdrawal of Reidl.

[Competitors]

Crash Book Service competed with four previously established publications, three of which were distributed nationally and the fourth primarily in the western states. One of the national publications was defendant's Motors Body Shop Flat Rate and Parts Manual (Motors Manual). Because of certain novel advantages of the display of information provided by Crash Book Service, and because of its monthly supplementation, it proved to be highly saleable. By October 1, 1956 the national circulation of Crash Book Service, the sole publication offered by Reidl, was approximately 7,000 as against 58,000, 10,000, 10,000 and 7,500 for its competitors, which were sold as part of lines consisting of a number of publications of use to the automotive trade.

In March of 1956 Reidl, from motives not here material, formed a corporation under the laws of Wisconsin known as Crash Book Sales, Inc., to act as sole sales agent for Crash Book Service. However, the corporation's agency did not overlap the plaintiff's, and he continued to act as Reidl's sole distributor in his exclusive territory.

[Acquisition By Competitor]

In March 1956 the defendant Hearst determined that its publication, Motors Manual, was no longer adequate. It decided to discontinue publication for the two years that would be required to revamp the publication in order to incorporate the advantages that had been suggested by Reidl's design. To avoid the undesirable competitive consequences of a withdrawal of part of its multiple line of publications from the market for so long a time, the defendant, a publisher with large resources, finally decided to attempt negotiations with Reidl looking to the purchase of his Crash Book Service and its incorporation in the defendant's line in place of Motors Manual.

At about the same time Reidl became concerned over the future of Crash Book Service because of seemingly reliable rumors that the defendant and others were undertaking revisions of their manuals to incorporate the Crash Book Service advantages, and because these competitors, with their national distribution systems and multiple publications, might prove too much for the small new organization handling Crash Book. The negotiaitions commenced in May 1956 and resulted in the execution of a written contract for the sale of Crash Book Service to Hearst, executed at Milwaukee, Wisconsin on September 25, 1956, under which Reidl received $42,500 in cash, a contract of employment as editor of the service, and a royalty of 50¢ on all future sales of Crash Book for ten years up to $100,000.

[Knowledge of Distributor's Contract]

Defendant knew of Reidl's contract with the plaintiff and was familiar with its terms as well as with the sales and renewals achieved by plaintiff in his territory. Defendant, as part of the inducement held out to Reidl, agreed to defend him against any suit that Bender might bring, and to reimburse him for any recovery up to $2,500. By this and other inducements Hearst persuaded the reluctant Reidl to repudiate his contract with plaintiff. By the terms of its contract with Reidl, defendant became entitled to receive the profit on subsequent renewals of outstanding subscriptions, and on October 11, 1956 the defendant took steps to protect this interest by notifying plaintiff's customers that they were thereafter to deal only with its salesmen. After August 31, 1956 the plaintiff was neither paid nor credited with any of the profit due him on renewals, which averaged 80% of original sales.

III—Sherman Act, § 1

[Relevant Market]

On the claim advanced under § 1 of the Sherman Act[2] plaintiff rests his appeal on the ground that the district court incorrectly defined the relevant market to encompass too large a geographical area, and that this error rendered erroneous its otherwise proper determination that no unreasonable restraint of the market resulted from the transactions in suit. We find that the market was properly defined, and that the findings and conclusions below on which the absence of an unreasonable restraint was based are correct.

The district court found in its opinion that:

> The area of effective competition between * * * Crash Book Service and * * * Motor Body [&c.] * * * consisted of those states in plaintiff's distributorship territory, the remaining portions of states a part of which was in the plaintiff's territory, and Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas and Wisconsin * * *

[National Market]

In Finding of Fact No. 16 the court found further that approximately one-half of the total sales of Crash Book Service to October 1, 1956 were made outside the plaintiff's territory. These findings are supported by the record. Plaintiff nevertheless contends that the relevant market here was a "prime market" supposedly represented by the area included in his former exclusive sales territory, and contends that the district court's allegedly improper definition of the market necessarily affects the determination that no unreasonable restraint resulted. We find that the district court correctly defined the relevant market.

The defendant and Reidl competed before the merger in the entire area of Crash Book's circulation, since the defendant's manual was distributed nationally. There is nothing to indicate that the only area of genuine competition, or even that the primary area of competition was within the plaintiff's sales territory, rather than in all the territory which Reidl sought to exploit. For example, there was neither allegation nor proof that "purchasers cannot, as a practical matter, turn to suppliers outside their own area," Standard Oil Co. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, n. 5 (1949). To the contrary, the record shows that in general purchasers often had more than one manual in their libraries, and that the manual chosen by a purchaser depended upon its desirability and not at all upon factors relating to the geographical location of the seller or mode of distribution of the product. It thus appears that buyers purchased in a national market, not a particular local area, while publishers sold wherever a buyer could be found.

These facts dispose of the plaintiff's reliance here on Farmer's Guide Publishing Co. v. Prairie Farmer Publishing Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,064], 293 U. S. 268 (1934), where the Supreme Court reversed a defendant's judgment which had been sustained by the court of appeals on the ground that measured in a national market there was no unreasonable restraint of trade. The Supreme Court's choice of the local market depended upon a salient fact recited in the opinion, and entirely absent from the record here:

> [P]etitioner * * * was a publisher * * * of farm papers. Each is a general, and not a vocational, paper; the larger part of its circulation is in the State where printed; it does not circulate in any substantial number throughout the country as a whole and is called a state or sectional paper in order to distinguish it from publications having a wider and what is referred to as a national circulation * * * (272)

It was thus alleged that the essentially local businesses of the plaintiffs were injured by the defendants' combination to offer reduced rates to advertisers buying space in all of the defendants' five sectional papers serving the same local area, and the Supreme Court found that the business fact alleged was sufficient to define a local or less-than-national market.

[Separate Enterprise]

Plaintiff appears at times ready to maintain that his exclusive territory defines local market area within the Farmer's Guide case because he himself was formerly in competition with defendant's salesmen. But plaintiff is not a publisher; he is merely one of many conduits to the consuming public from a publisher, who is in substantially national competition with other publishers. There is no proof whatever of an unreasonable restraint of a separate competitive enterprise of distribution in the plaintiff's former sales area which would render that restricted geographical market relevant.

IV—Clayton Act, § 7

[No Private Injury]

Although we affirm the district court's dismissal of the claim based on § 7 of the Clayton Act[3] alleging a wrongful transfer of corporate assets by Crash Book Sales, Inc., to Hearst Publishing Co., we find that on the undisputed facts the plaintiff has failed to assert or prove a private injury, and we consequently do not consider the defendant's contention here that the assets transferred by Crash Book Sales, Inc. were not corporate assets within the meaning of § 7 of the Clayton Act.

It is uncontested that when Crash Book Sales, Inc. was formed to act as exclusive sales agent for Crash Book Service the territory transferred to it by Reidl did not include the plaintiff's territory, and that the plaintiff continued to serve as Reidl's exclusive distributor in the territory agreed upon. Therefore even if we assume that Crash Book Sales was a corporation within the meaning of § 7 and that it did make a prohibited transfer of assets, the termination of plaintiff's distributorship, which is the only injury alleged or proved, could not have resulted from any act of the corporation. Thus plaintiff has failed to prove a private injury. Affirmed.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Service of Process—Non-resident Witness—Exemption.—An individual who allegedly resided and transacted his business in New Jersey was not immune from service of process in New York City by reason of the fact that his deposition as a witness was being taken there in connection with actions pending in a California state court. The exemption of a party from service of process is discretionary with the court. There is a strong presumption that the service is regular; therefore, the burden was upon the individual to affirmatively show that it was in the court's own interest to quash the service. The individual failed to meet that burden; he was an officer of a corporation which had its principal place of business in [3] 15 U. S. C. A. § 18 (as amended 1950): No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

New York, and his affidavits seemed designed to conceal rather than reveal the extent of his New York activities. His own affidavits failed to give the location of his place of business or his residence; he left it to his attorney to state, by affidavits purporting to be on personal knowledge, that he resided and had his place of business in New Jersey, and that the controlling purpose in coming to New York was to attend the taking of the depositions. It was a fair inference that he regularly came in and out of New York and that he would have been there anyway if he had not been testifying on the particular day that he was served.

[Service of Summons]

BRYAN, District Judge: [In full text]: Leo Cluesmann, named as a defendant in this action, moves to quash service of the summons and complaint upon him. The sole ground is that at the time Cluesmann was served he was in this jurisdiction for the purpose of having his deposition taken as a witness in five actions currently pending in the Superior Court of California for the County of Los Angeles, and was therefore exempt from service of process.

[Treble Damage Action]

The action in this district in which Cluesmann was served is for treble damages allegedly resulting from a conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws (15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2) by the American Federation of Musicians and various of its officers. Cluesmann, alleged to be a participant in the conspiracy, is the executive secretary and a member of the Executive Committee of defendant American Federation of Musicians (A. F. M.). The action was originally brought in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California and was transferred to this district pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1404(a) by order entered on stipulation of the parties. Only three defendants, A. F. M. and two of its other officers, had been served prior to the transfer.

[Service in Jurisdiction]

On the day Cluesmann was served depositions were being taken in the California actions at the House of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York on West 44th Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, pursuant to order of the California court. The American Federation of Musicians, a defendant in the action in this district, was also a defendant in the California actions. The depositions of a number of the officers of A. F. M., including Cluesmann, had originally been ordered by the California court to be taken at their various places of residence. However, by stipulation of counsel for the parties the situs of all the depositions was changed to New York City and a commission to take the depositions was issued by the California court to a New York City notary.

[Place of Business—Residence]

Cluesmann states that on May 2, 1958, the date of service, he was present in New York for the "purpose of having my deposition taken" in the California actions against the A. F. M. "pursuant to an order of the California [court] and stipulation of counsel". He states that he had begun his testimony at 10:00 a. m., had then gone to lunch, and was served while he was returning from lunch to resume his testimony. He then testified for the remainder of the afternoon of May 2 and completed his testimony the following day when he "returned at once to the State of New Jersey". Cluesmann's own affidavit contains no statement as to his residence or place of business. However, the reply affidavit of his attorney, purporting to be made on personal knowledge, states as a fact that Cluesmann is a resident of New Jersey (presumably Newark), and that "he had come to New York on the day on which plaintiffs attempted to serve him for the sole purpose of having his deposition taken". This affidavit also states that Cluesmann's office as secretary of the A. F. M. is maintained in Newark and that Cluesmann conducts his business as secretary there. The addresses of Cluesmann's place of residence or of his office, and the details of his trip to New York, beyond those related above, are not given.

Counsel for the plaintiffs states by affidavit that the principal office and place of business of the A. F. M. is in New York County and that Cluesmann as secretary and a member of the Executive Board of A. F. M. "carries out his functions and conducts business in the City of New York". The latter is denied by Cluesmann's counsel.

I deem the lengthy discussions by counsel in their affidavits of the history and background of the New York and California litigation of little relevance on the motion before me.

[Exemption of Non-Resident]

The principles governing the exemption of a non-resident witness from service of process are well settled and of ancient origin. See Stewart v. Ramsay, 242 U. S. 128. Usually they are applied where a defendant has been served while within the jurisdiction as a party or witness in another case then pending in the courts of the same jurisdiction. In such a case the court before whom the motion to quash service is made is called upon to determine which of two competing interests is entitled to the more weight.

The first such interest is the encouragement of witnesses to come to the jurisdiction in aid of the administration of justice free from fear of vexation or harassment. The second is to allow a plaintiff to serve a defendant promptly so that he may be afforded the opportunity to have his cause heard and determined expeditiously.

[Discretion of Court]

Thus it has long been held that the exemption from service of process accorded a party or witness is a privilege which belongs to the court and it is "discretionary to grant it on some occasions and to refuse it on others." Starret's case, 1 Dal. 356; Parker v. Hotchkiss, C. C. E. D. Penn., Fed. Cases 10,739; Lamb v. Schmitt, 285 U. S. 222; New England Industries, Inc. v. Margiotti, 270 App. Div. 488.

[Comity]

The problem presented here, however, differs from the usual pattern. Here the proceedings for which defendant came to this jurisdiction to testify are not related to an action pending in this court or in the courts of this state but are in aid of actions in the California state courts. It is therefore necessary to ascertain what view the California courts would take of the claimed exemption since the motion must rest upon the premise that service should be quashed as a matter of comity in order to aid the administration of justice in the California state courts. There is no need to quash the subpoena for this reason if the California courts would see no necessity for so doing. Crittenden v. Barkin, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 276 F. 978.

California recognizes the exemption. See Gerard v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. App. 2d 549; Hammons v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. App. 700. Therefore, not because California law applies, but as a matter of comity, the question presented here should be decided in the light of what the California courts would do under the circumstances, and the extent to which the convenience of this court would be served by retaining jurisdiction over Cluesmann in the suit before it. Crittenden v. Barkin, supra. Cf. Hardie v. Bryson, D. C. E. D. Mo., 44 F. Supp. 66.

California follows the general view and is in accord with the federal rule that "the proper test is whether [allowance of] the privilege will promote justice" under the circumstances presented. Russell v. Landau, 127 Cal. App. 2d 685, citing with approval United States v. Conley, D. C. D. Mass., 80 F. Supp. 700, and Stewart v. Ramsay, 242 U. S. 128.[1]

[Affirmative Showing]

The exemption of which Cluesmann seeks to avail himself is based on no mere technical rule of law from which it would automatically follow that because the non-resident defendant was here testifying as a witness he is totally immune from service. Defendant must affirmatively show that it is in the court's own interest in furtherance of the administraion of justice, or in its interest as a matter of comity, to quash the service of this summons. The exemption should "not be enlarged * * * [and] should be extended or withheld only as judicial interests require". Lamb v. Schmitt, supra.

[Presumption]

The strong presumption is that service is regular and the burden is on a defendant who is contesting service to establish that it was not. Among other things, what the non-resident defendant does and the time he spends in the jurisdiction before service, and, to a lesser extent, his activities in the jurisdiction and how long he stays thereafter, are taken into account in determining what his intentions were in coming into the jurisdiction, and whether he was really there solely for the purpose of testifying or not. Finucane v. Warner, 194 N. Y. 160. And I see no reason why in that connection the defendant's general habits with respect to the frequency and regularity of his business in the jurisdiction are not of importance where, as here, his residence is only a short tube ride away from the place where his testimony is being taken and he has obvious strong business connections in New York City.[2]

[Affidavits]

In my view Cluesmann has not met his burden. On the question of the frequency, regularity and extent of his business activities in New York the affidavits in support of the motion are cryptic to a degree. They seem designed to conceal rather than to reveal the extent of Cluesmann's usual activities in New York. There is no statement as to when he arrived here to have his testimony taken or how frequently he comes to New York on the business of the Federation, which concededly has its principal offices in New York City, and of which he is the executive secretary. There is no description of what activities are carried on in the Executive Secretary's office in Newark. Indeed, neither the address of that office or of his Newark place of residence is given. There is no showing that he had any other business or occupation than as executive secretary of the Federation, and it is unlikely that he had. It is a fair inference from the circumstances which have been shown to exist, and the defendant's significant omissions, that he regularly comes in and out of New York to attend to the business of the Federation, and that had he not been testifying on that particular day he would have been in New York anyway.

Moreover, it is of some signifiance that the American Federation of Musicians, with which Cluesmann's interests were so closely allied, was a defendant both in the action in this district, and that counsel for the A. F. M. had stipulated that the depositions of its president and some eight of its other officers, including Cluesmann, should be taken in New York where its principal office and place of business was located. These facts, at the least, would place on Cluesmann a greater burden than he has met.

[Purpose of Visit]

Cluesmann leaves it to a third party to indicate that his controlling purpose in coming to New York was to attend the examination, and he himself does not even refer to that subject. The showing as to the purpose of the visit is in itself insufficient to sustain his burden. Cf. McKinney v. Northwest Tractor & Equipment Corp., 41 Wash. 2d 372; Finucane v. Warner, supra.

Under all the circumstances presented here there is no basis on which to find that the administration of justice in this court would be aided by quashing the service. Nor is sufficient shown to indicate that this court should do so as a matter of comity in order to further the administration of California justice. To grant relief in this case would in no wise "emphasize the dignity and importance of attendance at court * * *". United States v. Conley, supra, p. 702.

[Motion Denied]

The motion to quash service is in all respects denied because of the failure of defendant to sustain his burden of proof that service was irregular and in the exercise of my discretion.

So ordered.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Prices—Fictitious Pricing of Perfume.—A Federal Trade Commission finding that perfume distributors violated the FTC Act by using and disseminating advertising materials which represented that their perfume regularly sold for "$18.50 the ounce at better shops," when in truth that was never the usual and customary retail price, was supported by substantial evidence.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5095.30.

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Origin of Product—Foreign "Essence" of Perfume Combined With Domestic Alcohol—Selling as Imported Perfume.—Perfume distributors violated the Federal Trade Commission Act by selling as an imported perfume a foreign concentrate combined, in this country, with domestic alcohol. The Commission's determination that the distributors represented their product as an imported perfume was a reasonable one. Substantial evidence supported the Commission's findings that the distributors imported only the perfume concentrate to be mixed here with domestic alcohol, but that they used on their package labels the French tricolor, French words and phrases, and the English words "Perfume Essence—Compounded in France." Those words might disclose to those familiar with the manufacturing of perfume that only the "essence" of the packaged article was represented as being wholly compounded in France; however, such specialized knowledge cannot be imputed to the average purchaser. The Act was not made for the protection of experts but for the protection of the public.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5091.600.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Power to Declare Practices Unfair—False Price Representations.—The Federal Trade Commission is empowered to prevent such unfair practices as perfume distributors' false representations that their perfume regularly sold for a price that was never, in truth, the usual and customary retail price of the product.

[Price and Origin of Perfume]

Per Curiam [In full text]: Petitioners seek to set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission ordering them to cease and desist from engaging in unfair and deceptive acts and practices and unfair methods of competition in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 45(a)(1). The Commission found that petitioners had used and disseminated advertising materials which represented that their "White Christmas" perfume regularly sold for "$18.50 the ounce at better shops," when in truth that never was the usual and customary retail price. The Commission also found that although petitioners imported from France only the perfume concentrate to be mixed here with domestic alcohol, they used the French tricolor and French words and phrases on their package labels, together with the English words "Perfume Essence—Compounded in France." These findings are supported by substantial evidence and therefore are binding upon us, 15 U. S. C. § 45(c); Federal Trade Commission v. Sewell [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,720], 353 U. S. 969 (1957); Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,170], 302 U. S. 112 (1937); Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,041], 291 U. S. 67 (1934).

[Protection of Public]

False price representations such as those found to have been made by petitioners are unfair practices that the Commission is empowered to prevent. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, supra; Thomas v. Federal Trade Commission, 116 F. 2d 347 (10 Cir. 1940). And we have held on more than one occasion that one cannot, within the scope of the Federal Trade Commission Act, sell as an imported perfume a foreign concentrate combined in this country with domestic alcohol. Houbigant, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 139 F. 2d 1019 (2 Cir. 1944), cert. denied, 323 U. S. 763 (1944); Establissements Rigaud, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,186], 125 F. 2d 590 (2 Cir. 1942); Parfums Corday, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 120 F. 2d 808 (2 Cir. 1941); Fioret Sales Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,196], 100 F. 2d 358 (2 Cir. 1938). The Commission's determination that petitioners represented their product as an imported perfume is a reasonable one. "Perfume Essence—Compounded in France" might well disclose to those familiar with the manufacturing of perfume that only the "essence" of the packaged article offered for sale was represented as being wholly compounded in France; but such specialized knowledge of the difference between essences and perfumes cannot be imputed to the average purchaser, C. Howard Hunt Pen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,286], 197 F. 2d 273 (3 Cir. 1952), and the Act "was not 'made for the protection of experts, but for the public—that vast multitude which includes the ignorant, the unthinking and the credulous,' Florence Mfg. Co. v. J. C. Dowd & Co., 2 Cir. 178 Fed. 73, 75," Charles of the Ritz Dist. Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,267], 143 F. 2d 676, 679 (2 Cir. 1944).

Petition to review and set aside a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission directed at the sale and distribution of merchandise by means of a lottery scheme in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 45. Petition to set aside order denied, and order affirmed.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Using or Selling Lottery Devices—Lotteries in Sale of Miscellaneous Merchandise—Lottery by Means of "Punch Card."—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting a distributor of "punch cards" from using lottery devices to sell electrical appliances, clocks, and other merchandise was affirmed. The cards contained a number of perforated disks bearing names which could be "punched out" by customers. The punched out paper indicated the amount to be paid. Persons who, by chance, punched out certain disks received prizes, while the majority of persons who "punched" the cards received nothing. The manner of merchandising resulted in the purchaser either receiving nothing for the amount paid or an article of substantially greater value than the price paid for the chance. The court rejected the contention that the mere mailing of punch board cards was not sufficient to establish an existing lottery and that there was thus no violation of law. There is a substantial difference between a criminal lottery proceeding and the type of situation the Commission is authorized to regulate.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5173.50.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Unfair Practices—Definitions Under Federal Trade Commission Act, Section 4—Interstate Commerce.—The distribution of "punch cards" throughout the United States from an office located first in Chicago and then in New York was conducted in interstate commerce. The Commission, by subpoena, obtained the distributor's testimony and that of three residents of the State of Indiana who had received the cards, sold them, remitted the proceeds to the distributor, and received the merchandise and the reward for selling. The proof definitely overcame the distributor's argument that the lottery, if any, was intrastate. The underlying purpose of the merchandise selling scheme was interstate in character.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5005.83.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Functions of Commission—Alleged Legislative Character of FTC Order.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting the use of lottery devices to sell merchandise was not legislative in character. That argument was passed upon and rejected in National Candy Co. v. FTC, 1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,224.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.311.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Witnesses—Immunity of Witnesses under FTC Act, Section 9—Relief To Be Granted.—A distributor of lottery devices was not deprived of due process of law because of involuntary testimony given by him under compulsion of an FTC subpoena. Section 9 of the FTC Act has been construed as not immunizing a witness where the only relief to be granted was a cease and desist order which was prospective only and was purely remedial and preventative.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8701.62.

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6758.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, MOORE, Circuit Judge, and GIBSON, District Judge.

[Lottery Scheme]

MOORE, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Petitioner seeks to review a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission issued after proceedings upon a complaint charging petitioner with unfair acts and practices arising out of the sale and distribution of merchandise in interstate commerce by means of games of chance, gift enterprises or lottery schemes in violation of section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. 45(a). The business was carried on by petitioner distributing in interstate commerce throughout the United States from petitioner's office, first in Chicago and then in New York, packages of advertising literature containing push cards. Accompanying the cards were instructions and circulars describing petitioner's plan of sale and distribution of merchandise. Briefly stated, a typical card contained a number of perforated disks (54 in number) bearing names which could be punched out by the customers. The punched out paper indicated the amount to be paid therefor, ranging in price from 1¢ to 39¢. Under a master seal was a name corresponding to one of the names on the disks. The person who by chance punched out this name became the prize winner. Certain other names received lesser prizes. Naturally the majority received nothing. The inducement to sell the push card was that the person selling the card and remitting its total value to petitioner would receive an article identical with that awarded as the first prize.

The Commission by subpoena obtained petitioner's testimony and that of three residents of the State of Indiana who had received the cards, sold them, remitted the proceeds to petitioner and received the merchandise and the reward for selling.

[Interstate Commerce]

The proof definitely overcomes petitioner's argument that the lottery, if any, was intrastate. The underlying purpose of the merchandise selling scheme was interstate in character.

[Existence of Lottery]

Petitioner next argues that since it was held in a criminal case, United States v. Halseth, 342 U. S. 277 (1952), that the mere mailing of punch board cards was not sufficient to establish an existing lottery, there was no violation of law. There is a substantial difference between a criminal proceeding and the type of situation the Commission is authorized to regulate. This distinction is to be found in the same Halseth case where the Commission's cease and desist order[1] against him was affirmed by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit[2] [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,870] and certiorari denied by the Supreme Court, 348 U. S. 928 (1955).

[Due Process]

Petitioner also claims that there was a denial of due process of law because of involuntary testimony given by him under compulsion of the Commission's subpoena. This point appears to have been passed upon directly in Drath v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,557], C. A. D. C., 1956, 239 F. 2d 452, cert. den. 353 U. S. 917 (1957). The court there construed section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act as not immunizing a witness where the only relief to be granted was a cease and desist order "which is prospective only and has been aptly described as 'purely remedial and preventative.'"

[Hearing]

Petitioner next challenges the testimony of the three witnesses from Indiana and speaks of their testimony as hearsay. The testimony was not hearsay. Petitioner merely failed to appear personally or by counsel at the hearing of which he had notice.

[Character of Order]

Finally, petitioner's argument that the cease and desist order is legislative in character has been passed upon and rejected, National Candy Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,224], 7 Cir., 1939, 104 F. 2d 999, cert. den. 308 U. S. 610 (1939).

[Cases Considered]

The cases cited in support of petitioner's arguments are clearly distinguishable. F. C. C. v. American Broadcasting Co., 347 U. S. 284 (1954), involved a radio give-away program where no monetary consideration was involved. United States v. Minker, 350 U. S. 179 (1956) dealt with the power to obtain testimony by subpoena from persons against whom denaturalization proceedings were in contemplation.

The factual situation in Seymour Sales Company v. Federal Trade Commission [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,880], C. A. D. C., 1954, 216 F. 2d 633, cert. den. 348 U. S. 928 (1955), presented an almost identical punch card problem. There, as here, the manner of merchandising resulted "in the purchaser either receiving an article or receiving nothing for the amount paid, the amount [being] determined wholly by lot or chance, and the article [having] a value substantially greater than the price paid for the chance" (p. 635). The cease and desist order was affirmed.

[Order Affirmed]

The petition to set aside the order is denied, and the order is affirmed.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the District Court for the Northern District of New York, dismissing after a trial to the court a complaint for violation of the anti-trust laws.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Practices—Clearance System in Motion Picture Industry—Conspiracy to Deny Exhibitor First Neighborhood Run—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A trial court's dismissal of a motion picture theatre owner's complaint charging chain exhibitors with conspiring to monopolize motion pictures in Rochester, New York, was affirmed. The trial court had found that the evidence failed to disclose any conspiracy to monopolize films and deprive the owner of "first neighborhood runs" between 1942 and 1950, and that the evidence rebutted "any presumption or inference" of the continuance, during those years, of a conspiracy which the defendants had been found guilty of in a prior Government action. The trial court also found that the owner had made no demand upon distributors for any first neighborhood run of the films shown at a competing theatre operated by the exhibitors. Such a demand is a necessary condition of any claim for relief. The owner could not recover damages on account of a failure to obtain first run showings unless it had made demand for that which it claimed to have been deprived of by the conspiracy. Also, the distributors were justified in giving preference to the chain theatre since the testimony indicated that it was a better customer of the distributors, for location and revenue, than the owner's theatre.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.553.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Evidence—Decree in Prior Government Action—Evidential Effect—Limited Time Period.—In a motion picture theatre owner's action seeking treble damages for chain exhibitors' alleged antitrust violations between June, 1942, and May, 1950, the trial court properly interpreted Section 5(a) of the Clayton Antitrust Act in holding that the "prima facie estoppel" of a prior Government decree against the chain exhibitors was limited to a period before May 19, 1942. The prior Government decree provided that all findings, with respect to acts committed by the exhibitors which were found to have been in violation of the antitrust laws, were limited to acts committed prior to May 19, 1942. Therefore, the decree in the Government suit had no evidential effect beyond that date. Congress, by using the word "estoppel" in Section 5(a), indicated that it meant the judgment in the Government decree to have no greater effect than that effected by an "estoppel" under the ordinary doctrine of res judicata. It is settled that the effect of an estoppel is confined to the facts actually adjudicated.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.260, 9012.410.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Effect of Prior Government Decree—Inference of Continuation of Conspiracy—Sufficiency of Evidence.—The existence of a conspiracy by chain exhibitors to monopolize motion picture films in Rochester, New York, until May 19, 1942, was not a basis for assuming that the conspiracy continued after that time. A decree entered in a Government action against the exhibitors could not be the basis for such an inference. However, even if the continuation of the conspiracy was a permissible inference, it would not make "clearly erroneous" the trial court's finding that the plaintiff failed to show that the exhibitors made any "unlawful use of monopoly" after May 19, 1942.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court for the Northern District of New York, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,912.

Before: Hand, Lumbard and Burger, Circuit Judges.

[Conspiracy Charged]

Hand, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff appeals from a judgment of Judge Foley, dismissing its complaint demanding treble damages for violation of the antitrust laws (§ 15, Title 15, U. S. C.). The action was tried to the judge who delivered an elaborate opinion reported in 157 Fed. Supp. 251 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,912], to which we refer as the supplement to what we say. The claim in suit arose from an alleged injury to the plaintiff, the corporate owner of a moving picture house in the City of Rochester, called "The Webster," whose shares were held by one, Max Fogel. The gravamen of the claim was that the defendants between June, 1942, and May, 1950, by virtue of their monopolistic control over moving picture "distributors," succeeded in preventing "The Webster" from receiving "first neighborhood run" of films; and that during this period another theatre, known as the "State" and controlled by the defendants, always got the "first neighborhood run," although "The Webster" was as good, and as well situated as the "State." After extended hearings consisting in large part of the testimony of Fogel himself, the judge made the following findings of fact at the close of his opinion: (1) that the evidence did not disclose any conspiracy to monopolize films between 1942 and 1950, and arbitrarily to deprive the plaintiff of "first neighborhood runs." (2) That the evidence rebutted "any presumption or inference" of the continuance during 1942 to 1950 of the conspiracy of which the defendants were found guilty by the Supreme Court in Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110. (3) That the plaintiff had made no demand upon distributors for any first neighborhood run of the films shown at the "State" theatre. (4) That the evidence did not show that "The Webster" "was clearly a better customer * * * than the State and that a different pattern of distribution would have been more to the interests of the distributors and thus allow an inference of conspiracy."

Judge Foley described at length the dealings between Fogel and the defendant J. Myer Schine, beginning shortly after Fogel built "The Webster" in 1927, a year after defendants' "State" theatre was built. The two theatres were six blocks apart and continued either in competition or cooperation until 1933 when Schine abandoned an interest that he had acquired in "The Webster." Fogel kept on alone until the autumn of 1940 when Schine took control and Fogel became his employee. In June, 1942, Fogel reacquired his interest in "The Webster" and the period of alleged injury began. Meanwhile, the United States had brought the action of which we have spoken under the antitrust laws which was finally determined by the Supreme Court on May 3, 1948, and in which the court held that a chain of about 148 motion-picture theatres located in 76 towns and in six states was controlled by the defendants, and had been operated in violation of the antitrust laws. This action had been brought in the District Court for the Western District of New York and in it Judge Knight made the following finding which was affirmed by the Supreme Court:

> "All findings made herein with respect to any acts committed by the defendants or any of them, or any course of conduct pursued by them which the Court holds to be in violation of the antitrust laws are limited to acts committed or course of conduct pursued prior to May 19, 1942, plaintiff's counsel having stated at the opening of the trial that he would not offer evidence beyond that date."

Judge Foley held that this finding limited the "prima facie estoppel" of the judgment of the Supreme Court under § 16 of Title 15, U. S. C. to the period before May 19, 1942, and therefore to a period before the beginning of that for which the plaintiff demanded damages. There can be no doubt that this was a proper interpretation of the statute (Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film etc. Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 541, 543). Congress by choosing the word, "estoppel," indicated that it meant the judgment to have no greater effect, even prima facie, between individuals than that effected by an "estoppel" under the ordinary doctrine of res judicata; and it is too well settled to require citation that the effect of an estoppel is confined to the facts actually adjudicated. Therefore, the decree in the Government suit had no evidential effect beyond Judge Knight's finding.

There remains the question whether the existence of such a conspiracy until May 19, 1942, might be the basis of an inference that it continued thereafter. We do not mean to suggest that, even if this be a permissible inference, it would make "clearly erroneous" Judge Foley's first finding that the plaintiff did not show that the defendants made any "unlawful use of monopoly" after May 19, 1942; but the situation is not even as favorable to the plaintiff as that. An order, pendente lite, was entered, apparently in May, 1942, by which the defendants were directed to dispose of the interest they then had in "The Webster," and this they did. It is of course conceivable that after surrendering control of that theatre in pursuance of this order they began to discriminate against it, though the surrender had been in compliance with an order in the Government suit; but in the face of both the surrender and the continued existence of the Government suit, we cannot agree that the decree in that suit served as a basis for supposing that the conspiracy found to have then existed continued, at least as to "The Webster." Be that as it may, the plaintiff had the burden of proving that the conspiracy in fact did continue and the judge's reasons for discrediting the plaintiff's testimony make impossible a reversal of his first and second findings.

Furthermore, he found that there was "no credible evidence to convince that the Webster was clearly a better customer from the distribution point of view than the State and that a different pattern of distribution would have been more to the interests of the distributors and thus allow an inference of conspiracy." Read strictly, it is true that this finding does not necessarily justify the uniform preference of the "State" theatre in the distribution of films; as it would have if the "State" theatre were the better customer of distributors, though we should have been tempted to read it as meaning that the "State" theatre was the "better customer," even if the finding stood alone. However, when we read it with the following passage from the opinion all doubt disappears.

> "The testimony of the top men in the distribution part of the movie industry was unhesitatingly to the effect that the State was a better theatre for location and revenue than the Webster and this testimony was also reliable and factual as was that of McKay, then general counsel for Schine, that there was never any agreement or meeting of the minds to deprive the Webster of first neighborhood run if it wanted it."

Finally, we can see no answer to the defendants' argument that there was no proof that Fogel ever demanded "first run" films on an equality with the "State" theatre; and in J. J. Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,757], 212 Fed. (2) 840, we held (following the Seventh Circuit, Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,891], 190 Fed. (2) 561), that such a demand was a necessary condition of any claim for relief. We repeat what we said in that case, page 845: "The plaintiffs cannot recover damages on account of any failure to obtain future pictures for first run exhibition unless they made demand for that of which they now claim they were deprived by the conspiracy."

Judgment affirmed.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defenses—Suit on Sales Contract—Scope of Defense of Illegality Under Sherman Act—Where Court's Judgment Would Not Enforce Antitrust Violations.—A purchaser of onions could not avoid paying for the goods by alleging that the sale was an indivisible part of an agreement which violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The challenged portion of the agreement was an alleged promise, mutually made by the parties, that they would not deliver onions on the futures market for the remainder of a season "for the purpose of creating a false and fictitious market condition." Assuming the illegality of that nondelivery agreement under the Sherman Act, it could not be enforced by a court. However, the courts would not be enforcing a violation of the Sherman Act by giving legal effect to a completed sale of onions at a fair price. The scope of the defense of illegality under the Sherman Act goes no further. Past the point where the judgment of the court would itself be enforcing the precise conduct made unlawful by the Act, the courts are to be guided by the overriding general policy of "preventing people from getting other people's property for nothing when they purport to be buying it." The purchaser argued that the cases in which the defense of illegality had been denied involved situations where a person not a party to any unlawful agreement sought to defend on the grounds of the seller's unlawful acts, whereas he was not liable for the purchase price because he was a party to the unlawful agreement and the agreement bore some relation to the suit. The court rejected that principle of distinction, and held that the character of the parties was not itself determinative.

[Action on Contract—Antitrust Defense]

Mr. Justice Brennan delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text].

The respondent sued the petitioner in the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois for failing to complete payment of the purchase price of 50 cars of onions which the respondent had sold to the petitioner in December 1955. Jurisdiction was based on diversity of citizenship. The petitioner interposed the defense that the sale was made pursuant to and as an indivisible part of an agreement which violated § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1. A motion was made to strike this defense and therefore the facts underlying it must be taken to be those set up in the petitioner's answer. Petitioner and respondent were both engaged in the marketing of onions. Petitioner, who was a grower of onions, admitted that he bought the onions from the respondent. But he alleged that the respondent and one Sam Siegel had represented to him and to other onion growers that they were the owners of substantial amounts of onions in storage, controlling 600 cars in the Chicago area and 400 more elsewhere throughout the country; that respondent and Siegel further informed the petitioner and other growers, at meetings called for the purpose in November and December 1955, that unless the growers purchased a large quantity of these onions, the respondent and Siegel would deliver them on the futures exchange for the purpose of depressing the futures price and the cash market price of onions. The petitioner and the other growers, who usually sold through trade channels, were fearful that this would cause them considerable loss. It was finally agreed by the petitioner and other growers that they would purchase 287 of the 600 cars of onions stored in the Chicago area, and the respondent and Siegel agreed not to deliver any onions on the futures market for the remainder of the current trading season. The petitioner and the other purchasers themselves agreed not to deliver any of the onions purchased from respondent and Siegel on the futures market for the remainder of the season; this was "for the purpose of creating a false and fictitious market condition," and "to fix the price of onions and limit the amount of onions sold in the State of Illinois." The District Court granted respondent's motion and struck the defense as insufficient in law.[1]

[Illegality Under Sherman Act]

The District Court then found, on the undisputed facts, that petitioner had in fact purchased the 50 cars of onions from the respondent, at an agreed price of $960 per car, plus storage charges incurred after sale; that petitioner had withdrawn 13 cars of the onions from the designated storage places after the sale, but had not withdrawn the remainder; that while petitioner had made some payments on account of the sale, he had come into default on them;

[1] Petitioner also interposed defenses of illegality under the Commodity Exchange Act, § 9, 42 Stat. 1003, as amended, 7 U. S. C. § 13, and the Illinois Antitrust Act, Smith-Hurd Illinois Ann. Stat., c. 38, §§ 569, 573, 574, and a counterclaim alleging respondent's breach of the nondelivery agreement. These issues were decided adversely to the petitioner below and are not preserved by him here.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

and that, when the onions began to show signs of deterioration, the respondent properly, after repudiation of the purchase by the petitioner, withdrew the remaining cars from storage and sold them for petitioner's account. The District Court entered summary judgment for the unpaid purchase price and storage charges, less the amounts obtained on the sale by respondent, the market price having declined in the interim. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed. 257 F. 2d 48 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,062]. We granted certiorari to consider the availability of the petitioner's pleaded defense of illegality under the Sherman Act to this action to enforce the terms of a sale made under state law. 358 U. S. 811.

[Cases Considered]

As a defense to an action based on contract, the plea of illegality based on violation of the Sherman Act[2] has not met with much favor in this Court. This has been notably the case where the plea has been made by a purchaser in an action to recover from him the agreed price of goods sold. In Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, one who had purchased merchandise from a firm allegedly a combination in restraint of trade was not allowed to set up that fact as a defense to an action for the purchase price. In D. R. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 236 U. S. 165, Corn Products sold merchandise to Wilder with a standing offer, of which the latter apparently had sought to take some advantage, to give Wilder a rebate if it bought exclusively from it. Again, in an action by the seller, Corn Products, to recover the agreed price, the purchaser, Wilder, was denied any defense of illegality based on the Sherman Act. The Court observed that the Sherman Act's express remedies could not be added to judicially by including the avoidance of private contracts as a sanction. Id., at 174-175. Cf. Bruce's Juices, Inc., v. American Can Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,553], 330 U. S. 743, 755. See A. B. Small Co. v. Lamborn & Co., 267 U. S. 248, 252, generally to the same effect. Obviously, state law governs in general the rights and duties of sellers and purchasers of goods, and, while the effect of illegality under a federal statute is a matter of federal law, Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,245], 317 U. S. 173, 176-177, even in diversity actions in the federal courts after Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, still the federal courts should not be quick to create a policy of nonenforcement of contracts beyond that which is clearly the requirement of the Sherman Act.

[Asserted Distinction]

The petitioner recognizes the import of the holdings in Connolly, Wilder and Small, but he argues that they involve situations where a person not party to any unlawful agreement sought to defend against the action on the grounds of the seller's unlawful acts; where the purchaser is party to the unlawful agreement and the agreement bears some relation to the suit, the petitioner claims he is not to be held to the purchase price. The distinction asserted is, to say the least, on its face paradoxical; and the petitioner quotes from this Court's opinion in McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U. S. 639, 669, which dealt with the plea of illegality in another context: "It has been often stated in similar cases that the defense is a very dishonest one, and it lies ill in the mouth of the defendant to allege it, and it is only allowed for public considerations and in order the better to secure the public against dishonest transactions." Petitioner evidently is willing to take the bitter as well as the sweet from this passage. If the defense of illegality is to be allowed as a collateral method of enforcement of the antitrust laws, as the breadth of the petitioner's argument suggests, it must be said that his theory creates a very strange class of private attorneys general.

[Scope of Illegality Defense]

In any event, an analysis of the narrow scope in which the defense is allowed in respect of the Sherman Act indicates that the principle of distinction is not what the petitioner claims it to be. The leading case here in which the defense was allowed is Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U. S. 227, much relied on by petitioner. There the Voight company had made purchases from Continental, a corporation which existed only as a selling agent for numerous wall paper companies doing business as a pool and selling at prices, alleged to be excessive and unreasonable, fixed through the pool agreement. The Court was of opinion that to give judgment for the excessive purchase price so fixed in favor of such a vendor would be to make the courts a party to the carrying out of one of the very restraints forbidden by the Sherman Act. 212 U. S., at 261. Any thought that the Court might have been proceeding on broader grounds was shortly afterwards laid to rest by the unanimous opinion of the Court in the Wilder case. 236 U. S., at 177. The scope of the defense of illegality under the Sherman Act goes no further. While enforcement of a contract between wrongdoers may more frequently present such a situation, cf. Lyons v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,008], 222 F. 2d 184, 188, the character of the parties is not in itself determinative. Past the point where the judgment of the Court would itself be enforcing the precise conduct made unlawful by the Act, the courts are to be guided by the overriding general policy, as Mr. Justice Holmes put it, "of preventing people from getting other people's property for nothing when they purport to be buying it." Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., supra, at 271 (dissenting opinion). Supplying a sanction for the violation of the Act, not in terms provided and capricious in its operation, cf. Bruce's Juices, Inc., v. American Can Co., supra, at 753-754, is avoided by treating the defense as so confined.

[2] Without deciding the point, we shall assume that the petitioner's allegations duly charged a violation of the Sherman Act.

[Lawful Sale]

Accordingly, while the nondelivery agreement between the parties could not be enforced by a court, if its unlawful character under the Sherman Act be assumed, it can hardly be said to enforce a violation of the Act to give legal effect to a completed sale of onions at a fair price. And while analysis in terms of "divisibility" or some other verbal formula may well be circular, see 6 Corbin, Contracts, § 1520, in any event, where as here, a lawful sale for a fair consideration constitutes an intelligible economic transaction in itself, we do not think it inappropriate or violative of the intent of the parties to give it effect even though it furnished the occasion for a restrictive agreement of the sort here in question. Cf. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy & Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179, 185. Affirmed.

Case No. 1311 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Scope of Sherman Act—Applicability to Regulated Industry (Television Broadcasting)—Jurisdiction of Regulatory Agency and Federal Court—Primary Jurisdiction—Effect of Federal Communications Commission Order Approving Station Exchange Attacked as Illegal Under Antitrust Laws.—The approval by the Federal Communications Commission of an agreement to exchange television stations did not bar an independent action by the Government which attacked the exchange as being in furtherance of a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The legislative history of the Communications Act of 1934 revealed that the Federal Communications Commission was not given the power to decide antitrust issues as such, and that FCC action was not intended to prevent enforcement of the antitrust laws in Federal courts, that is, such courts retained jurisdiction to pass on alleged antitrust violations irrespective of FCC action. The repeal of a sentence of Section 311 of the Communications Act, which provided that the granting of a license should not estop the United States from proceeding against licensees for violations of the antitrust laws, was not intended as a curtailment of the power of the United States to proceed under the antitrust laws.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Despite the legislative history of the Communications Act, the over-all regulatory scheme of the Act did not require the invocation of the primary jurisdiction doctrine. The doctrine has been held applicable to transactions allegedly violative of the antitrust laws, particularly involving fully regulated industries whose members were forced to charge only reasonable rates approved by the appropriate regulatory agency. It has been consistently held that when rates and practices relating thereto were challenged under the antitrust laws, the agencies had primary jurisdiction to consider the reasonableness of such rates and practices in the light of the many relevant factors including alleged antitrust violations, for otherwise sporadic action by Federal courts would disrupt an agency's delicate regulatory scheme, and would throw existing rate structures out of balance. While the television industry is a regulated industry, it is regulated in a very different way. That difference is controlling. Under the Communications Act, television broadcasters are not included in the definition of common carriers. Thus extensive controls, including rate regulation, do not apply. Therefore, there being no pervasive regulatory scheme, and no rate structures to throw out of balance, sporadic action by Federal courts can work no mischief. The justification for primary jurisdiction accordingly disappears. In every sense, the question faced by the parties to the station exchange was solely one of business judgment (as opposed to regulatory coercion), save only that the FCC had to find that the public interest would be served by their decision to make the exchange. However, this is not to imply that Federal antitrust policy may not be considered in determining whether the public interest would be served.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2039.25; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8221.125, 8229.625.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Prior Adjudication by Administrative Agency—Laches—Estoppel.—The approval by the Federal Communications Commission of an agreement to exchange television stations did not bar an independent action by the Government which attacked the exchange as being in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Insofar as this ruling was based on the finding that the Federal Communications Commission had no power to decide antitrust questions, other objections to the maintenance of the action by the Government fell of their own weight. Before it could be found that the Government was collaterally estopped by the FCC approval of the exchange, it had to be determined whether or not in the FCC proceeding the Government had authority to represent its antitrust interests in a final adjudication of the issue in controversy. However, the issue in controversy before the FCC was whether the exchange would serve the public interest and not whether the exchange violated the antitrust laws. Consequently, there could be no estoppel. Res judicata principles were even more inapposite. Similarly, the suit could not be barred on the theory of laches. There could be no laches unless the Government was under a duty to go forward in the FCC proceeding. Since the FCC had no power to decide the antitrust issues, the Government had no duty either to enter the FCC proceeding or to seek review of the FCC approval. It had been contended that the delay between the approval and the filing of the antirust suit barred the suit.

[Issue]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text].

Appellees, Radio Corporation of America and National Broadcasting Company, are defendants in this civil antitrust action brought by the Government under § 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 4. After holding a preliminary hearing on three of appellees' affirmative defenses to that action, the federal district judge dismissed the complaint, 158 F. Supp. 333. The Government appealed directly to this Court under the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. § 29. The principal question presented is whether approval by the Federal Communications Commission of appellees' agreement to exchange their Cleveland television station for one in Philadelphia bars this independent action by the Government which attacks the exchange as being in furtherance of a conspiracy to violate the federal antitrust laws.

[Government's Complaint]

The Government's complaint generally alleged the following facts. In 1954, National Broadcasting Company (NBC), a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio Corporation of America (RCA), owned five very high frequency (VHF) television stations. The stations were located in the following market areas: New York, which is the country's largest market; Chicago, second; Los Angeles, third; Cleveland, tenth; and Washington, D. C., eleventh. According to the Government's allegations, in March 1954, NBC and RCA originated a continuing conspiracy to acquire stations in five of the eight largest market areas in the country. Since Philadelphia is the country's fourth largest market area, acquisition of a Philadelphia station in exchange for appellees' Cleveland or Washington station would achieve one goal of the conspiracy.[1]

One Philadelphia station, WPTZ, was owned by Westinghouse Broadcasting Company. This station and a Westinghouse-owned station in Boston were affiliated with the NBC network. In addition, Westinghouse desired NBC affiliation for a station to be acquired in Pittsburgh. In order to force Westinghouse to exchange its Philadelphia station for NBC's Cleveland station, it is alleged that NBC threatened Westinghouse with loss of the network affiliation of its Boston and Philadelphia stations, and threatened to withhold affiliation from its Pittsburgh station to be acquired. NBC also threatened to withhold network affiliation from any new VHF or UHF (ultra high frequency) stations which Westinghouse might acquire. By thus using its leverage as a network, NBC is alleged to have forced Westinghouse to agree to the exchange contract under consideration. Under the terms of that contract NBC was to acquire the Philadelphia station, while Westinghouse was to acquire NBC's Cleveland station plus three million dollars.

The Government asked that the conspiracy be declared violative of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1, that the appellees be divested of such assets as the District Court deemed appropriate, that "such other and additional relief as may be proper" be awarded, and that the Government recover costs of the suit.

[Defenses—FCC Action]

Appellees' affirmative defenses arose out of the fact that the exchange had been approved by the Federal Communications Commission.[2] FCC approval was required under § 310(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 1086, as amended, 66 Stat. 716, 47 U. S. C. § 310(b). Under that Section, appellees filed applications setting forth the terms of the transaction and the reasons for requesting the exchange. The Commission instituted proceedings to determine whether the exchange met the statutory requirements of § 310, that the "public interest, convenience and necessity" would be served. They were not adversary proceedings. After extensive investigation of the transaction, the Commission was still not satisfied that the exchange would meet the statutory standards, and over three dissents, issued letters seeking additional information on various subjects, including antitrust problems, under § 309(b) of the [1] Under present FCC regulations, NBC can own no more than five stations, 47 CFR, 1958, § 3.636, so that acquisition of a new station would require that an existing one be relinquished.

Act. After receiving answers to the letters, the Commission, without holding a hearing, on December 21, 1955, granted the application to exchange stations.[3]

It was stipulated below that in passing upon the application, the Commission had all the information before it which has now been made the basis of the Government's complaint. It further appears that during the FCC proceedings the Justice Department was informed as to the evidence in the FCC's possession. It was further stipulated, and we assume, that the FCC decided all issues relative to the antitrust laws that were before it, and that the Justice Department had the right to request a hearing under § 309(b), to file a protest under § 309(c), to seek a rehearing under § 405, and to seek judicial review of the decision under § 402 (b). See Far East Conference v. United States [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,241, 342 U. S. 570, 576; U. S. ex rel. Chapman v. Federal Power Comm'n, 345 U. S. 153, 155, 156. The Department of Justice took none of these actions. Accordingly, on January 22, 1956, after the period in which the Department could have sought review had expired, NBC and Westinghouse consummated the exchange transaction according to their contract. The Department did not file the present complaint until December 4, 1956, over ten months later.

Against this background, appellees assert that the FCC had authority to pass on the antitrust questions presented, and, in any case, that the regulatory scheme of the Communications Act has so displaced that of the Sherman Act that the FCC had primary jurisdiction to license the exchange transaction, with the result that any attack for antitrust reasons on the exchange transaction must have been by direct review of the license grant. Relying on this premise, they then contend that the only method available to the Government for redressing its antitrust grievances was to intervene in the FCC proceedings; that since it did not, the antitrust issues were determined adversely to it when the exchange was approved, so that it is barred by principles of collateral estoppel and res judicata; and that in any case the long delay between approval of the exchange and filing of this suit bars the suit because of laches.

I.

[Communications Act]

Whether these contentions are to prevail depends substantially upon the extent to which Congress authorized the FCC to pass on antitrust questions, and this in turn requires examination of the relevant legislative history. Two sections of the Communications Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 1064, as amended, 47 U. S. C. § 151 et seq., deal specifically with antitrust considerations, Sections 311 and 313:

> "Sec. 311. The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313.
> "Sec. 313. All laws of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies and to combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade are hereby declared to be applicable to the manufacture and sale of and to trade in radio apparatus and devices entering into or affecting interstate or foreign commerce and to interstate or foreign radio communications. Whenever in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought under the provisions of any of said laws or in any proceedings brought to enforce or to review findings and orders of the Federal Trade Commission or other governmental agency in respect of any matters as to which said Commission or other governmental agency is by law authorized to act, any licensee shall be found guilty of the violation of the provisions of such laws or any of them, the court, in addition to the penalties imposed by said laws, may adjudge, order, and/or decree that the license of such licensee shall, as of the date the decree or judgment becomes finally effective or as of such other date as the said decree shall fix, be revoked and that all rights under such license shall thereupon cease: Provided, however, That such licensee shall have the same right of appeal or review as is provided by law in respect of other decrees and judgments of said court."

[3] Commissioner Bartley dissented from the action, urging that hearings should have been held because the facts theretofore revealed by the investigation had raised "serious questions as to the desirability and possible legality of the competitive practices followed by the network in obtaining dominance of major broadcast markets." He suggested that there was "a substantial question whether, once the Commission grants its approval to these transfers, certain provisions of the Clayton Act (viz. 15 U. S. C. Section 18) might prevent Federal Trade Commission and Justice Department from taking any effective action in the event they concluded that possible violations of the antitrust laws were involved." (Emphasis by the Commissioner.) Commissioner Doerfer, joined by Commissioner Mack, responded that it was unnecessary to hold a hearing because the investigation had fully revealed the facts. He concluded, however: "It is difficult to see how approval of this exchange may effectively preclude other governmental agencies from examining into this or any other transaction of the network companies."

[Legislative History]

These provisions were taken from the Radio Act of 1927.[4] They appear to have originated in a bill drafted by Congressman White of Maine, H. R. 5589, 69th Cong., 1st Sess. What is now § 311 appeared as the third paragraph of § 2(C)[5] of that bill, while what is now § 313 appeared as § 2(G).[6] In the hearings on the bill before the House Committee, Congressman Reid of Illinois asked Judge Davis, Department of Commerce representative, whether the Secretary of Commerce[7] had any discretion to refuse a license under § 2(C) (now § 311) to a party which the Secretary believed to be violating the antitrust laws. The following colloquy ensued:[8]

Judge Davis. "He has no discretion under this act."

Congressman Reid. "They have to be found guilty first; is that the idea?"

Congressman White. "Yes. In other words, I tried to get away from placing upon the secretary the determination of a judicial question of that character. That involves, of course, a determination as to the facts; it requires a knowledge of the law and it requires an application of the law to the facts, and then it requires the exercise of judicial powers, if you leave that in his discretion, and I tried to lift it away from the secretary."

Later on, the question arose as to what grounds were available to the Secretary to revoke licenses under § 2(F) (now § 312). After Congressman White enumerated one statutory ground, Congressman Reid observed:[9]

"Yes; but you do not include unlawful combinations and monopolies and contracts or agreements in restraint of trade. That is not covered."

Congressman White. "No; not in that section."

Congressman Davis of Tennessee. "Those are covered in 'G' [now § 313]."

Congressman White. "That is a judicial question and we have left it to the courts to pass on that."

This failure to include a provision permitting refusal of a license for antitrust violations in the absence of a judicial determination caused Congressman Davis to insert a lengthy Minority Report on H. R.

[5] "The Secretary of Commerce is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person, firm, company, or corporation, or any subsidiary thereof, which has been found guilty by any Federal court of unlawfully monopolizing or attempting to unlawfully monopolize radio communication, directly or indirectly, through the control of the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means. The granting of a license shall not estop the United States or any person aggrieved from prosecuting such person, firm, company, or corporation for a violation of the law against unlawful restraints and monopolies and/or combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade."

[6] "All laws of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies and to combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade are hereby declared to be applicable to the manufacture and sale of and to trade in radio apparatus and devices entering into or affecting interstate or foreign commerce and to interstate or foreign radio communications. Whenever in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought under the provisions of any of said laws or in any proceedings brought to enforce or to review findings and orders of the Federal Trade Commission or other governmental agency in respect of any matters as to which said commission or other governmental agency is by law authorized to act, any licensee shall be found guilty of the violation of the provisions of such laws or any of them, the court, in addition to the penalties imposed by said laws, may adjudge, order, and/or decree that the license of such licensee shall, as of the date the decree or judgment becomes finally effective or as of such other date as the said decree shall fix, be revoked and that all rights under such license shall thereupon cease: Provided, however, That such licensee shall have the same right of appeal or review as is provided by law in respect of other decrees and judgments of said court."

[7] As then phrased, the Act was to be administered primarily by the Secretary of Commerce.

9108, which was old H. R. 5589 reintroduced by Congressman White.[10] Consequently, when the bill (then numbered H. R. 9971) reached the floor of the House, Congressman Davis attempted to insert a number of amendments which would have strengthened the antitrust aspects of the bill. See 67 Cong. Rec. 5484, 5485. All were defeated, including an amendment to § 2(C) (now § 311) which would have required refusal of a license to any company "found by any Federal court or the commission to have been unlawfully monopolizing" radio communication. (Italics supplied.) See 67 Cong. Rec. 5501-5504, 5555.

Thus, in the Senate consideration of a version of the bill, when asked whether there was "anything in the bill providing in case the applicant for a permit is found to be acting in violation of the Sherman antitrust law or controls a monopoly that the commission may pass upon the question," Senator Dill of Washington, who was in charge of the bill in the Senate, replied:[11]

> "The bill provides that in case anybody has been convicted under the Sherman antitrust law or any other law relating to monopoly he shall be denied a license; but the bill does not attempt to make the commission the judge as to whether or not certain conditions constitute a monopoly; it rather leaves that to the court."

Congress adjourned before any action could be taken on the bill at that session. At the next session, a Conference Committee reported out the version of the bills which became the Radio Act of 1927, with now § 311 being § 13 of the Act and now § 313 being § 15 of the Act, despite the vigorous but unsuccessful opposition of Congressman Davis in the House, see, e. g., 68 Cong. Rec. 2577, and Senator Pittman of Nevada in the Senate. See, e. g., 68 Cong. Rec. 3032, 3034.

Only one change was made in those two Sections when they were incorporated into the Communications Act. Section 311 was modified merely to authorize rather than to require the revocation of a license by the Commission after a court had found a radio broadcaster in violation of the antitrust laws, but had not ordered its license revoked, 48 Stat. 1086. In all other respects §§ 13 and 15 of the Radio Act were identical with, and had the same purpose as, §§ 311 and 313 of the Communications Act.[12]

While this history compels the conclusion that the FCC was not intended to have any authority to pass on antitrust violations as such, it is equally clear that courts retained jurisdiction to pass on alleged antitrust violations irrespective of Commission action. Thus § 311, as originally enacted in 1934, 48 Stat. 1086, read as follows:

> "The Commission is hereby directed to refuse a station license and/or the permit hereinafter required for the construction of a station to any person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) whose license has been revoked by a court under section 313, and is hereby authorized to refuse such station license and/or permit to any other person (or to any person directly or indirectly controlled by such person) which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court of unlawfully monopolizing or attempting unlawfully to monopolize, radio communication, directly or indirectly, through the control of the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus, through exclusive traffic arrangements, or by any other means, or to have been using unfair methods of competition. The granting of a license shall not estop the United States or any person aggrieved from proceeding against such person for violating the law against unfair methods of competition or for a violation of the law against unlawful restraints and monopolies and/or combinations, contracts, or agreements in restraint of trade, or from instituting proceedings for the dissolution of such corporation." (Emphasis supplied.)

[Contentions]

Appellees attempt to avoid the force of the italicized sentence in two ways. First, they point to its repeal in the 1952 amendments to the Act, 66 Stat. 716. That repeal was occasioned by objections from the industry that it was unfair for radio broadcasters who had been found in violation of the antitrust laws to be subject to license refusals by the Commission, even when the court as a part of its decree did not see fit to order the license revoked under § 313. See S. Rep. No. 142, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. 9. Congress accordingly repealed all of the Section following the first comma, including the italicized sentence. It apparently considered that inherent in the scheme of the Act was the right to challenge under the antitrust laws even transactions approved by the Commission, for the Conference Committee carefully noted that repeal of the italicized sentence would not curtail such a right:[13]

> "To the extent that this section of the conference substitute will eliminate from section 311 of the present law the last sentence, which is quoted above, the committee of conference does not feel that this is of any legal significance. It is the view of the members of the conference committee that the last sentence of the present section 311 is surplusage and that by omitting it from the present law the power of the United States or of any private person to proceed under the antitrust laws would not be curtailed or affected in any way."

Thus, appellees' reliance on repeal of the last sentence of § 311 is clearly misplaced.

Second, appellees urge that the italicized sentence as originally enacted had a very narrow scope; that it was intended to insure only that the granting of a license would not estop the Government from prosecuting antitrust violations subsequent to the transaction giving rise to the license proceeding, or of which the transaction was merely a small part. They argue that the sentence was intended to permit only actions such as in Packaged Programs v. Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., 255 F. 2d 708. But the language of the sentence cannot be naturally read in such a narrow manner, and it would take persuasive legislative history so to restrict its application. Appellees point to no such history, nor to any cases so holding.

[FCC Power]

Thus, the legislative history of the Act reveals that the Commission was not given the power to decide antitrust issues as such, and that Commission action was not intended to prevent enforcement of the antitrust laws in federal courts.

II.

[Primary Jurisdiction]

We now reach the question whether, despite the legislative history, the over-all regulatory scheme of the Act requires invocation of a primary jurisdiction doctrine. The doctrine originated with Mr. Justice (later Chief Justice) White in Texas & Pacific R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U. S. 426. It was grounded on the necessity for administrative uniformity, and, in that particular case, for maintenance of uniform rates to all shippers.[14] A second reason for the doctrine was suggested by Mr. Justice Brandeis in Great Northern R. Co. v. Merchants Elevator Co., 259 U. S. 285, 291, where he pointed to the need for administrative skill "commonly to be found only in a body of experts" in handling the "intricate facts" of, in that case, the transportation industry.

[Applicability of Doctrine]

Thus, when questions arose as to the applicability of the doctrine to transactions allegedly violative of the antitrust laws, particularly involving fully regulated industries whose members were forced to charge only reasonable rates approved by the appropriate commission, this Court found the doctrine applicable.[15] United States v. Pacific & Arctic R. Co., 228 U. S. 87; Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 260 U. S. 156; United States Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S.

[14] We recently explained the nature of the doctrine in United States v. Western Pacific R. Co., 352 U. S. 59, 63-64:

"The doctrine of primary jurisdiction, like the rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies, is concerned with promoting proper relationships between the courts and administrative agencies charged with particular regulatory duties. 'Exhaustion' applies where a claim is cognizable in the first instance by an administrative agency alone; judicial interference is withheld until the administrative process has run its course. 'Primary jurisdiction,' on the other hand, applies where a claim is originally cognizable in the courts, and comes into play whenever enforcement of the claim requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body; in such a case the judicial process is suspended pending referral of such issues to the administrative body for its views."

[15] See, generally, 3 Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, §§ 19.05, 19.06; Jaffe, Primary Jurisdiction Reconsidered. The Anti-Trust Laws, 102 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 577; Schwartz, Legal Restriction of Competition in the Regulated Industries: An Abdication of Judicial Responsibility, 67 Harv. L. Co., 284 U. S. 474; Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439; Far East Conference v. United States [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,241], 342 U. S. 570. At the same time, this Court carefully noted that the doctrine did not apply when the action was only for the purpose of dissolving the conspiracy through which the allegedly invalid rates were set, for in such a case there would be no interference with rate structures or a regulatory scheme.[16] United States v. Pacific & Arctic R. Co., supra; Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra. The decisions sometimes emphasized the need for administrative uniformity and uniform rates, Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, while at other times, they emphasized the need for administrative experience in distilling the relevant facts in a complex industry as a foundation for later court action. United States Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., supra, and Far East Conference v. United States, supra, as explained in Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., 356 U. S. 481, 497-499.

The cases all involved, however, common carriers by rail and water. These carriers could charge only the published tariff, and that tariff must have been found by the appropriate agency to have been reasonable. Free rate competition was modified by federal controls. The Court's concern was that the agency which was expert in, and responsible for, administering those controls should be given the opportunity to determine questions within its special competence as an aid to the courts in resolving federal antitrust policy and federal regulatory patterns into a cohesive whole. That some resolution is necessary when the antitrust policy of free competition is placed beside a regulatory scheme involving fixed rates is obvious. Cf. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,203], 321 U. S. 67. Accordingly, this Court consistently held that when rates and practices relating thereto were challenged under the antitrust laws, the agencies had primary jurisdiction to consider the reasonableness of such rates and practices in the light of the many relevant factors including alleged antitrust violations, for otherwise sporadic action by federal courts would disrupt an agency's delicate regulatory scheme, and would throw existing rate structures out of balance.

[Television Industry]

While the television industry is also a regulated industry, it is regulated in a very different way. That difference is controlling. Radio broadcasters, including television broadcasters, see Allen B. Dumont Laboratories v. Carroll, 184 F. 2d 153, are not included in the definition of common carriers in § 3(h) of the Communications Act, 47 U. S. C. § 153(h) as are telephone and telegraph companies. Thus the extensive controls, including rate regulation, of Title II of the Communciations Act, 47 U. S. C. §§ 201-222, do not apply.[17] Television broadcasters remain free to set their own advertising rates. As this Court said in Federal Communications Comm'n v. Sanders Bros. Radio Station, 309 U. S. 470, 474:

> "In contradistinction to communication by telephone and telegraph, which the Communications Act recognizes as a common carrier activity and regulates accordingly in analogy to the regulation of rail and other carriers by the Interstate [16] This followed because, in the words of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, 161, ". . . a combination of carriers to fix reasonable and nondiscriminatory rates may be illegal." This Court in Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra, took the position that shippers were entitled to have rates filed by carriers who were not parties to a conspiracy, even though the rates filed were the lowest which would be found to be reasonable. The risk that future filings would be at the uppermost limits of the zone of reasonableness was too great, and damage from the conspiratorial filings was presumed to flow. Of course, when the agency is permitted to exempt from antitrust coverage rates filed cooperatively, the doctrine equally applies to an attack on the alleged conspiracy. United States Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., supra; Far East Conference v. United States, supra.

[17] Under Title II, common carriers are required to furnish communications service on reasonable request and may charge only just and reasonable rates, § 201. Such carriers must file rates with the FCC, and can charge only the rates as filed, § 203. The Commission may hold hearings on the lawfulness of filed rates, § 204, and after hearings may itself set the applicable rate, § 205. Cf. 49 U. S. C. § 15 et seq., 46 U. S. C. § 817. In view of this extensive regulation, Congress has provided that certain actions of telephone and telegraph companies may be exempted from the antitrust laws by the Commission, § 221(a) and § 222(c)(1). Cf. 49 U. S. C. §§ 5(11), 5b(9) and 46 U. S. C. § 814. Such exemptions are, however, subject to review, see Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., 356 U. S. 481.

> Commerce Commission, the Act recognizes that broadcasters are not common carriers and are not to be dealt with as such. Thus the Act recognizes that the field of broadcasting is one of free competition. The sections dealing with broadcasting demonstrate that Congress has not, in its regulatory scheme, abandoned the principle of free competition as it has done in the case of railroads. . . ."

Thus, there being no pervasive regulatory scheme, and no rate structures to throw out of balance, sporadic action by federal courts can work no mischief. The justification for primary jurisdiction accordingly disappears.[18]

[Nature of Exchange]

The facts of this case illustrate that analysis. Appellees, like unregulated business concerns, made a business judgment as to the desirability of the exchange. Like unregulated concerns, they had to make this judgment with knowledge that the exchange might run afoul of the antitrust laws. Their decision varied from that of an unregulated concern only in that they also had to obtain the approval of a federal agency. But scope of that approval in the case of the FCC was limited to the statutory standard, "public interest, convenience, and necessity." See, generally, Federal Radio Comm'n v. Nelson Bros. Co., 289 U. S. 266; Federal Communications Comm'n v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134; Federal Communications Comm'n v. Sanders Bros. Radio Station, supra; Federal Communications Comm'n v. RCA Communications, 346 U. S. 86. The monetary terms of the exchange were set by the parties, and were of concern to the Commission only as they might have affected the ability of the parties to serve the public. Even after approval, the parties were free to complete or not to complete the exchange as their sound business judgment dictated. In every sense, the question faced by the parties was solely one of business judgment (as opposed to regulatory coercion), save only that the Commission must have found that the "public interest" would be served by their decision to make the exchange. No pervasive regulatory scheme was involved.

[FCC—Antitrust Considerations]

This is not to imply that federal antitrust policy may not be considered in determining whether the "public interest, convenience, and necessity" will be served by proposed action of a broadcaster, for this Court has held the contrary.[19] National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U. S. 190, 222-224. Moreover, in a given case the Commission might find that antitrust considerations alone would keep the statutory standard from being met, as when the publisher of the sole newspaper in an area applies for a license for the only available radio and television facilities, which, if granted, would give him a monopoly of that area's major media of mass communication. See 98 Cong. Rec. 7399; Mansfield Journal Co. v. Federal Communications Comm'n [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,555], 86 U. S. App. D. C. 102, 107, 108, 180 F. 2d 28, 33, 34.

[18] This conclusion is re-enforced by the Commission's disavowal of either the power or the desire to foreclose the Government from antitrust actions aimed at transactions which the Commission has licensed. This position was taken both before the district judge below, and in a Supplemental Memorandum filed in this Court, page 8:

"Concurrent with the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice to enforce the Sherman Act, the Commission, of course, has jurisdiction to designate license applications for hearing on public interest questions arising out of facts which might also constitute violations of the antitrust laws. This does not mean, however, that its action on these public interest questions of communications policy is a determination of the antitrust issues as such. Thus, while the Commission may deny applications as not in the public interest where violations of the Sherman Act have been determined to exist, its approval of transactions which might involve Sherman Act violations is not a determination that the Sherman Act has not been violated, and therefore cannot forestall the United States from subsequently bringing an antitrust suit challenging those transactions."

Nor was this position taken merely for the purposes of this litigation, for it has been the view of the Commission over a period of years. See Report on Uniform Policy as to Violation by Applicants of Laws of United States, FCC Docket No. 9572 (1950), 1 Pike and Fischer, Radio Regulation, Part III, 91:495; National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U. S. 190. Since, as Mr. Justice Brandeis observed, the doctrine of primary jurisdiction rests in part upon the need for the skill of a "body of experts," it would be odd to impose the doctrine when the experts deny the relevance of their skill.

[Estoppel—Laches]

The other contentions of appellees fall of their own weight if the FCC has no power to decide antitrust questions. Thus, before we can find the Government collaterally estopped by the FCC licensing, we must find "whether or not in the earlier litigation the representative of the United States had authority to represent its interests in a final adjudication of the issue in controversy." Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,037], 310 U. S. 381, 403. (Emphasis supplied.) But the issue in controversy before the Commission was whether the exchange would serve the public interest, not whether § 1 of the Sherman Act had been violated. Consequently, there could be no estoppel. Res judicata principles are even more inapposite.

Similarly, there could be no laches unless the Government was under some sort of a duty to go forward in the FCC proceedings. But unless the FCC had power to decide the antitrust issues, and we have held that it did not, the Government had no duty either to enter the FCC proceedings or to seek review of the license grant.[20]

[Reversed]

Accordingly, the judgment of the District Court dismissing the action is reversed and the case is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

[Concurring Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN concurs in the result, believing, as he understands part "I" of the Court's opinion to hold, that a Commission determination of "public interest, convenience, and necessity" cannot either constitute a binding adjudication upon any antitrust issues that may be involved in the Commission's proceeding or serve to exempt a licensee pro tanto from the antitrust laws, and that these considerations alone are dispositive of this appeal.

Mississippi Antitrust Law

Combinations and Conspiracies—Application of State Antitrust Laws to Labor Unions—Jurisdiction of State Courts and National Labor Relations Board—Existence of Labor Dispute Affecting Interstate Commerce.—A Mississippi trial court had no jurisdiction to enjoin a fishermen's labor union from picketing the plant of a company which used fish caught by the union's members in producing cat food. A labor dispute was involved which affected interstate commerce, and jurisdiction was therefore vested in the National Labor Relations Board. The company charged that the union was picketing the plant for the unlawful purpose of restraining trade and monopolizing the production of fish in violation of the Mississippi law regulating trusts, combines, and labor. The union claimed that it sought to have the company's employees join the union so that an agreement might be reached with the company obligating it to buy fish only from union members. There was no dispute between the company and its employees, and no pressure was brought to bear upon the employees with reference to their joining or not joining the union. However, a "labor dispute," as defined in the Labor Management Relations Act, includes not only a controversy concerning the terms or conditions of employment but also a controversy "concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or [20] It is relevant to note that the Commission is not expressly required to give the Government notice that antitrust issues have been raised in a § 310(b) proceeding. For the defendant: Morse & Morse, Gulfport, Miss.

[Parties]

HOLMES, Justice [In full text]: The litigation involves a controversy between The Quaker Oats Company and the Fishermen and Allied Workers, an affiliate of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO.

The Quaker Oats Company is a New Jersey corporation qualified to do business, and doing business, in Pascagoula, Jackson County, Mississippi.

The Fishermen and Allied Workers, an affiliate of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, is a labor union having its principal place of business in Biloxi, Harrison County, Mississippi, and doing business in Jackson County, Mississippi.

[Action to Enjoin Picketing]

The Quaker Oats Company, as complainant, instituted this action in the Chancery Court of Jackson County, Mississippi, against the said labor union and its president and secretary as defendants, seeking the issuance of an injunction to enjoin the defendants from picketing the complainant's place of business in Pascagoula, Mississippi.

[Mississippi Antitrust Laws]

The original and amended bills of complaint alleged that on November 16, 1957, the complainant was engaged in the manufacture of Puss'n Boots Cat Food from trash fish as one of its ingredients; that at said time the complainant's employees were members of the International Chemical Workers Union, Local No. 504, with which union the complainant had a contract; that the complainant never had a contract with the defendant union and has never had a controversy with the defendant union; that on the morning of November 16, 1957, the defendants caused to be placed pickets on the premises of the complainant bearing placards or signs inscribed as follows: "Quaker Oats Company unfair to organized labor. AFL-CIO, Fishermen and Allied Workers"; that the said defendants were continuing to so picket the premises of the complainant; that said picketing was being done for the following unlawful purposes: (1) To damage or destroy the complainant's business in Pascagoula, Mississippi, pursuant to an unlawful conspiracy; (2) to intimidate the complainant's employees and persons supplying complainant with trash fish by using placards or other writing, or verbally attempting by threats, direct or implied, to induce the employees of the complainant to abandon their employment; (3) and the defendants, in carrying out said picketing, were wrongfully trespassing upon the property of the complainant; that the picketing was, in addition, for the following unlawful purposes: (a) To restrain trade and commerce, (b) to limit or increase the price of complainant's product, (c) to limit or reduce the production of complainant's product, (d) to hinder competition in the production or output of complainant's product, (e) to restrain or attempt to restrain the freedom of trade or production of complainant, (f) to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, the production of raw materials used by complainant in the manufacture of its product and otherwise conspiring to violate the laws of the State of Mississippi regulating trusts, combine and labor; that the complainant's product was transported to and from the complainant's premises by the L. & N. Railroad Company, which had a service track into the complainant's place of business, and by trucks, and that the picketing was having the effect of interfering with the transportation of merchandise or products to and from the complainant's place of business, and that if the picketing is permitted to continue, it will seriously and injuriously affect the business of the complainant for the reason that the train crews and truck drivers have refused to cross the picket line; that the controversy between the complainant and the defendants is not a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce, and that the State court is vested with jurisdiction to decide the same; that the complainant is entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from picketing the place of business of the complainant, and that unless the said defendants are so restrained, the complainant will suffer irreparable injury to its business, and that it is without an adequate remedy at law.

[Prior Proceedings]

The chancellor issued the temporary injunction as prayed for. The defendants answered the original and amended bills of complaint and denied the material allegations thereof, and moved the court to dissolve the temporary injunction and further filed a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, alleging that the controversy in question constituted a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce, and that the exclusive jurisdiction of such controversy was vested in the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 151, et seq.).

After a hearing, the chancellor overruled the plea to the jurisdiction of the court and the motion to dissolve the temporary injunction and entered a decree making the injunction permanent, and it is from this decree that this appeal is prosecuted.

[Jurisdiction—Existence of Labor Dispute]

The appellant contends on this appeal that the controversy involved is a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce within the purview of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, and that in the absence of violence, threats or coercion, the state court was without jurisdiction to adjudge the controversy, and that such jurisdiction was vested exclusively in the National Labor Relations Board. The appellee does not controvert this contention, or the authorities cited in support thereof, if it be conceded that the controversy involved is a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce. We need not, therefore, review the several cases cited by the appellant in support of its contention. But the appellee says that the controversy is not a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce within the purview of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 151, et seq.), and that, therefore, the doctrine of federal pre-emption does not apply, and the state court was not without jurisdiction to hear and determine the controversy.

[Issues]

The position of the parties, therefore, simplifies the issues presented to this Court for decision. We concern ourselves only with the questions whether or not the complainant was engaged in interstate commerce, and whether or not the controversy between the parties was a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce within the purview of the Labor Management Relations Act. It becomes pertinent in the consideration of these questions to consider the facts as disclosed by the record before us.

[Facts]

The appellee, The Quaker Oats Company, had its plant and principal place of business at Pascagoula, Mississippi. It employed approximately 103 employees who were inside workers at the plant. The company was engaged in the processing, production and distribution for sale of Puss'n Boots Cat Food. The product was processed and produced at the company's plant in Pascagoula, Mississippi, and was shipped out to different states by rail and truck for sale to customers. The ingredients used in the product were scrap fish and cereals. The product was put up in cans. The cereals came from The Quaker Oats Company in Memphis, Tennessee. The cans were obtained from the Continental Can Company of Harvey, Louisiana. The trash fish were bought by The Quaker Oats Company from George Castigliola, who with Vincent Castigliola was doing business as Castigliola Shrimp Company in Pascagoula, Mississippi. Under the terms of the agreement which The Quaker Oats Company had with George Castigliola, the fish, which were caught by fishermen who were members of the boat crews plying waters in the Gulf of Mexico, were delivered at the plant of The Quaker Oats Company and there unloaded by employees of the said company. They were unloaded by means of a suction hose and taken from the wharf to the scales where they were weighed and the weight tickets were taken to George Castigliola, who paid the boat owners for the fish. The fishermen who caught the fish were members of the defendant union. The owners of the boats were not. The Quaker Oats Company bought the fish from George Castigliola and had no contact or dealings with the boat owners or the fishermen insofar as concerned its purchase of the fish.

Under date of November 13, 1957, W. J. Higginbotham, Secretary of the defendant union, addressed the following letter to Mr. Leonard Davis, Manager of The Quaker Oats Company:

"Mr. Leonard Davis, Manager,
"Coast Fisheries,
"Pascagoula, Miss.

"Dear Sir:

"The Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, an Autonomous Union within the National Maritime Union are the successors of the Old Gulf Coast Shrimper's and Oysterman's Association. As you probably know, all of the Fishermen who fished for you when you first started operations in Pascagoula in 1952 were members of this Union. You also know that the Business Agent, Mr. Walter McVeay, scheduled the boats for your Agent. That when your production was limited, the Union, with the consent of your Agent, restricted each boat to five tons per boat per trip, etc. And relations between your company, your agent, and the Union were very cordial and we all prospered and grew larger. It has now been brought to our attention that an ever increasing number of outside boats have been brought in, thereby crowding out some of our local boats. Also that these outside boats are selling from three to five times more fish than the local boats. That our local fishermen are being replaced by Negro fishermen from other states. It is this discrimination by your agent that the Union is gravely concerned. Your agent has used and abused our local fishermen to the point that the Union must take immediate action, we therefore ask that you meet with us November 15, 1957 in your office to discuss the necessary steps to eliminate these unjust conditions and to draw up an agreement whereby the fishermen of Pascagoula may claim their seniority rights, working conditions, and other benefits to which they are entitled.

"Sincerely yours,
"s/s W. J. Higginbotham, Secretary"

[Picketing]

On the next day, November 14, 1957, Mr. Davis replied to said letter, acknowledging the receipt thereof and stating that such letter would be answered in due course. On November 15, Higginbotham and two others representing the defendant union called at Mr. Davis' office for the purpose of discussing the complaints set forth in Higginbotham's letter of November 13, but were told by Mr. Davis' secretary that he was busy. The next day, the defendant union placed pickets at the place of business of The Quaker Oats Company. The record is unsatisfactory as to whether or not the pickets actually trespassed upon the property of the Quaker Oats Company, but it is deducible from the evidence that if they did so trespass, it was of a minor nature. The picketing was otherwise peaceable. The record is clear that there was no dispute between The Quaker Oats Company and its employees, and no pressure was brought to bear by Quaker Oats Company upon the employees of said company with reference to joining or not joining the defendant union. It is undisputed from the evidence, however, that the presence of the pickets had the effect of preventing the train crews and the truck drivers from entering and leaving the premises of The Quaker Oats Company, and, therefore, had the effect of interfering with shipments moving in interstate commerce to and from the place of business of The Quaker Oats Company. This necessarily, if it had been permitted to continue, would have resulted in seriously injuring the business of The Quaker Oats Company and would have brought about a stoppage of or serious interference with the free flow of shipments to and from the place of business of The Quaker Oats Company.

[Definitions]

Considering the facts of the case before us and the questions here presented, it is important at this point to consider the definition of the terms "commerce," "affecting commerce," and "labor dispute in commerce" as set forth in the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (29 U. S. C. A., Sec. 152, subsections (6), (7), and (9). These definitions are as follows:

"(6) The term 'commerce' means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several states, or between the District of Columbia or any territory of the United States and any state or other territory, or between any foreign country and any state, territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia or any territory, or between points in the same state but through any other state or any territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign country."

"(7) The term 'affecting commerce' means in commerce, or burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce, or having led or tending to lead to a labor dispute burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce."

"(9) The term 'labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning terms, tenure or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relationship of employer and employee."

[Interstate Shipments]

We think it cannot be successfully maintained that the appellee was not engaged in interstate commerce, and that such commerce would not be affected by the dispute. The cat food which the appellee was engaged in processing and producing had for its ingredients scrap fish and cereals. The product was put up in cans. The cans were obtained from Louisiana; the cereals were obtained from Memphis, Tennessee, and the trash fish which were caught by the members of the defendant union in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, were bought by George Castigliola and in turn sold by him to The Quaker Oats Company. The product when processed was shipped out to various states by rail and trucks to customers in different states. That The Quaker Oats Company was engaged in interstate commerce is well supported by the authorities.

In the case of N. L. R. B. v. Richter's Bakery, (C. C. A. 5th, 1944), 140 F. 2d 870, certiorari denied, 64 S. Ct. 1267, 322 U. S. 754, 88 L. Ed. 1584, it was held that a bakery whose products were sold and consumed locally but which purchased from sources outside the state raw materials valued at more than $60,000 which constituted twenty-five percent of the value of all raw materials used was engaged in "commerce", and subject to the Labor Management Relations Act.

In the case of N. L. R. B. v. Schmidt Baking Company, (C. C. A. 1941) 122 F. 2d 162, a baking company purchasing most of its materials and supplies in other states than that wherein two of its three plants were located, making large interplant shipments of materials and supplies and delivering a substantial part of its products to customers outside the state was engaged in interstate commerce.

In the case of Wilson & Company v. N. L. R. B. (C. C. A. 1939), 103 F. 2d 243, it was held that a meat packer purchasing in the state most of the livestock slaughtered, but shipping most of the finished products outside the state, was engaged in interstate commerce so as to be amenable to the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board.

[Interference with Interstate Shipments]

The evidence is undisputed that the train crews and truck drivers engaged in transporting merchandise to and from The Quaker Oats Company's place of business were observing the picket lines, and thus it is apparent that the existence of the pickets affected injuriously shipments of merchandise to and from The Quaker Oats Company's place of business, and, therefore, resulted in a serious interference with the free flow of interstate commerce.

[Labor Objective]

The further question is presented, however, as to whether or not the controversy between The Quaker Oats Company and the defendant union was a labor dispute within the purview of the Labor Management Relations Act. We think that it was. The letter which Higginbotham first addressed to The Quaker Oats Company's manager complained that "an ever increasing number of outside boats have been brought in, thereby crowding out some of our local boats." It was further set forth in this letter that "these outside boats are selling from three to five times more fish than the local boats." The letter concluded by requesting a meeting on November 15, 1957, to "discuss the necessary steps to eliminate these unjust conditions and to draw up an agreement whereby the fishermen of Pascagoula may claim their seniority rights, working conditions and other benefits to which they are entitled." Higginbotham testified that one of the purposes of the union was to get the employees of Quaker Oats Company to join the Fishermen's union to the end that an agreement might be reached with The Quaker Oats Company obligating it to buy trash fish only from union members. Higginbotham further testified that there were legitimate complaints to be adjusted with reference to equal working hours, safety factors at the plant where the fish were unloaded, inaccurate scales on which the fish were weighed, deductions from the fishermen's pay for insurance and radio facilities. This evidence of Higginbotham shows that the dispute between the parties concerned terms or conditions of employment.

[Cases Considered]

The definition of the term "labor dispute" in the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 includes not only a controversy concerning the terms or conditions of employment but includes also a controversy "concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relationship of employer or employee." We think that the facts of this case bring the controversy here involved within the definition of a labor dispute as set forth in the act. Pertinent to this question and the facts of this case is the case of Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, Respondent, v. Chauffeurs, Teamsters and Helpers Local 200 of I. B. of T. C. W. & H. of A., A. F. L. and Another, Appellants: National Warehouse Corporation, Intervenor, 267 Wis. 356. We quote from the statement of the case as set forth in 267 Wis. pages 357-358, as follows:

"The complainant, National Warehouse Corporation, the intervenor here, is a Wisconsin corporation engaged in the general storage and warehousing business in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. It maintains terminal and platform facilities on a railroad siding and also receives shipments by over-the-road trucks. Its out-of-state supply of goods amounts to substantially in excess of $1,000,000 annually. The company employs 12 warehousemen, one of whom was a member of Local 200 of the Teamsters Union at the time of the organizational campaign here concerned. The employees of the company had been members of the union from 1937 until April 1948, when the contract expired. In 1948, a union authorization election was held by the National Labor Relations Board among the employees of the company, and the employees voted down the union by a vote of nine to two. In 1949, in the course of a general strike in the warehouse industry in Milwaukee, pickets appeared at the company premises. However, all of its employees continued to work, and upon the filing of charges of unfair labor practices against the union before the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, the union immediately stopped picketing the National Warehouse. As a result of the continuance of nonunion workers at their jobs during the strike, it is alleged that the bargaining effect of the representatives of the union was lessened. Therefore, in 1952, organizational activities were commenced at nonunion warehouses. Their employees were notified of meetings for the purpose of talking to them about the benefits of belonging to the union. The employees at National Warehouse did not attend the meeting of which they had been notified, and refused to listen to personal appeals. Thereupon the president of the union gave the order to picket the National Warehousing Corporation."

Further stating the facts in the Wisconsin case, the Court said:

"They (the pickets) remained in cars parked outside the premises and waited until trucks doing business with the warehouse approached, at which time they approached the truck drivers with their signs. The picketing was peaceful at all times. All of the warehouse employees continued working and passed back and forth through the picket line. There was no dispute between the employer and its employees, and no pressure was put upon its employees by the employer with regard to joining or not joining the union. However, the drivers of the trucks are practically all members of the union, and the effect of the picket line was that the movement of trucks in and out of the warehouse was entirely choked off, thus seriously injuring the business of complainant."

The Court citing the case of Garner v. Teamsters Union (1953), 346 U. S. 485, 74 S. Ct. 161, 98 L. Ed. 228, held that the National Labor Relations Board had exclusive jurisdiction of the controversy involved. In so holding, the Court further said:

"Picketing is one of the traditional labor techniques incidental to the achievement of collective bargaining, and therefore, if lawful, is protected by the act. It makes no difference that, as in the instant case, the picketing takes the form of 'stranger picketing,' i. e., picketing of a primary employer by a union which represents other units in the same industry than the unit being picketed. In the course of development of labor law, the area of a labor dispute has been extended from that of employer and employee in a single unit of an industry or craft to the entire industry or craft." (Italics ours)

Continuing, the Court said:

"It will be seen, then, that there existed a bona fide 'labor dispute' in the instant case arising from 'stranger picketing' of the primary employer; and the definition of 'labor dispute' in the act itself makes this fact clear when it says that a 'labor dispute' includes 'any controversy concerning terms, tenure, or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms of conditions of employment, regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.'"

A leading case which is analogous in its facts to the case at bar and which supports the conclusion which we have reached is the case of Garner v. Teamsters Union, 346 U. S. 485. The facts as stated by the Court are as follows:

"Petitioners were engaged in the trucking business and had 24 employees, four of whom were members of respondent union. The trucking operations formed a link to an interstate railroad. No controversy, labor dispute or strike was in progress, and at no time had petitioners objected to their employees joining the union. Respondents, however, placed rotating pickets, two at a time, at petitioners' loading platform. None were employees of petitioners. They carried signs reading: 'Local 776 Teamsters Union (A F of L) wants employees of Central Storage and Transfer Company to join them to gain union wages, hours, and working conditions.' Picketing was orderly and peaceful, but drivers for other carriers refused to cross the picket line and as most of petitioners' interchange of freight was with unionized concerns, their business fell off as much as ninety-five percent. The court below found that respondents' purpose in picketing was to coerce petitioners into compelling or influencing their employees to join the union."

The Court held that the dispute there involved was a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce and fell within the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board. The Court said:

"Congress has taken in hand this particular type of controversy where it affects interstate commerce. . . . It is not necessary or appropriate for us to surmise how the National Labor Relations Board might have decided this controversy had petitioners presented it to that body. The power and duty of primary decision lies with the Board, not with us."

The appellee relies strongly upon the case of Columbia River Company v. Hinton, [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,185], 315 U. S. 143. We think, however, that the essential facts in the Hinton case are materially different from the facts of the case at bar. As the Court pointed out in the Hinton case, "the controversy here is altogether between fish sellers and fish buyers." Thus it is manifest that the controversy there involved was not a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce within the prohibition of the federal act.

[Injunction Dissolved]

In the light of the views hereinbefore expressed, it is our conclusion that the court below was without jurisdiction to determine the question involved and that the controversy here involved was a labor dispute affecting interstate commerce and that jurisdiction of the same was vested in the National Labor Relations Board. Accordingly, the decree of the court below is reversed and judgment entered here dissolving the injunction and dismissing the suit of the appellee, and the cause is remanded for determination by the court below of the question of attorneys' fees claimed by the appellant on the dissolution of the injunction. Reversed and Judgment Here and Cause Remanded.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Violation as Defense to Trade-Mark Infringement Action—Misuse of Trade-Mark—Sufficiency—Motion to Strike.—In a trade-mark infringement action, a motion to strike an affirmative defense alleging that the trade-mark was being used "to violate the antitrust laws of the United States" was denied. The insufficiency of that defense was not clearly apparent and could better be determined at the trial. The owner of the trade-mark contended that the allegation, even if it were true, did not constitute a defense to an infringement action. While the law on the subject had not yet entirely crystallized, it appeared that the use of a trade-mark to violate the antitrust laws may constitute "unclean hands" and disentitle the trade-mark owner to relief.

BICKS, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Plaintiff seeks injunctive relief and damages contending that defendant has infringed its registered trade-mark "Sanitized"[1] and has engaged in unfair competition. The defendant has denied the material allegations of the complaint and has interposed seven affirmative defenses and three counterclaims. Sub judice are three motions—one by defendant for summary judgment and two by plaintiff addressed to the form and sufficiency of the responsive pleading.

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Third Affirmative Defense:

The third affirmative defense alleges that plaintiff's trade-mark "has been and/or is being used by plaintiff, its licensees and customers to violate the antitrust laws of the United States." Plaintiff contends that, assuming arguendo the truth of such allegation, it does not constitute a defense to the infringement action. Accordingly, plaintiff moves that said defense be stricken pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). While the law on this subject has not yet entirely crystallized, it appears that use of a trade-mark to violate the antitrust laws may constitute "unclean hands" and disentitle the trade-mark owner to relief. Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Price Violation by Enforcing Party.—A retailer was denied a temporary injunction to restrain violations of fair trade agreements where answering affidavits denied the so-called "bargain-price" sales and alleged affirmatively that the retailer's pharmacy itself sold the merchandise below fair trade prices. Confronted with conflicting affidavits, the court could not say that the retailer was entitled to the drastic relief of a restraining order. To grant such relief would give the retailer, prior to trial, all the relief it would be entitled to if it were successful at the trial.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3452.34.

[Fair Trade Action]

FRIEDMAN, Justice [In full text]: In an action to enjoin the defendant from violating a fair trade agreement with respect to the prices of certain drug commodities, plaintiffs move before this court for a temporary injunction, restraining and enjoining the defendant from selling or offering to sell any of the products at a price below those established in said contracts. The relief in the action is sought under the provisions of section 369a of the General Business Law. The moving papers assert that defendant has consistently sold various items of merchandise, described in said papers, at prices substantially below those set forth in the fair trade agreements. Affidavits substantiating these claims are made part of the moving papers. The answering affidavits deny the claimed sales at so-called bargain prices and allege affirmatively that the plaintiffs herein may not be heard to complain since plaintiffs' pharmacy itself sells the said merchandise below the so-called fair trade prices. An affidavit to that effect indicating such a purchase from plaintiffs' pharmacy and from others is part of the answering affidavits. Confronted with these conflicting affidavits, the court may not say that plaintiffs are entitled at this time to the drastic relief of a restraining order. To grant such relief at this time would give to the plaintiffs, prior to the trial, all of the relief to which it would be entitled if it was successful upon trial, and our courts have consistently held that such may not be done. In Weinberg v. Bennett (122 N. Y. S. 2d 383) the Appellate Division in this department affirmed an order which denied plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction under section 369a of the General Business Law. There seems to be nothing in the papers before the court which indicates that these plaintiffs are entitled to any different disposition. Accordingly, the motion is in all respects denied.

MEYER, Justice [In full text]: In an action for an injunction for alleged violations of section 369(a) of the General Business Law (Fair Trade Law) the plaintiffs move for a temporary injunction restraining the defendants from selling certain patent medicines, cosmetics and other items below the retail prices fixed by the manufacturers, wholesalers and distributors of said items. The defendants not only deny the advertising or the sale below the minimum price of the items specified in the plaintiffs' papers, but they aver (1) that the action has not been brought in good faith and (2) that the plaintiffs have not complied with the Fair Trade Law as to the sale of similar items. Upon the papers submitted, the court finds that the plaintiffs have not shown a clear right to injunctive relief before trial. Moreover, if the plaintiffs in turn have violated the same statute it would be an abuse of discretion to grant such relief (Frasca v. Wilson, 2 App. Div. 2d 762). Motion denied.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Penalties for Violation of FTC Order—Motions for New Trial—Additional Findings of Fact—Stay of Execution.—A manufacturer of greeting cards was denied a motion for a new trial after a judgment had been rendered against it for $10,600 for violating a Federal Trade Commission order. The motion was ostensibly on the ground that the judgment was contrary to the weight of the evidence, but the manufacturer's brief disclosed that it was not so much the weight of the evidence that was questioned, but rather the court's interpretation of the scope of the Federal Trade Commission order. The findings of fact were supported by substantial evidence. Also, the manufacturer's motions for additional findings of fact and for a stay of execution pending determination of the motions were denied. The requested additional findings of fact were not material to the court's decision, and the stay of execution was not necessary since the time for appeal did not begin to run until the determination of the motions.

Memorandum Re: Motion for a New Trial, Additional Findings of Fact and for a Stay of Execution Pending the Disposition of This Motion

[Motions]

Weick, Judge [In full text]: Defendant has filed a motion for a new trial (Rule 59(a) Federal Rules of Civil Procedure) and for additional findings of fact (Rule 52(b) Federal Rules of Civil Procedure) and for a stay of execution pending the disposition of this motion.

A judgment for $10,600 was rendered against defendant in an action to enforce penalties for violation of a Federal Trade Commission order.

[Motion for New Trial]

Defendant's motion for a new trial is ostensibly on the ground that the judgment is contrary to the weight of the evidence.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

However, the brief clearly discloses that it is not so much the weight of the evidence, but rather the Court's interpretation of the scope of the Federal Trade Commission's order, that is questioned.

There is one point that should be made clear.

Defendant appears to be under the impression that it is free to remount competitor's cards taken from a retailer's stock, even though a specimen card had been mounted on a competitor's identifying mount. It is defendant's belief that so long as the display card itself is not disturbed there is no violation of the Order.

This view is entirely misconceived. If such a course of conduct were to be condoned it would allow defendant to circumvent the Order in a manner almost childlike in its simplicity. Stated classically, this would achieve by indirection that which cannot be done directly.

The Commission's Order gives defendant the right to remount competitor's cards on blank mounts only when the competitor's cards had previously been displayed on blank mounts or on no mounts at all.

The only real question of fact which defendant poses goes to the transaction under Count 4 relating to the destruction of competitor's cards. Defendant presents a good argument in support of its position, but not good enough to convince the Court that its findings of fact are clearly erroneous. The findings of fact are supported by substantial evidence.

The motion under Rule 59(a) is denied.

[Findings of Fact]

The requested additional findings of fact are not material to the Court's decision. Many of them stand uncontroverted on the record, and may be presented on appeal in that manner. If a Court were to adopt as findings of fact the many minute details not germane to a decision, its opinion would be unduly lengthy. Findings of fact should be concise and relevant to the issues.

The motion under Rule 52(b) is denied.

[Penalties]

Defendant also complains of the amount of the penalties assessed on Counts 3, 4 and 5. Count 4 involved violations of Paragraphs A, B and F and the penalty was fixed accordingly. Counts 3 and 5 were founded on violations of Paragraph F. The $2,500 penalty on each of these counts was assessed after weighing the various factors involved. Defendant should bear in mind that had its acts been flagrant violations of the Order it would have been fined $5,000 on each of these counts. The Court felt that $2,500 was a reasonable fine in view of all the facts and circumstances in the case.

[Stay of Execution]

Finally, a motion was presented for stay of execution under Rule 62(b) of the Federal Rules. Defendant states that this is necessary to preserve its right of appeal.

Under the provisions of Rule 73(a) defendant's time for appeal does not begin to run until the determination of these very motions. Therefore, there is no necessity for this relief to be granted, on the ground that it is requested, and the motion is, therefore, denied.

[Motions Overruled]

Defendant's motion for a new trial, for additional findings of fact and for a stay of execution is overruled.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Production of Evidence—Interrogatories.—A motion picture exhibitor, suing for damages to his business by reason of an alleged conspiracy, was directed to answer interrogatories requiring him to state (1) the theory to be used in arriving at his damages and (2) the method by which his damages were computed. The exhibitor had contended that the action was assigned for trial within a short period and that the interrogatories came too late. However, the exhibitor's objection to a third interrogatory requesting the exact amount of damages claimed to have been suffered by him for each calendar year during the period 1951 through 1954 was sustained. His counsel stated that due to the press of business there was no time to prepare the calculation which the interrogatory would require.

[Interrogatories]

Boyd Sloan, District Judge [In full text]: The distributor defendants propound to plaintiff the following interrogatories:

"1. State the theory to be used by plaintiff in arriving at his damages.

"2. State the method by which such damages are computed.

"3. State the exact amount of damages claimed to have been suffered by the plaintiff for each calendar year during the period 1951 through 1954."

[Objections]

The plaintiff objects thereto on the ground that the action has been assigned for trial on February 16, 1959, and that these interrogatories come too late and would not be of any particular value to the defendants since they do not ask for facts but for theory and method.

Plaintiff's counsel states that due to press of business he would not have time to prepare a calculation which Interrogatory No. 3 would require.

These objections are now before the Court for determination.

[Ruling]

The objections to Interrogatories Nos. 1 and 2 are overruled and plaintiff is directed to answer same. The objection to Interrogatory No. 3 is sustained and the plaintiff is relieved from responding thereto.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Trade Association Activities—Group Boycotts—Effect on Competition—Per Se Illegality.—A trial court's ruling that an association of home delivery news dealers and its members illegally combined to refuse to purchase and distribute a local daily and Sunday newspaper for the purpose of eliminating the competition presented by independent newsboys in the "home delivery market" of the newspaper was affirmed. The association demanded that the newspaper discontinue its use of newsboys in the home delivery of its papers. When the newspaper rejected that ultimatum, the dealers refused to accept and deliver the papers. Group boycotts are among the practices which the courts have deemed to be unlawful in and of themselves; they are unreasonable per se wherever there is sufficient economic power to appreciably restrain free competition and a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce is involved. The boycott in the instant case stopped the home delivery of about 15,000 daily papers in 1956 and some 32,000 daily and Sunday papers in 1957. That number of newspapers constituted "an appreciable amount of commerce under any standard." Since the boycott appreciably restrained free competition and involved a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce, the conduct of the dealers was unreasonable per se.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Interstate Commerce—Affecting Interstate Commerce.—Home delivery news dealers and their association affected and restrained interstate commerce by refusing to distribute a daily and Sunday newspaper in New Jersey. The dealers conceded that their actions resulted from an agreement and combination of the independent dealers; they asserted, however, that the proof failed to show a conspiracy to restrain interstate commerce. They emphasized that it was not shown that any of their members delivered newspapers outside of New Jersey. Although the newspaper was published in New Jersey, and by far the major portion of its sales were made in that state, one of the paper's essential elements was the obtaining, disseminating, and interpreting of national and world-wide news. Further, interstate advertising appreciably affected the paper and its readers. To place news and advertising in the hands of New Jersey people required a continuous interstate transmission of materials and payments, to say nothing of the interstate commerce involved in the sale and delivery of the products sold. The record supported the trial court's finding that the restraint on interstate commerce was undue and substantial.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Combinations to Monopolize—Refusal to Deal—Group Boycott.—A trial court's ruling that an association of home delivery news dealers did not violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act by combining to refuse to purchase and distribute a local daily and Sunday newspaper for the purpose of eliminating the competition presented by independent newsboys was affirmed. The evidence unquestionably demonstrated the effort of the dealers to acquire a monopoly of the newspaper's home delivery business; however, the evidence failed to establish that they possessed the power to actually accomplish that objective.

Before Biggs, Chief Judge, and Maris and McLaughlin, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

By McLaughlin, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This anti-trust litigation arises from defendants' efforts to force plaintiff to eliminate newsboy home delivery of plaintiff's newspapers, The Newark, New Jersey Evening and Sunday News.

The defendants consist of 19 home delivery dealers and a New Jersey non-profit corporation, Allied Newspaper Carriers of New Jersey, formed by the individual defendants in August, 1956. The corporation acted as bargaining agent for its members. By June, 1957 its membership had increased to 133 home delivery dealers.

[Facts]

The facts found by the district court were mostly conceded, though there seems some misunderstanding as to this by appellants' present counsel. In any event there is substantial support in the record for the court's fact findings which are set out in great detail in the opinion below, — F. Supp. — (1958) [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,006]. Only those necessary for present purposes will be noted.

[Group Boycott]

Allied on February 15, 1956, was an unincorporated association of Home Delivery Dealers of which James L. Hutchings was president. On that date he, with 17 other members, complained to the News Circulation Director about late deliveries of the paper to the dealers. They threatened to discontinue handling the News unless this was remedied. Plaintiff agreed to improve its service. After that and prior to July 13, 1956, Hutchings demanded of the Circulation Director that all newsboys delivering the News in any territory of the Dealers should be forced out of business by plaintiff refusing to sell its newspapers to them. Plaintiff refused and was again threatened by the Dealers' spokesman with a refusal to handle the News by the Dealers. Within the same period, the Dealer representatives demanded that plaintiff "shut out" any distributor other than the newspaper man or Dealer in the particular area allocated to him by the Dealers themselves. On July 13, 1956, Hutchings and an attorney, who later represented the defendants at the trial, gave the News Circulation Director the ultimatum that unless plaintiff discontinued the use of newsboys in the distribution of its newspaper, the Dealers would no longer handle it. This was refused and that same day the Dealers refused to accept copies of the News from plaintiff. The latter tried to fill the gap with substitute carriers, selling its papers to them on the same terms as had existed between plaintiff and its other newsboys and the Dealers.

The number of newspapers affected daily was about 15,000 on Sunday the amount was somewhat less. The Dealers' action continued for about two weeks with 16 of the individual defendants participating. Just prior to its start, the Dealers gave written notices to their customers accusing the News of unethical practices, explaining that they would be unable to deliver the paper temporarily and suggesting that the Dealer be notified if the customer wished to substitute another paper. Certain of the Dealers gave their customers a notice which accused the News of trying to eliminate them and confectionary stores from the newspaper business and thus control circulation, etc. This notice warned that plaintiff would tempt little children into becoming newsboys by giving them the idea they would become little merchants handling their own routes. Some of the notices conveyed the idea that children acting as newsboys were forced to make their deliveries in bad weather and when they were ill. Other notices charged that the low rates insisted on by the News made it impossible for the Dealer to earn a living. Another form of notice said plaintiff sought men's services at boys' wages.

[Injunctive Relief Sought]

At the expiration of the two weeks the Dealers resumed taking and distributing the News but sought to persuade plaintiff to induce the substitute newsboys in the Dealers areas to withdraw. Business relations continued between the Dealers and the News until January, 1957, when at a meeting between Hutchings with some other Dealers and News Circulation Department personnel, demand was made that the substitute boys be eliminated. This was refused and Hutchings for the Dealers renewed the strike threat. As a result plaintiff brought this suit charging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2) and seeking interlocutory and permanent injunctive relief.

[Answer]

An answer was filed admitting the jurisdiction of the court and all of the allegations of the complaint regarding the intrastate and interstate elements of plaintiff's business. It denied plaintiff was entitled to relief and alleged various affirmative defenses.

[Prior Proceedings]

On or about May 20, 1957, the date originally fixed for trial of this matter, the Allied members renewed their boycott of the News. This was stopped on June 18, 1957, solely by the interlocutory injunction. During the boycott period, the Dealers refused to handle approximately 32,000 daily and Sunday copies of the papers. By expensive substitute service, the News succeeded in having approximately 16,000 papers delivered to the readers affected.

The trial of the suit started May 23, 1957 and continued intermittently until June 17, 1957. On June 18, 1957 an interlocutory injunction was allowed plaintiff. Prior to final decision the district judge who heard the matter, died and the case was reassigned. Thereafter briefs were filed and oral argument had. At that time counsel for the defendants adopted the factual summary set out in plaintiff's main brief and withdrew the affirmative defenses of the answer. He, for the defense, continued to assert that no relief was justified under the circumstances and questioned the sufficiency of the complaint. It was conceded on behalf of the defendants that their actions complained of resulted from an agreement and combination of the individual defendants through their membership in the corporate defendant.

The district court held that there had been a restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act but that the evidence failed to sustain the charged violations of Section 2 as to monopolizing. The injunction was made permanent and the final decree was entered April 9, 1958.

[Interstate Commerce]

Appellants on this appeal assert that the proofs fail to show a conspiracy to restrain interstate commerce. They stress that such was not their intention; they make no attempt to divide plaintiff's business into intrastate and interstate but seek to emphasize that it was not shown that any Allied member delivers outside of New Jersey; they would excuse their action as protection against discriminatory practices and unfair competition, saying that "The 'restraint' was not intended to achieve a restraint upon interstate commerce."

The truncated argument advanced would have us forget completely that interstate commerce is an inseparable, indispensable part of this plaintiff newspaper. The News does furnish neighborhood, city, county and state news to its readers. And by far the major portion of its sales are in New Jersey. But an essential element of its being, (perhaps considering its territory and the present state of this world of ours its most essential element) is the obtaining, dissemination and interpretation of national and world-wide news. Intrastate advertising is necessary to the economic life of the paper and necessary to its readers. Interstate advertising affects the paper and its readers to a lesser degree but affect them it does appreciably. To place that news and advertising in the hands of New Jersey people requires, as the United States Supreme Court said in Lorain Journal v. United States of America [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 151 (1951), "* * * continuous interstate transmission of materials and payments to say nothing of the interstate commerce involved in the sale and delivery of products sold". The end result, the distribution of the News, as a complete newspaper containing those news items and advertisements, to its reading public in Newark or any other New Jersey area is, as the Court held in Lorain (p. 152), "* * * an inseparable part of the flow of the interstate commerce involved." That Court said further (p. 152), "Without the protection of competition at the outlets of the flow of interstate commerce, the protection of its earlier stages is of little worth." (Emphasis supplied). It should be noted that in Lorain, as here, the contention was that merely a local issue was in dispute. See also Greenspun v. McCarren [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,439], 105 F. Supp. 662 (D. C. Nev. 1952); Hearst Publications v. N. L. R. B., 136 F. 2d 608, 610 (9 Cir. 1943), rev. other grounds, N. L. R. B. v. Hearst Publications, 322 U. S. 11 (1944). See generally Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 602-603, 604-605, 610 (1953).

[Effect on Interstate Commerce]

Whatever may have been its purpose, plainly the restraint imposed by defendants did affect interstate commerce. But, suggest the appellants, plaintiff must go further than that, it must prove that the activities of the defendants directly affected interstate commerce and that there has been undue restriction thereon harmful to the general public. Again they stress what they call "the purely local activities of these defendants".[1]

The district court concluded from the evidence that the restraint on interstate commerce was undue and substantial. Our examination reveals that the record supports these findings. The Lorain opinion governs the situation before us. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., et al. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,576], 332 U. S. 218 (1947) is hardly in point but, as far as it goes, supports the proposition that the home delivery of the [1] They urge, as they did below, that it is the plaintiff who is really fixing the prices of the home delivery of its papers. The district judge found no support in the evidence for that assertion; to the contrary ample basis for its negation. The record entitled him to those conclusions and we have no right to disturb them.

News is an integral part of the interstate operation. The other two early decisions relied on do not represent what we think is the present law.[2]

[Restraint of Competition]

Finally, appellants assert that their concerted refusal to accept the News for home delivery did not restrain competition. They "maintain" their concession that their actions and refusal to deal with plaintiff which resulted from an agreement among themselves went no further than to relieve plaintiff of the burden of showing that a "combination" existed; that it did not relieve plaintiff of proving that the combination was one which unreasonably restrained competition.

[Per Se Illegality]

The Supreme Court in Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,961], 356 U. S. 1 (March 10, 1958) left no doubt what the true rule is in a group boycott case like the one before us. Mr. Justice Black for the Court said at page 5:

> "However, there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. This principle of per se unreasonableness not only makes the type of restraints which are proscribed by the Sherman Act more certain to the benefit of everyone concerned, but it also avoids the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable—an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken. Among the practices which the courts have heretofore deemed to be unlawful in and of themselves are price fixing. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 210; division of markets, United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, aff'd, 175 U. S. 211; group boycotts, Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457; and tying arrangements, International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392." (Emphasis supplied).

The Northern Pacific litigation dealt with tying arrangements, one of the same category as group boycotts. Justice Black, speaking of these said at page 6:

> "Where such conditions are successfully exacted competition on the merits with respect to the tied product is inevitably curbed. Indeed 'tying agreements serve hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition.' Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U. S. 293, 305-306. They deny competitors free access to the market for the tied product, not because the party imposing the tying requirements has a better product or a lower price but because of his power or leverage in another market. At the same time buyers are forced to forego their free choice between competing products. For these reasons 'tying agreements fare harshly under the laws forbidding restraints of trade.' Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 354 U. S. 594, 606. They are unreasonable in and of themselves whenever a party has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product and a 'not insubstantial' amount of interstate commerce is affected." (Emphasis supplied).

[Competition Restrained]

There was no incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation in this suit such as the Supreme Court, in Northern Pacific, holds unnecessary in a group boycott. Nevertheless the district court did sit for at least eleven days hearing testimony and argument. From the record it was held that the evidence established that the restraint resulting from the Dealers refusal to handle deliveries of the News for the home delivery market had made itself felt to a substantial degree. This was based on the uncontradicted testimony that the 1956 boycott had stopped the home delivery of about 15,000 daily papers and a somewhat lesser number on Sunday; that the restraint was enhanced by the written notices the Dealers circulated among their customers; that the 1957 boycott had prevented delivery of some 32,000 papers, daily and Sunday; that the plaintiff's extraordinary costly effort to keep its home delivery readers supplied in the latter crisis only took care of about half of those cut off by the strike.

[2] Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604 (1898); Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578 (1898).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Appellee claims that the 1957 boycott affected 20% of the total circulation of the News. This is disputed by the Dealers, as complicated mathematics. Even if the percentage figure were to be considerably reduced the number of papers eliminated by the boycotts is before us. These constituted "an appreciable amount of commerce under any standard". United States v. Yellow Cab [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,576], 332 U. S. 218, 225-226 (1947).

[Monopoly Charge]

It seems to us therefore from the record, that it was solidly established in the course of the trial that the boycotts had appreciably restrained free competition in the home delivery of the newspapers involved and that a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce was affected. The evidence also unquestionably demonstrates the effort of the defendants to acquire a monopoly of plaintiff's home delivery business, though we agree with the district court that it fails to establish that defendants possessed the power to actually accomplish this particular objective. Appellee strongly contends that the presence of intent to suppress competition removes the obligation of proving that a substantial amount of interstate commerce is affected. Because, as we have already stated, the record firmly supports the Supreme Court test as laid down in Northern Pacific, there is no need for us to pass upon that question at this time.

[Judgment Affirmed]

The judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Practices—Refusal to Deal—Legality.—A garment manufacturer's complaint charging that a yarn manufacturer conspired with other garment manufacturers to prevent it from purchasing yarn was dismissed for failure to state a cause of action. Refusal of the single manufacturer to sell its product to the garment manufacturer did not constitute a violation of the Donnelly Act. The other unnamed persons alleged to have conspired with the yarn manufacturer were not manufacturers of yarn, the subject product, but were manufacturers of garments made from that product. The court noted that the claimed destruction of the garment manufacturer's business by reason of the conspiracy was wholly conclusory.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2337.34.

[Conspiracy Charged]

LEVEY, Justice [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Defendants move for dismissal of each cause of action for insufficiency and for further relief pursuant to Rules 103, 102(1) and 90. Plaintiff insists that its purchases were made from the defendant Deering, Milliken & Co., Inc. The documents submitted on the motion do not conclusively establish that the defendant does not sell and the allegations relating to the defendants as manufacturer and seller are not sham.

The third cause rests on claimed violation of the Donnelly Act. In effect plaintiff complains that defendants, manufacturing and selling a particular yarn, have refused to sell to plaintiff. To render the refusal wrongful it is alleged that defendants conspired and agreed with other manufacturers of garments made from yarn, the subject product, to prevent plaintiff from purchasing the yarn and manufacturing garments made therefrom. The claimed destruction of plaintiff's business by reason thereof is wholly conclusory.

There are several other conclusory allegations contained in the complaint but apart therefrom the restraint on the part of the single manufacturer of the subject product to sell that product to plaintiff does not constitute a violation of the Donnelly Act. The other unnamed persons alleged to have conspired along with the defendants are not the manufacturers or sellers of the subject product but are manufacturers of garments made therefrom.

[Conspiracy Charge Dismissed]

The motion is granted to the extent of dismissing the first and third causes of action for insufficiency and it is denied in all other respects, with leave to plaintiff to serve an amended complaint within twenty days from service of a copy of this order, with notice of entry.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defenses—Suit on Motion Picture Licensing Agreements Alleged to Be Part of Conspiracy—Where Court's Judgment Would Not Enforce Antitrust Violations.—A motion picture exhibitor, when sued by distributors for fees allegedly due under licensing agreements, could not defeat the action by alleging that "clearance" and "run" provisions in the agreements were imposed upon it by a conspiracy among the distributors in violation of the Sherman Act. The exhibitor argued that the unlawfully fixed clearances influenced the license fees and were inherent in the contracts. The court held, however, that the alleged illegality was collateral to the agreements in suit, citing Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540. In that case the defense of illegality was rejected, although unlawfully fixed prices not only influenced the contracts in suit but were the actual provisions sued upon. It could not be said that a judgment for the distributors would further an illegal scheme; in order to do so, the court would have to say that any judgment in favor of one who is a party to a conspiracy to restrain trade, in a suit on a contract whose terms partly resulted from his unlawfully dominant position, "furthers the illegal scheme." There was merit in the distributors' contention that the Connolly case was distinguishable from Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U. S. 227, in which the defense of illegality was sustained, by the fact that the defendant in the latter case was a participant in the conspiracy. The distinction might be better stated by saying that, in the Continental case, the contract sued upon called for some further unlawful act, namely, maintenance of fixed resale prices by the defendant; therefore, a judgment by the court for the plaintiff would have furthered an illegal scheme by validating a contract requiring further activity.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9042.575, 9048.225.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Practices—"Clearances" and "Runs" in Motion Picture Industry—Unreasonableness as Basis for Illegality—Absence of Conspiracy—Refusal to Deal.—"Clearance" and "run" provisions in film licensing agreements between distributors and a motion picture exhibitor were not illegal under Section 1 of the Sherman Act in the absence of a conspiracy among the distributors. The exhibitor, as an affirmative defense to an action to recover license fees, asserted that the "clearance" and "run" provisions were unreasonable, arbitrary, and therefore illegal, even in the absence of a conspiracy. An exhibitor has no right per se to a priority of run enforceable against an individual distributor under the antitrust laws. Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which condemns every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, requires a plurality of actors. If each distributor, through sheer perversity, and acting independently, refused to grant runs to the exhibitor except following an unreasonable clearance, there would be no ground for relief under the Sherman Act. The exhibitor must show, as an essential part of its case, that the clearances were imposed as the result of an agreement or some kind of joint action among the distributors, or between a distributor and a prior-run exhibitor. The Sherman Act comes into operation only where a distributor conspires with others to impose a subsequent run upon an unwilling exhibitor under conditions deemed to be unreasonable as a matter of law.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defenses to Contract Actions in State Court—Governing Law.—The New Jersey Superior Court, Appellate Division, held that whether or not an alleged violation of the Federal antitrust laws constituted a defense to a state cause of action in contract was a Federal question. Also, a determination of the conditions under which a violation constitutes a defense would be a Federal question, since otherwise the additional remedy under the Federal statute might be distorted beyond what the interpreting authority, the United States Supreme Court, deemed that Congress intended.

Affirming a judgment of the Superior Court of New Jersey, Law Division, Somerset County, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,117.

Before Judges GOLDMANN, FREUND and HANEMAN.

The opinion of the court was delivered by GOLDMANN, Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal, taken by leave granted pursuant to R. R. 2:2-3, from an order of the Superior Court, Law Division, striking as insufficient in law (R. R. 4:12-6) the affirmative defense interposed in each of eight consolidated actions. Four were commenced in the district court and the rest in the Law Division; all eight were consolidated in the Superior Court. The cases present identical questions of law and fact.

I

[Action on Contract]

Plaintiff in each case is a distributor of motion pictures and is suing defendant, which operates a drive-in motion picture theatre in Somerville, N. J., for the balance of license fees allegedly due under license agreements for the exhibition of plaintiff's films. The complaints are identical except for plaintiff's name and the amount of damages sought. We may therefore treat one complaint as typical of the others and, for the moment, refer to the respective plaintiffs as "plaintiff."

[Antitrust Violation Alleged as Defense]

The complaint, as amplified by the pretrial order, alleges that plaintiff, by means of license agreements, granted defendant the right to exhibit at its theatre and at certain fixed times various copyrighted motion pictures distributed by it. Defendant was to pay a license fee, known as a percentage rental, in an amount determinable by a percentage of the gross box office receipts. Defendant's original admission charge was 70¢ for each patron over 12 years of age. Beginning with the fall of 1954 defendant concededly charged 80¢, except for certain brief periods. In accounting to plaintiff for gross box office receipts for the purpose of computing and paying percentage rentals, defendant reported its receipts at only 70¢ per patron. Plaintiff claims the unpaid percentage balance due on the remaining 10¢. Defendant alleges that the unreported 10¢ represented a charge to patrons for the use of car heaters supplied during cold weather, or for the privilege of their children's use during the summer months of a small playground located on the theatre premises. It contends that such charges should not be considered part of the admission fee. Defendant concedes that if this contention is not upheld, the eight plaintiffs will be entitled to claims aggregating $9,020.57. However, in addition to denying liability, defendant raises the affirmative defense that plaintiff cannot recover because the license agreements sued upon are illegal and unenforceable, in that they violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A., §§ 1 to 7, inclusive.

["Runs" and "Clearances"—Legality]

Plaintiffs distribute over 90% of the films available for exhibition at defendant's theatre. The business of distributing and licensing motion pictures is conceded to be in interstate commerce. The defense alleges that the "run" and "clearance" provisions in the license agreements "set the time when a theatre operator may exhibit a certain picture in relation to the time when said picture is exhibited in other theatres"; that these provisions are integral parts of the agreements and substantially affect the license fee terms; and that "clearance" is legal only when reasonable. Defendant further alleges that it requested, but was refused, "a run free and clear of clearance over defendant's theatre from any other theatre"; that any run in its theatre which was based on clearance in favor of any other theatre, or which conditioned the time when defendant could exhibit a picture upon the time when any other theatre exhibited, or upon any fact other than the general release of the picture in New Jersey, is unreasonable, arbitrary and illegal. Defendant also claims that the refusal of the several plaintiffs to agree to license their pictures on the terms defendant had requested, was the result of a conspiracy among them (in which certain unnamed exhibitors also participated) to impose upon defendant a uniform system of runs and clearances which it was obliged to accept in order to obtain films. All these actions, it is alleged, effected an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce, and hence violated the Sherman Act. Defendant demanded judgment dismissing the several complaints.

[Prior Proceedings]

In granting plaintiffs' motion to strike the defense as insufficient, the trial judge held it to be settled law that

> "* * * the contracts of an unlawful combination or its members, which are collateral to and independent of the unlawful contract by which the conspiracy was created, and which are not in furtherance of its unlawful purpose, are valid and enforceable. It is generally agreed that the mere fact that the plaintiff is a member of an unlawful conspiracy or combination, created with the intent and purpose of restraining trade or establishing a monopoly, will not disable or prevent it in law from selling goods or services within or affected by the provisions of such trust or combination, and recovering their price or value, either at common law or under statutes making unlawful contracts in restraint of trade or commerce."

He concluded that the alleged illegality pleaded by defendant was collateral to the contracts in suit.

II

[Economic Necessity]

Plaintiffs argue, and defendant readily concedes, that the system of staggered releases of motion pictures, whereby certain theatres exhibit a particular picture ahead of others, i. e., on an earlier "run," is an economic necessity in the motion picture business and has judicially been sanctioned when reasonably employed. Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,909], 100 F. Supp. 84, 89 et seq. (S. D. Cal. 1951), affirmed 215 F. 2d 167 [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,843] (9 Cir. 1954), certiorari denied 348 U. S. 912, 75 S. Ct. 293, 99 L. Ed. 715 (1955). It is also well settled that no exhibitor has a right, as a matter of law, to a priority of run. Paramount Pictures Theatres Corp. v. Partmar Corp., 97 F. Supp. 552, 559 (S. D. Cal. 1951), affirmed on opinion below 200 F. 2d 561 (9 Cir. 1952), affirmed 347 U. S. 89, 74 S. Ct. 414 [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,674], 98 L. Ed. 532 (1954), rehearing denied 347 U. S. 931, 74 S. Ct. 527, 98 L. Ed. 1083 (1954); Orbo Theatre Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,869], 156 F. Supp. 770, 779 (D. D. C. 1957). Defendant, however, insists that the clearance and run provisions inserted in the licenses in suit are unreasonable and arbitrary, and therefore illegal.

[Definition of "Clearance"]

Clearance and run provisions in a film license contract fix the time when a theatre may exhibit the licensed picture. The meaning of "clearance" was set out in the leading case of United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,470], 66 F. Supp. 323 (statutory court S. D. N. Y. 1946); findings, conclusions and decree published in 70 F. Supp. 53 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,526] (S. D. N. Y. 1947); affirmed in part and reversed in part, 334

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

U. S. 131 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948). The lower court there said (66 F. Supp., at page 341):

> "Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed."

The United States Supreme Court in the same case (334 U. S., at page 144) said that "Clearances are designed to protect a particular run of a film against a subsequent run." In the findings of fact of the statutory court, reported in 70 F. Supp. 53 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,526], at page 54, clearance is defined as "the period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres."

["Clearance" Not Illegal Per Se]

We note, in passing, that a clearance is not illegal per se, even though it may restrict trade to some extent. As was squarely held by the statutory court in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., above, 66 F. Supp., at page 341 et seq.:

> "* * * a grant of a clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. * * * [L]icenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area." (The court was here referring to its comment that at common law "a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonable necessary to protect the value of the property purchased.")

[Definition of "Runs"]

"Runs" are defined as "the successive exhibitions of a feature in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on." 70 F. Supp., at page 55. In short, the "run" determines the sequence in which a theatre may exhibit a particular picture with reference to the sequence of exhibition in other theatres which enjoy a prior run, and "clearance" sets the time which must elapse between the showing of the picture at different theatres.

III

[Reasonableness of Agreements]

In elaboration of its affirmative defense, defendant contends that plaintiffs have violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in two separate and independent particulars: (1) the clearance and run provisions of the license agreements in suit are unreasonable and arbitrary, and hence illegal, even in the absence of a conspiracy between and among the several plaintiffs; and (2) the uniform clearance and run provisions inserted in license agreements were determined and imposed upon defendant as a result of a conspiracy and agreement to which all the plaintiffs were parties.

[Contracts with "Prior-Run" Exhibitors]

To meet the first branch of defendant's argument, plaintiffs use as their point of departure the definition of "clearance" given in the Paramount Pictures case, above, and argue that defendant mischaracterizes as "clearances" the contract provisions in suit. Clearances, they contend, are negative covenants in the exhibition contracts made by a distributor with prior-run exhibitors, to protect for limited times and within a certain area the exclusivity of the prior-run exhibition right therein granted. But the issue raised by the defense, they say, is actually directed toward the delivery date or availability of the film print, and not to the legal validity of any clearances granted in contracts with third parties for prior-run protection. Plaintiffs point out that defendant pleads no such clearance clauses in the contracts in suit; it does not claim that it agreed, conspiratorially or otherwise, with any plaintiff unreasonably to withhold any picture from any theatre, or that it made any negative covenants in its contracts to obtain exclusive and unreasonable protection by way of clearance for itself over later-run theatres. What it is claiming is that it was held back to a later delivery date or run than it desired, because of unreasonable protective clearance granted to prior-run theatres. Plaintiffs state that such clearances, by definition, could only be found in the agreements between plaintiffs and such prior-run exhibitors.

Plaintiffs' argument, on first impression, carries a measure of persuasion. Since no exhibitor has a right, as a matter of law, to a priority of run, there could be no inherent illegality in a license agreement which fixes the availability or time for delivery of the film print licensed for exhibition. The contract and any breach thereof, say plaintiffs, can be established on its own account; one need not go outside the contract into other and collateral contracts and transactions. It is only when one finds a "clearance" provision as defined and described in the Paramount Pictures case, that one encounters anything in the nature of a restraint of trade.

There is language in the Paramount Pictures case (see 66 F. Supp., at page 341 and 334 U. S., at page 144, quoted above) that would appear to lend support to plaintiffs' argument that a true clearance provision can be found only in the license agreements of a prior-run theatre which grant that theatre clearance or protection over a subsequent-run theatre. In most anti-trust actions, the emphasis would probably be on agreements with prior exhibitors, in an effort to show that the protection granted thereby was unreasonable because unduly extended as to area or duration. However, our examination of the cases, particularly the Paramount Pictures case, nowhere reveals a statement by the court that clearance must be stipulated in the contracts of the prior-run theatre for whose benefit the clearance was granted. In considering clearances, the objectionable feature is the fact that there is an arrangement to give an unreasonably broad protection. The fact that the clearance appears in one document rather than another cannot reasonably or logically be considered material.

The definitions of "clearance" given in the briefs, all taken from Paramount, do not compel the narrow interpretation advanced by plaintiffs. In that case the courts were concerned with clearance provisions that already appeared in contracts with preferred exhibitors, and references would naturally be to those contracts. In logic and in practice, clearance provisions may be expressed in license agreements with prior-run theatres which have the benefit of the clearance, or in those with later-run theatres on which the clearance is imposed. They might more informally be included in letter agreements, or even effected by verbal arrangements, with the understanding that the terms would subsequently be incorporated in the executed license agreements of a prior-run theatre, later-run theatre, or both. The search always is for evidence of clearance, no matter how or in what form expressed.

[Refusal to Deal]

We pass to another aspect of the first branch of defendant's argument. Defendant rests its case for holding the so-called clearance and run provisions of the license agreements in suit illegal on the flat assertion that these provisions are in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, even in the absence of a conspiracy between and among the several plaintiffs. This contention vitiates defendant's entire argument.

The question posed is simply this: whether an individual distributor's refusal to agree to license a particular theatre on any but a subsequent run can ever be illegal for any purpose, in the absence of conspiratorial or joint wrongful action with third parties underlying such refusal, under conditions which render that refusal unreasonable as a matter of law. The firmly established rule, as has already been indicated, is that an exhibitor has no right per se to a priority of run enforceable against an individual distributor under the anti-trust laws, Paramount Pictures Theatre Corp. v. Partmar Corp. and Orbo Theatres Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., above.

[Joint Action Required]

Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act condemns "Every contract, combination * * * or conspiracy, in restraint of trade

Although defendant has attempted to present its affirmative defense under two headings, the first fails for the reasons stated. The only legitimate claim defendant raises is its second one—that plaintiffs conspired to set unreasonable runs and clearances, to its detriment. We proceed to a consideration of that basic issue.

IV

[Conspiracy—"Collateral" and "Inherent" Illegality]

It will be recalled that defendant claims that the Sherman Act has been violated in that the so-called uniform clearance and run provisions inserted in the various license agreements it had with the several plaintiffs were determined and imposed upon it as a result of a conspiracy and agreement to which all the plaintiffs were parties. The allegations of its affirmative defense so summarized were taken almost verbatim from the findings of fact and conclusions of law by the statutory court in the Paramount Pictures case, where the court held that it was a violation of the Sherman Act when distributors acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they licensed their films. 66 F. Supp., at page 343, and see the case on appeal, 334 U. S., at pages 146, 147.

Defendant concedes that > "* * * if the contract sued upon was collateral to the illegal conspiracy, the violation of the Sherman Act is not available as a defense to an action on that contract, but that if the contract upon which the pending action is based is inherently a part of the conspiracy, or to put it conversely, the illegality is inherent in the contract itself, then a violation of the Sherman Act is available as a defense to an action on the said contract."

It also concedes that the distinction between what is "inherent" and what is "collateral" illegality in this connection depends upon an analytical comparison of the two leading decisions in point, both written by the late Mr. Justice Harlan: Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 22 S. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed 679 (1902), dealing with collateral illegality, and Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U. S. 227, 29 S. Ct. 280, 53 L. Ed. 486 (1909), dealing with inherent illegality. The trial court, after a consideration of these cases and the citation of others in support of its conclusion, held that defendant's affirmative defense was legally insufficient because the claimed illegality was collateral to the contracts in suit, under the Connolly rule. On appeal defendant argues, as it did below, that the defense should be sustained because the illegality claimed was inherent to the contracts, under the Continental Wall Paper case.

[Federal Law Applicable]

We note, parenthetically, that neither party to this appeal has considered whether state or federal law is determinative of the question before us, namely, under what conditions does a breach of a federal statute, which breach influenced the amounts allegedly due under state law, constitute a defense to the state law claim for the balance of license fees due? Both parties assume that federal law governs. We consider that the question of whether a violation of the federal anti-trust laws may constitute a defense to a state cause of action in contract is a federal question. Cf. Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,553], 330 U. S. 743, 67 S. Ct. 1015, 91 L. Ed. 1219 (1947). The determination of under what conditions the violation constitutes a defense would also be a federal question, since otherwise the additional remedy under the federal statute might be distorted beyond what the interpreting authority (i. e., the United States Supreme Court) deemed that Congress intended. The cases seem so to hold, although the issue has never been discussed. We turn to a consideration of the Connolly and Continental Wall Paper cases.

[Cases Considered]

Plaintiff in Connolly sued upon notes which defendant had given it in purchase of a quantity of sewer pipe. Defendant pleaded, among other things, that plaintiff, by agreement of various persons, firms and corporations engaged in the sewer pipe trade, had been incorporated to act, and did act, as their agency in effectuating an illegal trust, combination or conspiracy to monopolize the sewer pipe trade and fix prices at which pipe could be sold. Further, that plaintiff's sales to defendant were made at prices so unlawfully fixed, and were therefore illegal and void under the Sherman Act. The court held the defense invalid, stating:

> "* * * plaintiff, even if part of a combination illegal at common law, was not for that reason forbidden to sell property it acquired or held for sale. The purchases by the defendants had no necessary or direct connection with the alleged illegal combination; for the contracts between the defendants and the plaintiff could have been proven without any reference to the arrangement whereby the latter became an illegal combination * * * The contracts between the plaintiff and the respective defendants were, in every sense, collateral to the alleged agreement between the plaintiff and other corporations, firms or associations whereby an illegal combination was formed for the sale of sewer pipe." (184 U. S., at page 549)

In Continental Wall Paper plaintiff sued for a balance due on account of wallpaper sold and delivered to defendant jobber. As in Connolly, defendant pleaded that plaintiff had been organized and incorporated by various wallpaper manufacturers as a common selling agency, in order to restrain trade and fix wallpaper prices at all levels of distribution. Defendant further alleged that plaintiff, in pursuance of the objects of the conspiracy, compelled defendant to become a party to the conspiracy by entering into a written agreement to buy all of its wallpaper requirements exclusively from plaintiff, at prices illegally fixed by the conspiracy, and compelled defendant to agree illegally to maintain the seller's list prices and not to resell the wallpaper so purchased at prices lower than a fixed schedule of minimum prices. Defendant claimed that plaintiff should be denied recovery of the unpaid purchase price because the purchase orders were inherently unlawful in that they were made in furtherance of the illegal price-fixing scheme to which it had been made a party. The court sustained defendant's contention by a narrow majority, Justices Holmes, Brewer, White and Peckham dissenting.

Speaking for the majority in Continental Wall Paper, Mr. Justice Harlan pointed out that > "The present case is plainly distinguishable from Connolly case. In that case the defendant, who sought to avoid payment for the goods purchased by him under contract, had no connection with the general business or operations of the alleged illegal corporation that sold the goods. * * * His contract was to take certain goods at an agreed price, nothing more, and was not in itself illegal, nor part of nor in execution of any general plan or scheme that the law condemned. * * *" (212 U. S., at page 260; italics the court's)

He went on to say:

> "The case now before us is an entirely different one. The Continental Wall Paper Company seeks, in legal effect, the aid of the court to enforce a contract for the sale and purchase of goods which, it is admitted by the demurrer was in fact and was intended by the parties to be based upon agreements that were and are essential parts of an illegal scheme. * * *
> The present suit is * * * based upon * * * agreements, to which both the plaintiff and the defendant were parties, and pursuant to which the accounts sued on were made out, and which had

for their object, and which it is admitted had directly the effect, to accomplish the illegal ends for which the Continental Wall Paper Company was organized. If judgment be given for the plaintiff the result, beyond all question, will be to give the aid of the court in making effective the illegal agreements that constituted the forbidden combination. These considerations make it evident that the present case is different from the Connolly case. * * *" (212 U. S., at page 261; italics the court's)

The fact that defendant received a windfall was held not material—it is the public welfare that is uppermost—and following the long established rule the court refused to give its aid in any measure whatsoever to a party seeking to realize the fruits of an agreement tainted with illegality.

[Distinction—Purchaser's "Participation"]

The parties on this appeal propose various rationales for distinguishing Connolly and Continental Wall Paper. Plaintiffs contend that the cases turn on whether defendant was a participant, however unwillingly, in the conspiracy pursuant to which the contracts in suit were made (as in Continental Wall Paper), or not (as in Connolly). Pursuing this ground of distinction, plaintiffs logically argue that for a purchaser simply to agree to buy what the seller has every right to sell, but at prices illegally fixed by a sellers' conspiracy, as in Connolly, is not to become an active party to the wrong, even though such a contract may serve the unilateral purpose of the seller to carry out the objects and purposes of the conspiracy. Connolly squarely held such an agreement not to be inherently illegal. On the other hand, a would-be purchaser's agreement, made as part of the consideration for all future sales, not to resell the purchased goods at less than the prices fixed by a conspiracy, and thus to make himself a party to the illegal conspiracy to maintain resale prices, and himself to agree to further the wrongful objects and purposes of that price-fixing conspiracy, as in the Continental Wall Paper case, is a direct participation by the purchaser in such wrongful objects and purposes, and makes all purchase contracts entered in any pursuance of such an unlawful arrangement inherently illegal. The courts deny enforcement to such purchase agreements on public policy grounds, and accordingly leave the parties where it finds them. Volk v. Paramount Pictures [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,673], 91 F. Supp. 902, 905-906 (D. Minn. 1950).

[True Ground of Distinction]

The United States Supreme Court has, in later cases, apparently recognized this as the true ground of distinction between the two cases. See, e. g., Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co., above, 330 U. S., at page 755. Cf. Bell v. Lamborn, 2 F. 2d 205 (4 Cir. 1924); Turner Glass Corp. v. Hartford Empire Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,379], 173 F. 2d 49, 52-53 (7 Cir. 1949).

[Character of Parties]

Defendant resists this basis for distinguishing the Connolly and Continental Wall Paper cases, claiming that it would be "an anomolous situation if the courts were to grant relief to a party who was both a participant in and the victim of an illegal conspiracy and in another situation were to deny relief to a party who was a non-participant in but a victim of an illegal conspiracy because of such non-participation." This ignores two considerations. The first is that the defense of illegality is not allowed as a "relief" to a defendant. This was pointed out in McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U. S. 639, 669, 19 S. Ct. 839, 43 L. Ed. 1117 (1899):

> "The court refuses to enforce such a contract, and it permits defendant to set up its illegality, not out of any regard for the defendant who sets it up, but only on account of the public interest. It has been often stated in similar cases that the defense is a very dishonest one, and it lies ill in the mouth of the defendant to allege it, and it is only allowed for public considerations and in order the better to secure the public against dishonest transactions. * * *"

And see the Continental Wall Paper case, above, 212 U. S., at pages 262-263, where McMullen is quoted with approval. In short, whether defendant is the victim of a wrong is of no moment in granting or denying the defense; indeed, the defense is not allowed out of any sympathy for either party's position.

[Relief for Alleged Wrong]

Another answer to defendant's claim of "anomoly" is that the Sherman Act provides relief for the alleged wrong it has pleaded by way of affirmative defense. Defendant may sue for treble damages in the federal jurisdiction. 15 U. S. C. A., §§ 15 and 26.

[Face of Contract]

Plaintiffs also suggest that the two leading cases may be distinguished on the basis of whether illegality appears on the face of the contract. Although that rationale has some support in the cases, see Gasoline Products Co. v. Champlin Refining Co., 46 F. 2d 511 (D. C. S. D. Me. 1931), and would minimize excursions into side issues, it would appear to be somewhat unrealistic. Such a criterion might well make the issue of enforceability depend upon the artfulness of the draftsman of the contract, or upon whether the illegality was apparent or disguised. It would invite conceptualistic distinctions as to whether illegality did or did not appear on the face of the document, and how much (if any) interpolation could be made in the writing.

[Impact of Conspiracy]

Defendant offers its own rationale for distinguishing between the two cases, namely, that the alleged conspiracy in Connolly had no impact upon the contracts there involved. The distinction disregards the facts in both cases. The impact of the conspiracy on the contracts in suit was just as direct in Connolly as in Continental Wall Paper—disregarding for the moment defendant's direct participation in the illegal conduct complained of in the latter case by his agreement to maintain resale prices to his customers at levels fixed by the conspiracy.

We find that defendant's contention that the instant case be regarded as within the rule of Continental Wall Paper because the clearance provisions of the contracts substantially affected the schedule of license fees, proves too much. In Connolly the defense was that the prices imposed upon defendant, although lawful on their face, were unlawful because they were the result of concerted action. Certainly in that case the unlawfully fixed prices were as vital a part of the contract as are the unlawfully fixed clearances here. The cases are not materially different in this respect. And the argument that the unlawfully fixed clearances influenced the license fees can only mean that Connolly, where the unlawfully fixed prices not only influenced the contracts in suit but were the actual provisions sued upon, was wrongly decided.

[Judgment Furthering Illegal Scheme]

Although there is merit in, as well as support for, plaintiffs' contention that Connolly and Continental Wall Paper turn on whether or not defendant was a participant in the conspiracy, the basis for distinguishing the two cases might better be stated in this way: that in the latter the contract sued upon called for some further unlawful act. The contract in Continental Wall Paper required defendant to charge fixed resale prices. This, of course, was illegal. In Connolly no such restriction appears; once the defendant had the sewer pipe he could do with it as he wished. This distinction is meaningful when related to the theory of the court in Continental Wall Paper—that the court would not further an illegal scheme by granting a judgment that validated a contract requiring some further activity.

We cannot say, as defendant would have us hold, that a judgment for plaintiffs in the instant case would further an illegal scheme, unless we expand this concept beyond the meaning of Continental Wall Paper to include the scheme in Connolly. That is, to support the proposition just stated we would have to say that any judgment in favor of one who is a party to a conspiracy to restrain trade, in a suit on a contract whose terms partly resulted from his unlawfully dominant position, "furthers the illegal scheme." This the Connolly court refused to do, as did the court in all the cases set out in the opinion of the court below and in the briefs. We find no case cited to us which supports the broad proposition for which defendant contends, and none is so similar to this case as to compel a particular result.

[Alleged Illegality "Collateral" to Contract]

We hold, as in Connolly, that the alleged illegality pleaded by defendant was collateral to the contracts in suit. Although we decide this matter as a question of applicable federal law, we find three New Jersey cases which, although not precisely in point, tend to support the conclusion that the illegality here alleged does not render the contracts unenforceable. See Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 58 N. J. Eq. 507, 520-525 (E. & A. 1899); Voices, Inc. v. Metal Tone Mfg. Co., above, 119 N. J. Eq., at pages 335-337; cf. Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 739 (E. & A. 1906). There is no reason why, even if state law were to govern, the distinction between Connolly and Continental Wall Paper, as discussed above, should not be held applicable. Affirmed.

[¶ 69,294] Sam Temperato v. Walter Horstman, Constance Horstman, Emil M. Ehrlacher, and Theresa Ehrlacher.

In the Supreme Court of Missouri, Division Number Two. January Session, 1959. No. 46,651. Filed March 9, 1959.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis. ROBERT L. ARONSON, Judge.

Missouri Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Practices—Price Fixing Provisions in Patent Licensing Agreements—Legality—"Limited Monopoly" Under Patent.—Licensing agreements which gave the licensor of an ice cream freezer patent and an ice cream trade-name the right to set the retail price of ice cream sold by his licensees were illegal and void under the Missouri antitrust laws. It was contended that the price fixing clause was valid because of the "limited monopoly" afforded to the holder of the freezer patent, and that no state could detract from those rights by the antitrust laws or otherwise. A patentee, however, is not permitted to fix the price of the products made by a patented machine in the hands of a licensee. Therefore, even assuming the existence and validity of the patent, the price fixing provisions were not justified. The type of price-control provision found in the contracts might be described as "vertical price-fixing." The Missouri antitrust statutes are not aimed solely at combinations of competitors, or "horizontal" price fixing; they declare "void" all contracts between two or more persons which tend to lessen full and free competition in the sale of any product or tend to increase the market price of any product. Any person who agrees with any other person to regulate, control, or fix the price of any article is also declared guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The Missouri statutes are so explicit and all-inclusive that there is no room left for construction by the courts.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2329, 2335.27.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Practices—Supply Control Provisions in Trade-Mark Licensing Agreements—Legality—Conflicts in State and Federal Laws.—Licensing agreements providing that (1) licensees selling ice cream under a trade-name could purchase supplies only from "sources approved in writing" by the licensor, and (2) that the licensor reserved "the right to change the list of approved sources of supply as it deems best" constituted an unlawful restraint of trade and competition in violation of the Missouri antitrust laws. It was contended that the agreements were justified as "quality-control" provisions in connection with the licensing of a trade-mark or trade-name. In that field, the court did not concede that federal authorities were controlling, if they were in conflict with Missouri statutes. The right to the use of a trade-name or mark, though it be subject to federal registration, does not arise from that registration or from federal law, but from a prior, exclusive appropriation and user under the common law. The registration is merely prima facie evidence of that right. However, the court found no authorities, federal or otherwise, which upheld provisions giving a licensor full power to designate and change the actual sources for any and all supplies used by a trade-name licensee.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2325.27, 2329, 2401.27.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Action to Recover Royalties Under Franchise Agreements—Illegality of Agreements Under Missouri Antitrust Laws as Defense.—A licensor of an ice cream trade-name and ice cream freezer patent was not permitted to collect royalty payments under franchise agreements which gave him the power to (1) set retail prices for the ice cream sold by his licensees, and (2) designate and change the sources from which the licensees could get their supplies. Both of those provisions were illegal and void under the Missouri antitrust laws. There was no need to delve into the technical aspects of the severability of those provisions; Missouri statutes declare all such contracts void. Those statutes contain no exceptions or qualifications; therefore, total illegality is the price of inserting such provisions in contracts in violation of the Missouri statutory public policy. The court also found that the record did not support the licensor's contention that the illegal provisions had been "abandoned."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2407.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Action on Contract—Counter-Claim for Treble Damages Under State Antitrust Laws—Antitrust Violations as Defense—"Pari Delicto."—In an action by a licensor of a patent and a trade-name to recover royalties under a franchise agreement which had been held illegal under the Missouri antitrust laws, the licensee's counterclaim for treble damages, based upon sums paid under the agreement, was dismissed on the ground that the licensees were active parties to the illegality of the agreement. Active participants in a forbidden contract cannot recover damages, treble or otherwise, against the other party on account of the very act of illegality in which they themselves have engaged. The agreement had been executed insofar as the licensees had made payments on it and actually operated under it; therefore, neither party was entitled to any relief. An alternative counterclaim by which the licensees asserted a breach of the agreement by the licensor's installation of a competing business in the licensees' territory was also rejected because of the agreement's illegality.

[Antitrust Violations as Defenses]

HENRY I. EAGER, Judge [In full text]: In this suit plaintiff sought damages for the breach of a contract which may initially be described as a "Dairy Queen" franchise for a territory in the City of St. Louis; he also sought certain injunctive relief. He recovered damages of $29,843.60 and was given a permanent injunction. Defendants had filed counterclaims, which were ruled adversely and which will be referred to later. The case was tried to the court. After an unsuccessful motion for a new trial, defendants appealed. We would merely encumber this opinion by reciting the pleadings; they fully cover the claims and defenses, pro and con. We note at the outset, however, that one of the defenses was and is that the contract was void because in violation of the Missouri and federal anti-trust statutes. The judge who heard the evidence retired before deciding the case, and it was thereafter submitted by stipulation to the present trial judge on the transcript, briefs, and oral arguments.

[Patent—Trade-Mark Registration]

We may assume that the record shows, though in part by inference and hearsay, that a patent had been issued for a type of freezer which froze and delivered so-called "soft-cream" through a special faucet; the final product, it is said, emerged in a distinctive shape with a "curl on top,"—at least where the frozen cream was visible in a cone or sundae. These freezers were used rather widely, in nearly all the states, under the name "Dairy Queen." The product was sold in cones, sundaes, shakes, pints, quarts, and possibly in other forms. The purported owners of the patent had applied for a trade-mark registration on the name, but this had been declined, expressly or by failure to issue, because of the prior registration of a trade-mark on that name to International Milk Company; that company eventually gave the holder of the Dairy Queen freezer patent a letter of nonobjection to its use of the name under certain conditions, but that agreement was made long after the controlling breach of contract involved here.

[Franchise Operations]

A complicated system of franchise operations had grown up in licensing the use of these freezers and of the name "Dairy Queen"; there were state franchises, district franchises and "sub-franchises," the latter being for the operation of local stores. The freezers were generally leased to the store operators, who apparently owned or leased the stores, paid all their own expenses, and paid a royalty on all the "mix" which was purchased and used in the freezers, in addition to any lump sum paid for the original contract or the territory . The "mix" was the basic dairy product used, and it was purchased from outside sources. We shall not attempt to unravel the tangled system of royalties which the witnesses tried to describe, except to say that the defendants, as other store owners, paid a royalty to their immediate contracting party or parties. There were various competing companies or systems processing and selling soft-cream products, also sometimes referred to as "soft-milk" products; these, of course, were operated under other names, such as Tasti-Freez, Zesto and Dairy Delight.

The contract now in question was executed on Sept. 2, 1948. We shall digest briefly its essential parts. William and Irene Bollini as owners "of the exclusive right to the use of the Dairy Queen Freezers manufactured under Patent No. 2080971, and the exclusive right to the use of the trade-name 'Dairy Queen' in St. Louis, Missouri, and St. Louis County, Missouri; * * *" thereby sold to defendants such rights for a certain defined area in the City of St. Louis for a period of ten years, with an option of renewal; they also agreed to furnish two freezers for each store, which were to remain the property of one Harry Axene and his wife and which should also continue to be personal property. Defendants agreed: to pay $3,600 for the use of the freezers, and a royalty of 54 cents per gallon on all "mix" used; that no royalty should be cancelled or abated by reason of the expiration of the patent; that defendants would keep complete records which should be open to inspection by the Bollinis or their agents or by Axene; to make written reports and payment of royalties monthly; to erect at their own expense, a suitable building according to plans to be furnished and on an approved site; to pay all employees and all costs of operation; to maintain the "standards and cleanliness" set up by Bollini, to comply with all health and sanitation laws, and to operate for at least six months of each calendar year. We quote, in part, the following additional provisions. which were also agreed to: "that all mix and supplies, including cones, cups, containers, toppings, flavoring, coloring and like supplies and materials, shall meet the standards of quality and specifications therefor as may now or hereafter be set up by the Party of the First Part and shall be purchased only from sources approved in writing by the Party of the First Part and W. J. Lanaghan, Belleville, Ill., and these Parties reserve the right to change the list of approved sources of supply as it deems best. * * * that no product, other than Dairy Queen may or will be sold on the premises above described without the written approval of the Party of the First Part and W. J. Lanaghan, Belleville, Ill., first had and obtained. * * * Party of the Second Part agrees that the selling price of all Dairy Queen Products may be set from time to time by the Party of the First Part, and the Party of the Second Part agrees that it will not deviate from the prices so set." Defendants did construct a building within the prescribed territory and began the operation in or about October, 1948. Under date of March 1, 1951, Bollini and his wife, Axene and his wife, and one William J. Lanaghan and his wife entered into a contract with plaintiff, Sam Temperato, by which they transferred to plaintiff all franchise rights in St. Louis City and County and in certain other territory, and their interest in the existing contracts, including that of these defendants.

[Testimony]

Defendants operated under Bollini from the fall of 1948 until sometime in March, 1951, and under plaintiff from March, 1951, to July 14, 1951, when they repudiated the contract and so notified plaintiff. Bollini testified: that the form of contract involved here was one given to him by Axene and Lanaghan (his contracting parties and superior franchise holders) for use in his "subfranchise" arrangements; that defendants continually complained about the amount of the royalty and that he reduced it from 54 cents to 49 cents per gallon, but they still complained; that he made no demands that defendants purchase their supplies from stated sources, but at first had to tell them "where they could buy their supplies," because they did not know; that on certain items few sources were available; that to a large extent the different stores bought from different sources; he "encouraged" a uniform paper source; that he got no 'kick backs." Bollini's testimony concerning the retail prices of the products was somewhat conflicting, but, in essence, it was as follows: that there was a "suggested selling price" at all times; that he made no demands on defendants, but that a new operator might put out either too much or too little material for his own good at a certain price, "so we have to instruct what price to charge," and that he arranged to have price lists painted in the stores "at the beginning"; that he got directives from the Dairy Queen Trade Association on prices to be charged and set; that it was his policy to have uniformity of weights and prices in that area, and he wanted the stores to be as identical as possible; that, at the outset, defendants sold malts for 25 cents and shakes for 20 cents, and he called to their attention the fact that this "was not correct as to the policy in the City of St. Louis" and that all stores, including drug stores, were charging the same prices; that they then "corrected" it; that the "policy" included Dairy Queen and "all soft cream stores"; that on one occasion he called to defendants' attention a divergence in prices on ice cream sodas; that at a regional meeting at the Lennox Hotel in St. Louis in the spring of 1950, attended by most of the Dairy Queen operators, it was mutually agreed that the cost of supplies had gone up and that in order to make a profit "you would have to get more money for your quart or pint containers," or for these products generally; that thereafter most of the St. Louis stores raised their prices. Another witness was permitted to testify that: "Mr. Bollini had told us the standard price that Dairy Queen had for their merchandise and all their stores we served had that same price * * *."

Plaintiff Temperato had some connection with "Dairy Queen" in another territory before he took over Bollini's franchise. He also held a "Tasti-Freez" franchise from and after Sept., 1950. He testified: that after he took over he promptly reduced the St. Louis Dairy Queen royalties from 49 cents to 34 cents; that he made no demands concerning the purchase of supplies or the maintenance of retail prices; that he did discuss and tried to promote a method of volume purchasing of mix from the Pet Milk Company whereby a saving of 7 cents a gallon would have been accomplished; under this plan all purchases would be billed to him or his nominee, 1 cent of the saving would go to his office for bookkeeping, and the other 6 cents would be split between himself and the store operators; that he held a joint meeting of Dairy Queen and Tasti-Freez operators on this proposal in April, 1951; that he discussed this with defendants almost as soon as he notified them that he had taken over; in other words, he urged them to change their source of supply on the mix, whatever may have been the reason. Defendants did not make the change, but other stores did and supposedly saved 3 cents per gallon. He further testified: that he did "look at" the prices, and that the prices were "about uniform" in Missouri; that he also suggested that defendants purchase all their paper produts from "Royal Paper" because, first, these products were printed to advertise Dairy Queen, and, secondly, he could check up through that source on the volume of defendants' sales, as he could also have done through Pet Milk. One of the officials of Southern Products Company, from which defendants purchased mix, testified that Temperato asked them if they were "big enough" to handle the Dairy Queen business for Missouri, to which they (he and other officers) replied in the affirmative, and that plaintiff (and the witness) then said: "'Well, what terms—if I would give you this business what terms can we come together on?' I says, 'What do you mean?' He says, 'I expect a kickback to the Company that I turn the business over to,' * * *" but that the witness refused to deal on that basis, and that thereafter his Dairy Queen business "started fading out." Plaintiff denied this conversation. Eventually, the plaintiff got into a violent argument with the defendants upon his insistence that they were cheating on their royalty payments. We may note at this point that there was substantial evidence that defendants had consistently purchased mix at Southern Products Company by two methods,—one on a regular charge account, and another by purchasing for "wholesale cash," upon tickets paid at the time of delivery and without further identification. There is a fair inference that this was done to decrease the royalty payments to be made under the contract and to conceal the actual volume. On July 14, 1951, defendants discontinued the use of the Dairy Queen Freezers and notified plaintiff that he should pick up the freezers; this notice was confirmed by letter, and in turn plaintiff's counsel replied that defendants would be held liable for all royalties and for all damages due to the breach. Defendants' check for accrued royalties was returned. This suit followed nearly a year later. There was evidence that after July 14, 1951, defendants continued to use signs and advertising in and about their place of business which tended to mislead the public into believing that "Dairy Queen" products were being sold there.

[Judgment of Lower Court]

This case was decided on the transcript and exhibits by a judge who heard no testimony. In such instances the appellate court does not accord to the trial court's findings the same deference which it would accord had that court personally heard the evidence. (Pitts v. Garner, Mo., decided Feb. 9, 1959, — S. W. 2d —.) In a memorandum opinion the court noted the plan of defendants to defraud plaintiff on royalties, the admitted breach of the contract, the fact that defendants did not testify, and it generally disallowed the defense of the invalidity of the contract as "technical and legalistic" and as unsupported by proof; it also stated that the supposed proof of illegal activity rested upon the speculation and skepticism of counsel; that the price fixing and source of supply clauses were abandoned, and that there was no possibility of a monopoly; also, that the contract was severable, and that it was unnecessary to rule specifically upon the legality of the parts attacked; however, the court apparently found the contract not to be "invalid." Other matters were discussed in detail, which we need not note. Damages were assessed for all unpaid royalties, past and future, over a ten year period, as computed on the average gallonage of mix shown by charges and by "wholesale cash" purchases. These damages covered a period of more than seven years after the breach; approximately one year of this period had not expired at the time of the entry of judgment; this portion of the damages was commuted. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $29,843.60 as damages for the breach; the judgment entry contained extensive findings, generally in line with the memorandum opinion. Therein the court apparently avoided a specific finding that the contract was valid, but found that there were no illegal activities or conspiracies and no enforcement of price fixing or of the provisions concerning the sources of supplies. The findings and judgment were also against the defendants on their counterclaim and alternative counterclaim. Defendants were enjoined from using any confusingly similar name or names or advertising matter and, generally, from "unfair competition."

[Issues]

It will be impractical to discuss, or even to mention, all the points argued here, pro and con. These have all been considered and many cases read, some of which led largely down byroads. The basic question here is whether this contract is illegal and void because in violation of the Missouri or federal anti-trust statutes. The applicable Missouri statutes are §§ 416.010-416.050, RSMo 1949, V. A. M. S. (to which revision all statutory references will be hereafter made), and the primary federal law is the Sherman Act, Title 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2; see, also, the Clayton Act, Title 15 U. S. C. A. § 14. Plaintiff's essential position, as briefed here, is that the entire contract is valid as a lawful exercise of patent rights which a state may not infringe, and that in any event the good and the bad (if any) in the contract were severable, and that the bad had been wholly abandoned, so that enforcement of the contract should not be denied. We take no further note of the evidence or the arguments concerning the legality or illegality of the Dairy Queen National Trade Association; its existence and activities certainly added no luster to the legal status of this contract but, in view of our conclusions, that issue would merely encumber an already burdened opinion.

["Vertical Price-Fixing"]

We have concluded that this contract is illegal and void as in direct violation of the Missouri statutes, supra. It was substantially conceded at the oral argument here that the contract was, on its face, violative of those statutes, but counsel contended, as we understood, that the broad, protective wings of the patent monopoly and the alleged abandonment of any possible illegality, saved plaintiff's position. There can be no doubt here that the Bollinis on the one hand, and defendants on the other, agreed specifically and in writing that all retail selling prices might be set by the first parties and that defendants would not deviate from those prices. This form of contract was given to Bollini by Axene and Lanaghan for his use with his sub-franchise operators; the record fairly shows that these men were the ones from whom Bollini acquired his rights. Plaintiff took over Bollini's contract with defendants, with all its infirmities and inequities; and we think that this contract remained burdened with the acts of plain-tiff's predecessor in the enforcement of such provisions, at least in the absence of a clear and unequivocal renunciation (or better, a contract amendment) which is wholly lacking here. The evidence shows that Bollini sought enforcement of the pricing provisions and the attainment of a scheme of uniform prices. Plaintiff denied all enforcement of the price-fixing provisions on his own part, but his evidence falls far short of establishing any affirmative "abandonment," if such there may be. This type of price-control provision may be described as "vertical price fixing," discussed and condemned in State ex inf. Dalton v. Miles Laboratories et al. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,155], Banc, 365 Mo. 350, 282 S. W. 2d 564. In our case the contract itself bespoke price fixing; in the Miles case the practice was deduced from the evidence of activities. As the court there said, our statutes are so explicit and all-inclusive that there is no room left for construction by the courts; the court said further, loc. cit. 573: "* * * Sections 416.010 and 416.020 denounce and condemn any person entering into any combination, agreement or understanding with any other person or persons (note the use in the disjunctive of both singular and plural) in restraint of trade or competition or to regulate, control, fix or maintain the price of any article; and, Section 416.040 is directed against all arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations or understandings between any two or more persons designed or tending to lessen full and free competition in, or to increase the market price of, any product. * * *" It was specifically held that our statutes are not aimed solely at combinations of competitors or "horizontal" price fixing. Section 416.040 specifically declares void "all * contracts * * * between any two or more persons * which tend to lessen * full and free competition in the * * sale * of any product * * and all contracts * * made with a view to increase, or which tend to increase the market price of any product * * *." Section 416.020 declares that any person who agrees with any other person to "regulate, control or fix the price of any article * commodity * bought or sold * * *" is guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade and shall be punished therefor. These, together with §§ 416.010 and 416.110, must be construed together as a declaration of policy. The last cited section specifically declares that all contracts made in violation of any of the provisions of Chapter 416 are void. And see, generally, State ex rel. Taylor v. Anderson [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,205], 363 Mo. 884, 254 S. W. 2d 609; State ex inf. Attorney General v. Arkansas Lumber Co. et al., 260 Mo. 212, 169 S. W. 145; and Finck v. Schneider Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S. W. 213 (involving an attempt to recover under an illegal contract). The test is not whether the agreement unreasonably lessens competition or increases prices. State ex rel. Barrett, Attorney General, v. Boeckeler Lumber Co., 301 Mo. 445, 256 S. W. 175; and these statutes would seem to permit of no exception by reason of the amount of degree of restraint or the volume of business affected. State ex rel. Kimbrell, Pros. Atty., v. People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., 246 Mo. 168, 151 S. W. 101. It is not necessary to find a monopoly or a possibility of monopoly in order to find a violation; the statutes do not so require. We do not mean to say that a mere incidental uniformity of prices establishes, in itself, an unlawful agreement or understanding, State ex rel. Taylor v. Anderson [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,205], 363 Mo. 884, 254 S. W. 2d 609. But here we have an express agreement in writing for the control of retail prices, plus at least some active steps in enforcement. The evidence also disclosed that Bollini had issued, and plaintiff had taken over, at least two other subfranchise agreements (Rissane—April 1, 1950; Schaefering, July 18, 1950) containing identical price-fixing provisions.

[Sherman Act]

Under the circumstances we need not consider whether the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Title 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2) was violated, or whether there was a sufficient showing of interference with interstate commerce to bring that act into operation. The latter project, in itself, sometimes leads into a labyrinth of confusion and perplexity.

[Price-Fixing Under "Patent Monopoly"]

Plaintiff urges that the price-fixing clause of this contract is valid because of the limited monopoly afforded to the holder of the freezer patent, and that no state may detract from these rights by anti-trust laws or otherwise, citing Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co. (CC 7), 154 Fed. 358. Actually, proof of the existence and validity of the patent here is woefully absent; we have assumed these elements because the defendants accepted a license under the patent, and we think they are in no position to question either their original licensing agreement from Bollini or his assignment to plaintiff. Among many cases cited by plaintiff we note the following as perhaps the principal ones: United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 47 S. Ct. 192; Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 22 S. Ct. 747; 46 L. Ed. 1058, and Straight Side Basket Corp. v. Webster Basket Co., Inc. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,113], (CC 2), 82 Fed. 2d 245. In the General Electric case, which has since been seriously questioned (United States v. Line Material Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,225], 333 U. S. 287) it was held that the owner of a patented process for manufacturing lamps with tungsten filaments might license another to use the process in making lamps and control the original sale price of the patented article so produced. In other words, it had merely done through another what it might legally have done itself. We note, however, that the contract involved only sales of the patented article itself, and not the unpatented product of a patented article. The court was also careful to note that a patentee might not dispose of a patented article so as to control its resale price. The prior Bement case was substantially to the same effect. In the Straight Side Basket Corp. case, supra, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit did hold that where one licensed patented attachments for making baskets, a condition in the license giving the licensor the power to determine the sale prices of the baskets was lawful as a valid exercise of the patent rights. However, so far as we can find, the case stands wholly alone and is out of harmony with the principles announced in other federal cases. See, specifically: Barber-Colman Co. v. National Tool Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,279], (CC 6), 136 F. 2d 339, 344; Cummer-Graham Co. v. Straightside Basket Corp. (CC 5) [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,241], 142 F. 2d 646, 647, certiorari denied 323 U. S. 726, 65 S. Ct. 60 (involving the same patent); United States v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,318], DC N. Y., 80 F. Supp. 989, 1005; United States v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,352], DC N. J., 82 F. Supp. 753, 814. The courts in the Barber-Colman, Cummer-Graham and General Electric (82 F. Supp. 753, 814) cases expressly disapproved the Webster decision. And the court which rendered that decision stated later, in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America (CC 2) [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,342], 148 F. 2d 416, 438, that the subject was "in flux." The holdings of such cases as Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co. et al. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,201], 320 U. S. 661, 64 S. Ct. 268; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; United States v. United States Gypsum Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,226], 333 U. S. 364, 68 S. Ct. 525, and International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, 68 S. Ct. 12, clearly proscribe all right to control and regulate, or to require the use of, unpatented materials in connection with patent-licensing agreements. And it is our conclusion that the federal decisions do not permit a patentee to control or fix the sale prices of the products of a patented machine in the hands of a licensee. So, assuming here the existence of a patent and its validity, we hold that the so-called patent monopoly did not justify or validate the price-fixing provisions of this contract.

[Supply Control]

We consider now certain other provisions of this contract. The provision that all materials used should "meet the standards of quality and specifications" set up by party of the first part was, in itself, valid, and the first party might and should have provided such standards and specifications as he deemed necessary. The remainder of the provision, to the effect that all supplies should be "purchased only from sources approved in writing by the party of the First Part and W. J. Lanaghan, Belleville, Illinois, and these parties reserve the right to change the list of approved sources of supply as it deems best" goes entirely too far; obviously, this has implications beyond a mere quality control and we hold that it constituted an unlawful restraint of trade and of competition under the Missouri statutes; specifically, it certainly would "tend to lessen * full and free competition *" in violation of § 416.040. We have read many authorities cited by plaintiff as justifying "quality control" provisions in connection with the licensing of a trade-mark or trade-name. See, for instance: E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co. v. Celanese Corp. of America, Ct. of Customs and Pat. Apps., 167 F. 2d 484; Green v. Electric Vacuum Cleaner Co., Inc. (CC 6) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,265], 132 F. 2d 312; Coca-Cola Co. et al. v. State of Texas, Civ. App., 225 S. W. 791; Grismore, Assignment of Trade Marks, 30 Mich. Law Review 489; Callmann, Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks (1950), Vol. 3, §§ 65.1, 65.2; Morse-Starrett Products Co. v. Steccone, DC (Calif.), 86 F. Supp. 796, 805. In this field we do not concede that federal authorities are controlling, if in conflict with our statutes. The right to the use of a trade-name or mark, though it be subject to federal registration, does not arise from that registration or from federal law, but from a prior, exclusive appropriation and user under the common law. E. F. Prichard Co. et al. v. Consumers Brewing Co. (CC 6), 136 F. 2d 512. And the registration is merely "prima facie evidence" of the right. Prichard, supra. But, even so, we find no authorities, federal or otherwise, which uphold provisions so broad as those present here, which gave to the licensor and a third person full power to designate and to change the actual sources for any and all supplies used. It is not necessary to consider the discussion of "tying" agreements as used in connection with licenses issued under patents, though the point is covered pro and con in the briefs; some of those authorities are referred to above in our discussion of the price-fixing clause. We find that the last quoted provision of this contract is illegal and void under the Missouri statutes. The provision that "no product, other than Dairy Queen may or will be sold on the premises * without written approval*" has been seriously questioned in the briefs. We shall not burden this opinion with a discussion of it.

[Abandonment]

Counsel for plaintiff urge that the questioned provisions, if illegal, are severable from the remaining parts of the contract, that they were abandoned, and that plaintiff is entitled to relief, particularly in view of defendants' fraud in the payment of royalties. This record does not support a finding of "abandonment." Plaintiff took over this contract tainted with its inherent illegality and with what had been done by his predecessor to enforce it; he did nothing to change or amend it affirmatively, and some of his actions at least bordered upon the enforcement of the "sources of supply" provisions. The doctrine of abandonment, as urged here, sometimes called "purging," seems to be confined to patent infringement cases where the patent owner is found, in equity, to have fully abandoned a prior illegal restraint and to have dissipated its results, he then being permitted to proceed. Sylvania Industrial Corp. v. Visking Corp. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 52,890], 132 F. 2d 947; Campbell et al. v. Mueller et al. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,540], 159 F. 2d 803; Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Bulldog Electric Co. (CC 4), 179 F. 2d 139. The facts of those cases and the general application of the doctrine render it inapplicable here. In those cases the courts had a continuing jurisdiction to maintain the state of "purge"; in our case plaintiff sought and obtained substantial damages for a breach of contract, not for an infringement, and his position must stand or fall on the status quo as of July 14, 1951.

[Public Policy]

Our statutes, as indicated (see particularly § 416.110) declare to be void "all contracts or agreements made in violation of any of the provisions of this chapter * * *." We have held that this contract did violate those statutes in at least two respects. The statutes contain no exceptions or qualifications. We need not delve into the technical aspects of severability or non-severability, or into the legality of the consideration; such might be necessary in the absence of a declared public policy and public interest. We hold that a total illegality is the price here of inserting such provisions in violation of our statutory public policy. We note by way of analogy the case of Edward Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,524], 329 U. S. 394, involving the federal anti-trust statutes; there one party had granted a patent license for the manufacture of baking pans by means of the patented process and on a royalty basis; the agreement contained pricing provisions which were held to be illegal. It was also held that the whole contract was illegal since the agreement to pay royalties and the agreement to sell at prices fixed by the other party were not severable. And see also: McGregor v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,525], 329 U. S. 402; Park-in Theatres v. Paramount-Richards Theatres, DC Del., 90 F. Supp. 730; Hazelton v. Sheckells, 202 U. S. 71.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

We entertain no illusions here concerning the conduct of the defendants. We find that there was substantial evidence of cheating in the royalty payments by purchasing mix for "wholesale cash" with no charge entries, and by false reports. We wholly fail to see, however, how this fact can eliminate the basic illegality of the contract itself, and we hold that it does not. In so holding, we are not giving aid to the defendants, as plaintiff's counsel would seem to imply; we are merely refusing to enforce the contract on the grounds of public policy, and not as an aid to the defendants, or as a matter of private right. See United States v. The Bayer Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,164], DC N. Y., 135 F. Supp. 65.

[Injunction Affirmed]

The trial court enjoined defendants from using the name "Dairy Queen," or any name confusingly similar thereto, and from using any advertising, signs or paraphernalia which were the same as, or confusingly similar to, those of plaintiff. We find that the evidence justified the injunctive relief, regardless of the illegality of the contract; the conduct of the defendants which gave rise to the injunction occurred after they repudiated the contract. That part of the judgment will be affirmed.

["Pari Delicto"]

The only matters remaining to be considered are the counterclaim and alternative counterclaim of the defendants. In the counterclaim they seek treble damages, computed upon all sums paid by them pursuant to the contract, both to plaintiff and his predecessors. In the view we take, defendants were active parties to the illegality of this contract, in "pari delicto" so to speak, and they are entitled to no relief upon their complaint of its illegality. Such is not the intention of § 416.090 providing for treble damages; we shall not permit the active participants in a forbidden contract to recover damages, treble or otherwise, against the other party on account of the very act of illegality in which they themselves have engaged. Bersch v. Fire Underwriters' Ass'n of St. Louis, Banc, Mo., 241 S. W. 428. Generally, the parties to an illegal contract will be left in the position where they put themselves, and the law will not afford affirmative relief to either. Gilbert v. Edwards, Mo. App., 276 S. W. 2d 611, 620, and cases cited; Donovan v. Kansas City, 352 Mo. 430, 175 S. W. 2d 874, 175 S. W. 2d 874, 878. A distinction is sometimes made between executed and unexecuted contracts. Murray v. Murray, Mo., 293 S. W. 2d 436; Pearl v. Interstate Securities Co., 357 Mo. 160, 206 S. W. 2d 975. This contract had been executed in so far as defendants had made payments thereon and actually operated thereunder, and neither party is entitled to any relief. The alternative counterclaim asserted a breach of the contract by the installation of a competing business in defendants' territory and by other interference with their business and rights under the contract. Of course, defendants will not be permitted to recover damages based upon the contract which we have already held to be wholly illegal.

[Judgment]

The judgment for damages in favor of plaintiff and against defendants is reversed; the judgment awarding a permanent injunction against defendants, and the judgment against defendants on their counterclaim and alternative counterclaim are affirmed. It is so ordered.

All concur.

[¶ 69,295] William J. Ludwig v. American Greetings Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 13,549. Filed March 11, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Practices Constituting Unlawful Discrimination—Placing Competitor's Customers on "Consignment" Basis—Furnishing Display Cabinets—Payment of Cash Bonus.—An allegation that a manufacturer of greeting cards injured the business of a competing wholesaler by placing the wholesaler's former customers on a consignment basis in order to induce them to transfer their business to the manufacturer stated a prima facie case of indirect price discrimination under section 2(a) of the Clayton Act. Also, the wholesaler's allegation that the manufacturer furnished display cabinets and paid cash bonuses to induce certain retailers to purchase from it rather than from the wholesaler charged violations of sections 2(c), 2(d), and 2(e) of the Clayton Act.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.470, 3508, 3520, 3522, 3524.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Damages for Violations of the Antitrust Laws Under Clayton Act, Section 4—Who May Bring Suit—Price Discrimination—Action on Behalf of Alleged Discriminator's Competitor.—A wholesaler of greeting cards who competed with a manufacturer of a substantially competitive product was entitled to maintain a treble damage action charging the manufacturer with discriminating between retailers in violation of section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The trial court, in dismissing the action, indicated that his principal reason for that ruling was the fact that the action was on behalf of a competitor of the alleged discriminator, rather than on behalf of a customer claiming discrimination between himself and another customer. The Clayton Act has been construed as giving a right of action to a competitor who is injured in his business as well as to a customer who has been discriminated against.

Before SIMONS, MARTIN and MILLER, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action]

MILLER, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Appellant brought this action in the District Court to recover treble damages for alleged violation by the appellee of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by Section 1 of the Robinson-Patman Act. Sections 13 and 15, Title 15, U. S. Code. Reliance was also placed upon Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, Section 13a, Title 15, U. S. Code, but subsequent to the decision of the District Court the Supreme Court decided Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,915], 355 U. S. 373, and in view of the ruling in that case reliance upon Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act has been properly abandoned on this appeal.

[Complaint]

The complaint alleges that the appellee was engaged in the business of manufacturing at its plant in Cleveland, Ohio, greeting cards together with related products, such as paper and ribbons, and selling and distributing its products in interstate commerce to more than 40,000 retail customers or purchasers throughout the United States; that the appellant, as an individual, had been engaged in the business of purchasing from manufacturers and reselling at wholesale to various retail customers and purchasers in the state of Ohio greeting cards which constituted a substantial competitive product to the greeting cards manufactured and sold by the appellee in the same territory; that the appellee in the course of its business had done certain acts, hereinafter set out more in detail, with the effect of interfering with the resale of merchandise of the appellant as a competitor, which acts had and continued to have a tendency unduly to restrain, hinder, suppress and eliminate competition between the appellee and the appellant in the sale and distribution of greeting cards in commerce; and that appellant had been injured in his business in the amount of $15,158.00 by reason of said acts which were forbidden by the antitrust laws of the United States.

[Acts Charged]

Several specific acts on the part of the appellee are set out in the complaint, including the allegations that (1) appellee bought and took over stocks of greeting cards sold by the appellant to retail sellers and arranged with retail customer sellers of the appellant to junk and destroy stocks of greeting cards distributed to such retail sellers by the appellant, (2) that appellee furnished new greeting card display cabinets free of charge to retail sellers formerly serviced by the appellant, provided said retail sellers would transfer their business from the appellant to the appellee, (3) that appellee offered to repurchase greeting card display cabinets from retail sellers, and to pay a cash bonus to such retail sellers as an inducement to drop the line of greeting cards supplied by the appellant and to take on cards supplied by the appellee, and (4) that appellee agreed to place former retail customers of the appellant on a consignment basis in order to induce such customers to transfer their business from appellant to appellee.

[Prior Proceedings]

The material allegations of the complaint were denied by the appellee. After hearing evidence, the District Judge sustained the motion of appellee for judgment and entered an order dismissing the complaint, from which this appeal was taken.

[Issues]

In making his ruling, the District Judge referred to the fact that diversity of citizenship did not exist, and stated that although the acts complained of might properly be the subject of an unfair competition suit in the state court, in his opinion, they were not such as to confer under the statute a right on the part of the plaintiff to maintain a private action in the District Court, and that he was without jurisdiction to consider it. He made no findings of fact with respect to whether the appellee had or had not engaged in the practices complained of, or what practices the appellee had engaged in in its competition with the appellant. Accordingly, we have no findings of fact to review in the light of the evidence or to use as a basis for deciding whether they support the District Judge's conclusion of law. On the contrary, the District Judge stated in his opinion that "under the complaint in this case the charges alleged are not such as to confer under the statute the right of private litigation on the part of the plaintiff" (italics added). In view of that statement and in the absence of findings, we will only consider on this review whether the charges alleged in the complaint constitute a violation by the appellee of the anti-trust laws of the United States, and, if so, whether the appellant is a person within the meaning of Section 15, Title 15, U. S. Code, who has been injured in his business or property by reason thereof. If we decide those questions in the affirmative, the judgment must be reversed. Section 15, Title 15, U. S. Code.

[Indirect Price Discrimination]

The answer to this question is found by a consideration of Section 2, subsections (a) through (e) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, Section 13(a)-(e), Title 15, U. S. Code. Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Co., supra [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,915], 355 U. S. 373, 378-379, 382.

Appellee contends that the complaint does not allege any discrimination in price by it between different purchasers of its greeting cards, which is a requirement under Section 2(a) of the Act. Section 13(a), Title 15, U. S. Code. The statute makes unlawful price discrimination which is either direct or indirect. Various trade practices have been held to constitute indirect price discrimination. Examples are the inclusion of improper freight rates, the granting to favored customers of purchase options at existing prices in a rising market, special discounts, and special rebates. Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,363], 324 U. S. 726, 740; Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,247], 334 U. S. 37, 42-44; Moog Industries, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,527], 238 F. (2) 43, 50, C. A. 8th, affirmed 355 U. S. 411 [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,918], rehearing denied, 356 U. S. 905. We are of the opinion that placing former retail customers of the appellant on a consignment basis in order to induce such customers to transfer their business to the appellee, as charged in the complaint, constitutes in substance a prima facie case of indirect price discrimination. It is true that such a prima facie case may be rebutted, but the burden of doing so is upon the person charged with the violation. Section 2(b) of the Act, Section 13(b), Title 15, U. S. Code. The District Judge did not reach or pass upon such an issue.

Other types of discrimination are made unlawful under subsections (c)(d) and (e) of the Act, Sections 13(c)(d) and (e), Title

15, U. S. Code. Subsection (c) makes it unlawful to pay or grant a commission or compensation, except for services rendered, in connection with the sale of goods, wares or merchandise. Subsection (d) makes it unlawful to pay anything of value in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by a customer in connection with the handling or offering for sale of any products sold to him, unless such consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products. Subsection (e) makes it unlawful to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser of a commodity bought for resale by furnishing any services or facilities connected with the handling of such commodity so purchased, upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms. We believe that the furnishing by appellee of new greeting card display cabinets free of charge to retail sellers formerly serviced by the appellant and the payment of a cash bonus to certain retail customers of the appellant as an inducement to purchase appellee's cards instead of appellant's, as charged in the complaint, constitute a violation of these sections of the statute. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. v. Gus Blass Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,400], 150 F. (2) 988, C .A. 8th, cert. denied, 326 U. S. 773; Elizabeth Arden, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,467], 156 F. (2) 132, C. A. 2nd; Sun Cosmetic Shoppe v. Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,521], 178 F. (2) 150, C. A. 2nd; United Cigar-Whelan Stores Corp. v. H. Weinreich Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,322], 107 F. Supp. 89, 91, S. D. N. Y.; National Nut Co. v. Kelling Nut Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,405], 61 F. Supp. 76, 83, N. D. Ill.

[Injury to Competitor]

The opinion of the District Judge indicates that the principal reason for his ruling was because this action was on behalf of a competitor of the appellant rather than by a customer claiming discrimination between himself and another customer. The present action by a competitor appeared to him to be more in the nature of unfair competition than a violation of the antitrust laws. It may be that appellant might have a cause of action for unfair competition, but such remedy is not an exclusive one. The Act has been construed as giving a right of action to a competitor who is injured in his business as well as to a customer who has been discriminated against. Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,906], 348 U. S. 115, 118; Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,251], 334 U. S. 219, 236; Central Ice Cream Co. v. Golden Rod Ice Cream Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,017], 257 F. (2) 417, 418, C. A. 7th; Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 37 F. Supp. 728, 735, W. D. Ky., affirmed, 136 F. (2) 12, C. A. 6th; Streiffer v. Seafarers Sea Chest Corp. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,074], 162 F. Supp. 602, 607, E. D. La.

[Affirmative Defenses]

Certain affirmative defenses pleaded by the appellee were not involved in the District Court's ruling and have not been considered on this review. They remain open for a ruling by the District Judge in the further proceedings in this case.

[Judgment Reversed]

The judgment is reversed and the case remanded to the District Court for further proceedings consistent with the views expressed herein.

[Temporary Injunction Denied]

RABIN, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff, a retail phamacist in Flushing, Queens County, N. Y., moves for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant, a competitor, from the alleged violation, as far back as March, 1957, of fair trade contracts entered into by manufacturers and retailers of certain pharmaceutical products. The plaintiff had knowledge of the claimed violations which are the basis of this action for almost two years but took no steps to restrain them until the commencement of this action in January, 1959, and the making of this motion for a temporary injunction by an order to show cause dated February 10, 1959. The long delay is unexplained. Accordingly, the drastic relief herein sought is denied (Flamm v. Noble, 43 N. Y. S. 2d 922, aff'd 266 App. Div. 1001, 45 N. Y. S. 2d 413; Vilardi v. Sinclair Refining Co., 147 N. Y. S. 2d 269; Giordano v. Dellwood Dairy Co., 153 Misc. 54, 275 N. Y. S. 193). However, the Special Term, Part III, calendar of this court is virtually up to date, since January, 1959, issues have already been reached for trial. Plaintiff can thus obtain an early trial by placing the cause on the calendar for the April, 1959, term. Submit order.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Tolling Period of Limitation—Applicability of Tolling Provision to Subsidiaries, Agents, or Successor Corporations Not Named in Government Action.—The tolling provision of the Clayton Act applies only to named parties in the Government suit, and the statute of limitations is not tolled as to unnamed subsidiaries of a named parent corporation. Since the defendant corporation in the instant action was not a named defendant in the Government suit and was not even in existence until after a decree in that suit was entered, the statute did not toll as to the defendant. No authority was cited in support of the position that unnamed subsidiaries, agents, or successor corporations are subject to the tolling provision.

[Statute of Limitations—Tolling]

BRUCHHAUSEN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff brought this action for treble damages pursuant to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, and the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sections 12 to 27, inclusive, alleging acts of conspiracy in restraint and monopolization of the distribution, licensing and exhibition of motion pictures. Defendant Paramount Pictures Corporation now brings this motion pursuant to Rule 56(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to dismiss all claims asserted against it which accrued prior to September 22, 1946, alleging that the six year statute of limitations as to it expired on that date.

Plaintiff alleges that 15 U. S. C. A. 16 provides for the tolling of the statute of limitations during a suit brought by the Government against the defendant in a civil anti-trust suit; that such a Government suit was brought against Paramount Pictures, Inc. and was pending from July 1938 until March 1949; that since Paramount Pictures Corporation was the successor and alter ego of Paramount Pictures, Inc. that the statute of limitations was tolled at least until March 1949 and that therefore defendant's motion should be denied. In the alternative, plaintiff moves for an order compelling defendant Paramount to answer certain interrogatories before an adjudication of defendant's motion.

[Defendant—Government Suit]

The facts are undisputed. Paramount Pictures, Inc. was a holding company engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, including the ownership and operation of theatres directly and through subsidiaries. One of its wholly-owned subsidiaries was Paramount Film Distributing Corporation which licensed and distributed films.

The Government brought suit against Paramount Pictures Inc., Equity No. 87-273, U. S. D. C., SDNY, and that suit was pending from July 1938 until March 1949. Pursuant to the decree entered therein Paramount Pictures, Inc. was dissolved and its theatre and exhibition assets were transferred to Paramount Pictures Corporation. One of the assets so transferred was Paramount Film Distributing Corporation which became a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures Corporation. Paramount Pictures Corporation was formed in late 1949 and commmenced doing business on January 1, 1950.

[Tolling Provision]

The tolling provision of 15 U. S. C. A. 16 provides as follows:

"Whenever any suit or proceeding in equity or criminal prosecution is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws, the running of the statute of limitations in respect of each and every private right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said suit or proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof."

[Contention]

Plaintiff alleges that Paramount Film Distributing Corporation is an alter ego of Paramount Pictures Corporation, is completely controlled and dominated by it and is a mere agent or department of Paramount Pictures Corporation. This, plaintiff alleges, tolls the statute of limitations as to Paramount Pictures Corporation, pursuant to 15 U. S. C. A. 16.

[Scope of Tolling Provision]

The tolling provisions of the statute apply only to named parties in the Government suit and the statute of limitations is not tolled as to unnamed subsidiaries of a named parent corporation. Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,722], 213 F. 2d 284; Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,592], 117 F. Supp. 747; Christensen v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,751], 95 F. Supp. 446; Electric Theatre Co. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,560], 113 F. Supp. 937. Since Paramount Pictures Corporation was not a named defendant in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. and was not even in existence until after the decree in that case was issued, the statute does not toll as to it.

[Interrogatories]

Plaintiff cites no authority to maintain its position that unnamed subsidiaries, agents or successor corporations are subject to the tolling statute, therefore the answers to the interrogatories propounded by plaintiff are immaterial to this motion.

[Motion Granted]

The motion of the defendant, Paramount Pictures Corporation is granted. The plaintiff's cross motion is denied.

statute declaring void, with certain exceptions, every contract by which anyone is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade, or business was upheld over the contention that the statute was unconstitutional because it so impaired the right to contract as to amount to the taking of property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution. "We cannot agree that an act is unconstitutional that denounces in the main agreements designed to prevent a person from following his lawful 'profession, trade or business' when such agreements in the cases cited and others like them have for so long been rejected by the courts for fundamental reasons."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2303.11.

Contracts in Restraint of Trade Under State Antitrust Laws—Contract Under Which Persons Are Restrained from Pursuing A Lawful Profession or Trade—Legality of Contract—Exceptions to Statute Declaring Such Contracts Void—Right To Repudiate Contract.—An individual who was a director-officer-stockholder of a newspaper corporation, which sold all of its assets (including good will) to another company, could not repudiate his agreement, for which he was paid $1,000, not to re-enter the newspaper field in a specified county as an owner, a stockholder, or a partner for a period of five years. The individual had contended that the agreement, to which his associates also were parties, was void under a Florida law declaring contracts under which persons are restrained from pursuing a lawful profession or trade void, and that the agreement did not come within the exemptions to the law as to the sale of the good will of a business and to a stockholder selling his shares in a corporation. The agreement not to compete was an indispensable part of the sale of the corporation's assets and therefore could not be considered by itself. In reality, the individual and his associates sold a newspaper and all of its assets, including good will, for a price, and as a part of the deal, they represented that they would secure the buyer against competition from them. While it was true that the agreement was not excepted from the prohibition of the law as an agreement made in conjunction with the sale of stock by a shareholder, the agreement was excepted from the prohibition of the law as an agreement made in conjunction with the sale of the good will of a business. On equitable principles, the individual, having presumably got his share of the purchase price and having surely received $1,000 for his promise not to compete, should not be allowed to repudiate his obligation. The individual was not prohibited as an employee from securing a livelihood but was only precluded from entering the field as a proprietor.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.

For the appellant: James M. Smith, Jr.

For the appellee: Greene, Ayres & Greene.

[Agreement Not To Compete]

THOMAS, Justice [In full text]: The appellee sought in the Circuit Court of the Fifth Judicial Circuit a declaratory decree construing and declaring his rights and status under a certain agreement between appellant and himself, declaring the agreement void, and holding him to be free to engage in the newspaper and printing business in Marion County.

From the allegations of his complaint it seems that the appellee, and Clyde Hooker, R. F. Brown and Marion Publishing Company, as parties of the first part, entered into the contract with appellant, as party of the second part, by which they agreed that they would not re-enter the newspaper field in the county, directly or indirectly, as owner, stockholder or partner for a period of five years and would not abet such competition.

The appellee alleged that he was untrained in any other business and could not, therefore, earn a livelihood for his family in the county. He claimed that under Sec. 542.12, Florida Statutes 1957, and F. S. A., the agreement was not binding on him inasmuch as he had not sold the good will of any business, and had not executed it as a stockholder selling his shares in a corporation.

[Florida Statute]

By the law are condemned contracts under which persons are restrained from pursuing a lawful profession, trade or business, with two paragraphs of exceptions. One relates to partners and is not involved here. Sec. 542.12(3), supra. The other appears to exclude from the operation of the law persons in three categories: those who sell the good will of businesses, shareholders who sell all their stock in corporations, and employees or agents. Persons in the first two classes may agree with the buyers to desist from engaging in a similar business for a reasonable time in a reasonable area, while those in the third class, agents and employees, may assume the same obligations and may further agree not to solicit old customers of the former employer. Sec. 542.12(2).

[Sale of Newspaper]

The appellee devoted the allegations in his complaint to the one contract dealing with promises not to compete with the appellant for a stated period in a specified area but it is not possible to decide this controversy on the agreement isolated by him. A few days before it was executed, Marion Publishing Company, as party of the first part had executed a memorandum of agreement with appellant as party of the second part for the sale, by the former to the latter, of The Marion Sun, a weekly newspaper, and all the equipment, circulation lists and good will of the paper.

The appellee, who owned about 25% of the stock of Marion Publishing Company and held the positions of director and secretary in the corporation, was reluctant to sign the ancillary agreement securing the purchaser against competition from the signatories. His associates fearing that the sale, then evidently being negotiated pursuant to the memorandum, might not be consummated unless the agreement not to compete was signed paid him $1,000 consideration for his signature.

[Constitutionality of Statute]

In its answer the appellant took the position that the appellee was restrained only from re-entering the newspaper or printing business in the capacity of owner, stockholder or partner and from aiding someone else in the establishment of a competing business. The appellant asserted that Sec. 542.12, supra, had no application to the present situation. Furthermore, appellant charged that the statute was unconstitutional because it so impaired the right to contract as to amount to taking its property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States. The circuit judge held that the assault upon the statute should fail and the ruling gave this court jurisdiction of the controversy. Leafer v. State, Fla., 104 So. 2d 350.

In the appellant's brief there is a dearth of citations to buttress its contention that the primary inhibition in the law unduly restricts the right to contract by condemning agreements designed to prevent a person from following a lawful trade, business or profession.

Originally, under the common law of England, contracts restricting a man's right to follow his calling were considered void as against public policy. This view developed from the requirement that a man could not pursue a trade to which he had not become apprenticed, and that one so committed was subject to penalty if he did not exercise that trade. Consequently an agreement to restrain him from following his trade would result either in his violation of the law or the deprivation of his right to earn a livelihood.

Before the passage of time and the change of conditions brought refinements of the rule there had been reluctance on the part of courts to enforce contracts likely to stifle competition, Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502, or to interfere with a person's right to make a living, Love et al. v. Miami Laundry Co., 118 Fla., 137, 160 So. 32.

In Arond v. Grossman et al., Fla., 75 So. 2d 593, we said that contracts "not to compete or work for a competitor" were unenforceable in the absence of "some special equity." We have furnished italics.

We have referred briefly to the history of such contracts and their fate in the courts because the appellant, in effect, asks us to hold invalid an act that, following the principles announced, generally condemns them with, of course, noteworthy exceptions. We cannot agree that an act is unconstitutional that denounces in the main agreements designed to prevent a person from following his lawful "profession, trade or business" when such agreements in the cases cited and others like them have for so long been rejected by the courts for fundamental reasons.

Moreover, the appellant's challenge is not impressive for under the exceptions may be done what appellant attempted to accomplish, namely, the preclusion of competition by those from whom it had bought the business including the good will. This seems to have been long recognized as an exception to the general rule, Massari v. Salciccia, 102 Fla. 847, 136 So. 522; Wilson v. Pigue, 151 Fla. 734, 10 So. 2d 561, and the appellant in undertaking to operate under it was afforded abundant opportunity to protect itself from the competition of the sellers in a reasonable territory for a reasonable time.

We come, then, to the conclusion that the chancellor ruled correctly when he held the act constitutional. As for the appellee, as appellant concedes, he is not prohibited as an employee from securing a livelihood for his family but is only precluded from entering the field as a proprietor.

This view does not, however, mean that we agree with the ultimate decision of the chancellor.

[Right to Relief]

Appellee entered a court of equity and when he did so he became amenable to equitable principles. We take now a close look at the facts to see whether or not he should have been rewarded with a decree declaring him "free to engage in the newspaper business and * * * the printing business in Marion County" without interference from the appellant.

When negotiations to sell the property were under way appellee displayed antagonism to the deal and this opposition became so strong that his associates finally paid him $1,000 to sign the "non-competition" agreement. Although the attack in the complaint was directed at but one agreement, it would be impractical and illogical to decide the point of law now involved without considering the two. They were so closely related that they should be examined in pari materia to ascertain the facts essential to proper disposition of this litigation. Plainly, execution of the agreement assuring noncompetition was so necessary to consummation of the sale that the appellee thought his signature should fetch him a sizeable amount of money, which it did, and his associates thought his signing was worth their disgorging that amount. Doubtless the appellant, too, regarded it an indispensable part of the transaction.

Now the appellee, with the $1,000 in his pocket, attempts to escape the effect of his bargain upon grounds that are tenuous indeed. While claiming the protection of the first part of the act declaring invalid contracts in restraint of the exercise of a lawful business and so on, he disclaims any applicability of the exceptions, because he says he did not sell the good will of a business and did not as a shareholder of a corporation sell all his stock in the corporation.

The second of these statements is literally true because it was the assets of the corporation, and not the stock that was sold. The first is very difficult to understand. To accept the appellee's literal interpretation of the part of the statute referring to transfer of good will would amount to keeping the latter without regard for the spirit by holding he was not "[o]ne who [sold] the good will of a business." But if we focus on the entire transaction, it is plain that in reality he and his colleagues for a price sold a newspaper and all its assets including the good will. As a part of the deal he and they represented that they would secure the buyer against competition from them. The importance of this assurance was fully realized by appellee, else why did he put the value of $1,000 on his signature and why did he think his associates met his demand. Having, presumably, got his share of the purchase price, and having, surely, received his "bonus" he should not in a court of equity be upheld in his attempt to repudiate his obligation.

[Dismissal of Complaint]

The decree is reversed with directions to dismiss the complaint at the cost of the appellee.

Affirmed in part; reversed in part.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Federal Statute of Limitations—Claims Barred Under State Law Prior to Federal Statute's Effective Date—Effect of State Tolling Provision as to Defendant's Absence from State.—Where it had been held that the Federal four-year statute of limitations was tolled by the pendency of a Government antitrust action and that the plaintiffs could go back to July 3, 1950 for the recovery of damages, the defendants asserted that the application of the Federal tolling statute left enforceable plaintiffs' rights which existed on the date of the bringing of the Government action on July 2, 1954 and that the Connecticut limitation statute of three years, then applicable (the Federal statute not having been enacted until January 7, 1956), had left alive at that time (July 2, 1954) rights which had accrued during the three years prior thereto, that is, the period back to July 2, 1951. They argued that the cut-off date could not go back to July 2, 1950 because of Section 4B of the Clayton Act, which provides that no cause of action barred under existing law on the effective date of this section shall be revived.

The court, noting that the assertion did not take into consideration the Connecticut statute tolling the limitation period during the absence of the defendant from the state, ruled that since the defendant could not deny its absence from Connecticut from 1947 to 1953 (by reason of a prior adjudication), the operation of the state three-year statute of limitations was tolled during that period, and causes of action accruing between July 3, 1950 and July 3, 1951 were still alive on the effective date of the Federal statute. Although the effect of the Connecticut tolling statute on such rights goes back to 1947, it does not follow that rights accruing between 1947 and 1950 remained alive for remedial claims. It was the Federal statute of limitations and the Federal tolling statute which fixed July 3, 1950 as the date to which the plaintiffs could go back, and Connecticut statutes were only referred to to determine which of the plaintiffs' claimed accrued rights were dead at the hand of the state limitations statutes and were incapable of being revived when the Federal statute took effect.

Amending and supplementing a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Connecticut, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,277.

Supplemental Memorandum of Decision

[Contention]

ANDERSON, District Judge [In full text]: The defendants have asked the court to amend that part of the first full paragraph at the top of page 8 in the Memorandum of February 10, 1959, which reads as follows, ". . . the plaintiffs may go back to July 3, 1950 with respect to this part of the action" so that the date July 3, 1950 will be changed to July 3rd, 1951. They claim that application of the federal tolling statute left enforceable plaintiff's rights which existed on the date of the bringing of the Louisiana action on July 2, 1954 and that the state limitation statute of 3 years, then applicable (the federal statute not having been enacted until January 7, 1956), had left alive at that time (July 2, 1954) rights which had accrued during the 3 years prior thereto, that is, the period back to July 2, 1951.

The defendants argue that the cut-off date cannot go back to July 2, 1950 because of Section 4B of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 15b) which provides:

> "No cause of action barred under existing law on the effective date of this section and section 15a and 16 of this title shall be revived by said sections."

However, these assertions by the defendants do not take into consideration the tolling of the Connecticut statute because of the provision of Sec. 8330 of the General Statutes of the State of Conn. (Rev. Ed.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

1949) and the absence of United Fruit from the State of Connecticut between 1947 and 1953. The defendants may have been misled by the statement in the first full paragraph on page 6 of the memorandum of decision which reads ". . . the possible absence of the defendants from Connecticut for purposes of tolling the Connecticut Statutes under Conn. Gen. Stat. Sec. 8330 (Rev. Ed. 1949) is not an issue in this case." This quoted portion should be amended by adding thereto the words "except as hereinafter noted." While the defendants absence from the state and the Connecticut tolling statute were not in issue with respect to the questions as they were discussed in the memorandum, they do need to be considered in dealing with the point now raised by the defendants and discussed in this memorandum.

[Connecticut Tolling Statute]

The Connecticut tolling statute reads as follows:

> "Sec. 8330. Defendant's absence from the state to be excluded, when. In computing the time limited in the several cases aforesaid, the time during which the party, against whom there may be any such cause of action, shall be without the state, shall be excluded from the computation."

The issue of United Fruit Company's absence from Connecticut, for the purposes of Section 8330, has already been litigated in the New York case, Banana Distributors, Inc. v. United Fruit Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,876], 158 F. Supp. 153 (S. D. N. Y. 1957). In that case the jury rendered a special verdict finding United Fruit to be "without the state" of Connecticut from 1947 to 1953, and that verdict is binding on United Fruit here. It does not matter that these plaintiffs were not parties to the former suit, for United Fruit, against whom the decision is applied, was a party there and actively litigated the merits of the case. The res judicata effect of that determination is not undercut by the slowly dying theory of mutuality of estoppel. See United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 (7th Cir. 1944). All that due process requires is that the party who is now being bound was a party to the earlier judgment. Bernhard v. Bank of America National Trust & Savings Ass'n., 19 Cal. 2d 807, 812, 122 P. 2d 892, 894 (1942). See also Gart v. Cole, Docket #25358, U. S. Court of Appeals, 2d Cir. 1959; Israel v. Wood Dolson, 1 N. Y. 2d 116, 134 N. E. 2d 97 (1956); Good Health Dairy Products Corp. v. Emery, 275 N. Y. 14, 9 N. E. 2d 758 (1937); U. S. v. Wexler, 8 F. 2d 880 (E. D. N. Y. 1925); Coca Cola Co. v. Pepsi Cola Co., 36 Del. 124, 172 A. 260 (1934); Jenkins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 89 S. C. 408, 71 S. E. 1010 (1911); Atkinson v. White, 60 Me. 396 (1872); cf. Kessler v. Eldred, 206 U. S. 285 (1907); 35 Yale L. J. 607; 18 N. Y. U. L. Q. Rev. 565; 12 Corn. L. Q. 92; 29 Ill. L. Rev. 93; 9 Va. L. Reg. (N. S.) 241; Freeman, Judgments, 932-935 (5th Ed. 1925).

[Ruling]

Since United Fruit may not deny its absence from Connecticut from 1947 to 1953, the operation of Section 8316 is tolled during that period, and causes of action accruing between July 3, 1950 and July 3, 1951 were still alive on the effective date of the federal statute.

It should be understood that although the effect of the Connecticut tolling statute on the rights mentioned goes back to 1947 it does not follow that rights accruing between 1947 and 1950 remained alive for remedial claims in the present action. As stated in the memorandum and now reaffirmed by this supplemental memorandum, it is the federal statute of limitations and the federal tolling statute which fix July 3, 1950 as the date to which the plaintiffs may go back and Connecticut statutes are only referred to, to determine what of the plaintiffs' claimed accrued rights were dead at the hand of the state limitations statutes and were incapable of being revived when the federal statute of limitations took hold. It is found that the state statutes had killed only those which accrued before 1947, but the federal statutes limit all those which accrued before July 3, 1950.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Scope of Sherman Act—Applicability to Commerce in Malt Beverages—Pennsylvania Liquor Code—Twenty-First Amendment to United States Constitution.—The Twenty-first Amendment to the United States Constitution did not deprive the United States of jurisdiction to prosecute, under the Sherman Act, a conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale of malt beverages to home consumers in Erie County, Pennsylvania, by fixing case lot prices, mark-ups, and delivery charges and enforcing such acts by boycott. Under the Amendment, the power to regulate intoxicating liquors as articles of commerce is distributed between the state and federal governments. The Amendment does not give to the states complete and exclusive control over commerce in intoxicating liquors, unlimited by the commerce clause; some power to regulate and control that commerce remains in Congress. The Amendment does not bar a Sherman Act prosecution when the Act is not being enforced in such a way as to conflict with state law. In the instant case, the Pennsylvania Liquor Code, regardless of its effect with respect to the sale and distribution of spiritous liquors, permits the functioning of a private entrepreneurial system in the sale and distribution of malt and brewed beverages, and there is nothing in the Pennsylvania law, decisional or otherwise, which authorizes the practices charged and proven in the instant case.

Before Biggs, Chief Judge, and McLaughlin and Hastie, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

By Biggs, Chief Judge [In full text]: George B. Barber, the defendant-appellant, together with others as named in the caption, was indicted on March 19, 1956 for a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1. The United States asserts that the defendants have engaged in a conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale of malt beverages to home consumers in Erie County, Pennsylvania, by fixing case lot prices, mark-ups, and delivery charges, and enforcing the foregoing by boycott. All the defendants, including Barber, were found guilty. A motion for arrest of judgment was made and denied. Barber has appealed.[1] The appeal raises but one question substantially as incorporated in the motion in arrest of judgment.[2]

[Twenty-first Amendment—Jurisdiction]

In brief Barber asserts that the Twenty-first Amendment to the Constitution of the United States[3] ousts the United States of jurisdiction to prosecute restraints of interstate trade or commerce in malt beverages. Intoxicating liquors have acquired special status as articles of commerce because of a very long legal history dealing with numerous phases of their regulation by state police power as well as by the federal government. Since the effective date of the Twenty-first Amendment, December 5, 1933, the power to regulate intoxicating liquors as articles of commerce has been distributed between the state and federal governments and has depended to some degree upon the complementary effects of state and federal laws. But soon after the Amendment became effective the Supreme Court held that the Amendment did not give to the States complete and exclusive control over commerce in intoxicating liquors, unlimited by the Commerce Clause and that some power to regulate and control that commerce remained in Congress. Jameson & Co. v. Morgenthau, 307 U. S. 171 (1939).[4] The quantum of power remaining in Congress to legislate in respect to commerce in intoxicating liquors following the amendment has never been precisely defined but has remained to be marked out by judicial decision. Carter v. Virginia, 321 U. S. 131, 138 (1944), concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Black.

This residuum of power remaining in the federal government was dealt with by the Supreme Court in United States v. Frankfort

[1] [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,973] — F. Supp. — (W. D. Pa. 1957).

[2] In pertinent part as follows:

"The defendants and each of them move the Court to arrest the judgment for the following reasons:

"5. When the malt beverages brewed outside Pennsylvania arrived at the warehouse of the respective defendants in the County of Erie, Pennsylvania, the Interstate transactions in relation to said beverages ended, and the activities of the defendants or any of them thereafter were not a subject of Congressional regulations."

The defendants had previously filed a motion to quash the indictment based on similar grounds. This motion was denied.

[3] The Amendment provides: "Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited."

[4] In the cited case the commerce involved was foreign commerce; viz., the importation of Irish whiskey.

Distilleries [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,338], 324 U. S. 293, 299-300 (1945). In this case liquor wholesalers in Colorado who controlled 75% of spiritous liquors and wines annually shipped into Colorado were indicted under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Section 1, and it was contended by them, relying on the Miller-Tydings Amendment to the Sherman Act, 50 Stat. 693, and on the Colorado "Fair Trade" Act, Session Laws of Colorado, 1937, chapter 146, as defenses, that the Twenty-first Amendment prohibited the prosecution. The Supreme Court concluded that the Sherman Act was not being enforced under the circumstances of the cited case in such a way as to conflict with the law of Colorado and reversed the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. The Supreme Court, by Mr. Justice Black, said, "We . . . do not have here a case in which the Sherman Act is applied to defeat the policy of the state. That would raise questions of moment which need not be decided until they are presented."

In a concurring opinion Mr. Justice Frankfurter laid emphasis on the fact that the Commerce Clause is subordinate to the exercise of state power under the Twenty-first Amendment and that the Sherman Act, since it derives its authority from the Commerce Clause can have no greater potency than the Commerce Clause itself. "And so," said Mr. Justice Frankfurter, supra, at p. 301, "[T]he validity of a charge under the Sherman law relating to intoxicating liquors depends upon the utilization by a State of its constitutional power under the Twenty-first Amendment." The appellant in the case at bar contends that we are faced with circumstances which compel the conclusion that the Sherman Act does interfere with the purposes of the Pennsylvania law relating to intoxicating liquors and that the entire field has been preempted by Commonwealth legislation. We cannot agree.

Immediately following the adoption of the Twenty-first Amendment to the Constitution of the United States the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania enacted statutes which covered many facets of the traffic in Pennsylvania in spiritous liquors and in malt and brewed beverages. These are set out in some detail in the brief of the defendant Barber but need not be recounted here for the Pennsylvania Liquor Code, P. L. 90, 47 P. S. Pa. § 1 et seq., is now in force. Whatever may be the force of the Liquor Code in respect to spiritous liquors, it is clear that the Code permits the functioning of a private entrepreneurial system in the sale and distribution of malt and brewed beverages by the authorization of the issuance of licensing to private persons for engaging in the business of purchasing and distributing such beverages. See Melrose Distilleries, Inc. v. United States [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,129], 258 F. 2d 726, 729 (4 Cir. 1958), cert. granted on another issue, 358 U. S. 878 (1958). No decision of the Pennsylvania Court looks in an opposite direction. There is nothing in the law of Pennsylvania, decisional or otherwise, which authorizes the fixing of prices, uniform closing hours, save for week-end closings, 47 P. S. Pa. § 4-492(4), or the enforcement of group action by boycott as charged and proved here.

Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County: MYRON L. GORDON, Circuit Judge. Affirmed.

Federal Trade Commission Act

False Advertising Under Federal Trade Commission Act—Scope of Federal Regulation—Effect on State Regulation of Truthful Advertising of Optometric Services.—Congress, by enacting Section 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (declaring unlawful the false advertising of food, drugs, devices, or cosmetics), did not preempt the field of interstate advertising in the optical industry so as to deprive the State of Wisconsin of jurisdiction to regulate in this field. Section 12 of the Act only prohibits false advertising; the Wisconsin statute in question related to truthful advertising of prescription eyeglasses or optometric services. Congress had not seen fit to include within the scope of federal legislation the dissemination of truthful advertising; therefore, the federal act did not cover the subject matter of the Wisconsin statute and did not by preemption preclude the state from so exercising its police power. There was nothing in the state statute which was repugnant to or incompatible with the federal act.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.361; False Advertising, Vol. 2, ¶ 6005.

For the appellants: Padway, Goldberg & Previant (A. G. Goldberg and Saul Cooper, of counsel).

For the respondents: Stewart G. Honeck, Attorney General; Warren H. Resh and John H. Bowers, Assistant Attorneys General; William J. McCauley, District Attorney; and Hugh O'Connell, Special Assistant District Attorney, Milwaukee, Wis.

[Nature of Action]

Action commenced by plaintiffs Anna Bedno, Jacob Bedno, Samuel J. Ritholz, Sylvia Ritholz, Morris I. Ritholz, Fanny Ritholz, Benjamin D. Ritholz, Sophie Ritholz, co-partners doing business as King Optical Company, against defendants Dan B. Fast, Augustus N. Abbott, Fred N. Harris, Edward D. La Course, Newton E. W. Lenz, as the Wisconsin Board of Examiners in Optometry, and William J. McCauley, District Attorney for Milwaukee county, for declaratory judgment and injunction declaring secs. 153.10 and 153.11, Stats. inapplicable to plaintiffs, or unconstitutional, and enjoining defendants from enforcing the same. On motions for summary judgment on the pleadings by both parties, the trial court found that the statutes were applicable to plaintiffs and that they were constitutional, denied the injunction and granted judgment on defendants' motion. From that judgment plaintiffs appeal.

The facts will be stated in the opinion.

[Statutes]

MARTIN, Chief Justice [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The statutes involved are:

Sec. 153.10 "It shall be unlawful for any person to advertise, either directly or indirectly, by any means whatsoever, any definite or indefinite price or credit terms on lenses, frames, complete glasses or any optometric services; to advertise in any manner that will tend to mislead or deceive the public; to solicit optometric patronage by advertising that he or some other person or group of persons possess superior qualifications or are best trained to perform the service; or to render any optometric service pursuant to such advertising."

Sec. 153.11 "Any person not lawfully authorized to practice optometry, who shall practice optometry, or shall hold himself out as a practitioner thereof, or who shall impersonate another practitioner, or who shall violate any provisions of this chapter, or any rule or regulation made under authority thereof, shall be punished for the first offense by a fine not less than $50 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment for not more than 3 months, or both. And for a subsequent offense by a fine not less than $200 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than 3 nor more than 6 months, or both such fine and imprisonment."

[Evidence]

None of the facts are in dispute, it being stipulated by the parties that the allegations contained in the complaint and answer, together with the exhibits attached thereto, constitute all the evidence in the case.

[Plaintiffs' Business]

Plaintiffs are manufacturers and merchants of optical goods. They engage in the practice of optical dispensing, which consists of taking facial measurements, processing, fitting and adjusting mountings, frames and lenses in the filling of prescriptions. They duplicate, replace and reproduce such devices without prescription where no optometrical service is required. Plaintiffs own and operate a factory at Chicago for the manufacturing and processing of optical goods, as well as branches in numerous cities of the United States and Canada for the dispensing of such goods. The orders taken from customers at these branches, including the Milwaukee office, are sent to the Chicago factory to be filled according to the prescriptions. The eyeglasses or lenses are returned to the branch office where the frames are fitted to the customer's face.

All advertising contracts are made in Chicago and advertisements are placed in newspapers from the Chicago office. All accounting and banking activities incidental to the operation of the branch offices are carried on in Chicago. Annual sales of the business, between the Chicago office and the various branches, exceed two and one-half million dollars.

A one-price policy is maintained by the plaintiffs. Single-vision eyeglasses are $9.98; bifocal glasses are $4.98 additional. These prices include any correction, size, style, shape or color of lenses or frames.

On opening their branch in Milwaukee on September 16, 1957, plaintiffs placed advertisements in the local newspapers containing statements such as, "All single-vision glasses at one low price including frames and lenses. Bifocals, if desired, at small additional charge." They have also published and circulated matter which advertises that glasses may be obtained for $9.98 complete with frames and lenses. There is no allegation in the pleadings that any of the statements contained in said advertisements are false, misleading, fraudulent, deceiving, or for the purpose of causing misunderstanding. It is admitted that such statements are full, fair, complete and truthful, and all articles so advertised are actually of the type, kind, quality and description as set forth in the advertisements.

[Issues]

Three questions are presented on appeal, the first of which is:

Are secs. 153.10 and 153.11, Stats., which prohibit the advertising of prices of complete glasses, applicable to plaintiffs, who do not practice optometry, or to their price advertising?

The second question is:

If secs. 153.10 and 153.11 are applicable to plaintiffs' activities, are they constitutional?

The last question is:

Has Congress preempted the field of interstate advertising in the optical industry so as to deprive the state of jurisdiction to regulate in this field?

[Federal Regulation—FTC Act]

The rule has been stated in Metropolitan Finance Corp. v. Matthews (1953), 265 Wis. 275, 278, 61 N. W. (2d) 502, as follows:

> "If plaintiff's business, although in interstate commerce, has incidents and requires activities within the state intimately related to local welfare, then those incidents and activities are subject to state regulation under the police power, unless Congress has, by appropriate legislation, preempted the field with reference thereto."

Plaintiffs base their argument on the provisions contained in 15 U. S. C. sec. 52 which they contend is a comprehensive regulatory plan controlling price advertising in interstate commerce. A reading of the statute will show that it prohibits only false advertising as an unfair or deceptive act in commerce. Congress has not seen fit to include within the scope of federal legislation the dissemination of truthful advertising. Thus, the federal act does not cover the subject matter of sec. 153.10, Stats. and does not by preemption preclude the state from so exercising its police power. As stated in Kelly v. Washington (1937), 302 U. S. 1, 10, 58 Sup. Ct. 87, 82 L. Ed. 3:

> "There is no occupational rule which compels Congress to occupy the whole field. Congress may circumscribe its regulation and occupy only a limited field. When it does so, state regulation outside that limited field and otherwise admissible is not forbidden or displaced. The principle is thoroughly established that the exercise by the State of its police power, which would be valid if not superseded by federal action, is superseded only where the repugnance or conflict is so 'direct and positive' that the two acts cannot 'be reconciled or consistently stand together.' "

All of the authorities relied upon by plaintiffs deal with false representations in advertising relating to optical goods. None of them involve truthful advertising of prescription eyeglasses. Since the prohibition of such truthful advertising is a proper exercise of the state's police power, as pointed out above, and the federal government has clearly limited its control to the field of false advertising, sec. 153.10, Stats., is constitutional. There is nothing in the statute which is repugnant to or incompatible with the federal act.

[Affirmed]

Our opinion in this case would be incomplete without a word of appreciation for the exhaustive decision prepared by the trial court. The thorough study and consideration of the questions which it put into the decision have been of substantial assistance to this court on appeal.

By the Court.—Judgment affirmed.

[¶ 69,303] The American Securit Company v. Hamilton Glass Company, Inc. et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Terre Haute Division. Civil Action No. TH 55-C-37. Filed February 13, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Package Licensing—Violation of Government Consent Decree—Settlement of Litigation.—Pursuant to a settlement agreement, a judgment was entered declaring that the plaintiff was not guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws, a violation of a Government consent decree entered against the plaintiff, or a misuse of its patents. The parties stipulated that the facts set forth in the findings of fact tendered to the court were true. The misuse charge appeared to be based largely upon a situation in which prospective licensees asked for quotations of royalties on different groups or packages of patents, and the plaintiff offered any individual patent or any group or package of patents for two cents per square foot. According to the conclusions of law, (1) if any applicant had the right to ask about prices for package licenses under the terms of the consent decree, the plaintiff had the right to offer them, (2) the consent decree compelled the plaintiff to grant licenses under any, some, or all of its patents, (3) the plaintiff did make such offers, but no applicant adopted the remedy of appealing to the consent decree court for a license on other terms, (4) the plaintiff's offers completed its obligations under the decree and left the inquirers to their remedies of making a counter-offer or of appealing to the consent decree court, (5) the defendant made no application for a license, (6) the plaintiff did not issue licenses with price fixing provisions contrary to case law, and (7) the opinion of the consent decree court that the plaintiff did not violate its decree was adopted.

For the plaintiff: Ralph Hamill, of Hollowell & Hamill, Indianapolis, Ind.; John L. Seymour, of Bauer & Seymour, New York, N. Y.; and Joseph W. Burns, of Austin, Burns, Appell & Smith, New York, N. Y. (John L. Seymour and Joseph W. Burns, of counsel.)

For the defendants: David I. Day, of Marshall, Batman & Day, Terre Haute, Ind.; Howard W. Koven, of Koven, Koven, Salzman & Homer, Chicago, Ill.; and Howard W. Hodgkins, of Wilkinson, Huxley, Byron & Hume, Chicago, Ill.

Stipulation of Parties and Findings of Fact Pursuant Thereto

Cale J. Holder, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The parties stipulate that the facts set forth in the findings of fact tendered to the Court for signature are true. It is noted that the findings of fact relating to Shatterproof, Permaglass, Libbey-Owens-Ford, are summaries of factual matters contained in depositions of said companies taken under oath. Many facts jointly agreed to and found by the parties in preparation for trial have been omitted from this finding of fact without prejudice.

It is stipulated that any finding of fact which is actually a conclusion of law shall be considered to be a conclusion of law, and any conclusion of law which is actually a finding of fact shall be considered to be a finding of fact.

Findings of Fact

From the Stipulation of the parties, the Court finds as follows:

I

Facts Concerned With But Not Limited to Infringement and Validity

1. The Court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter herein.

1(a). The plaintiff, The American Securit Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of Delaware. Its fundamental business is to acquire and license patents.

Its officers are: Eugene Gentil, President, a French citizen, residing at 23 Rue Simon Dereure, Paris, France; Robert Ingouf, Vice President and Treasurer, an American citizen, residing at No. 6 Brooklands, Bronxville, New York; Alain du Breil, Vice President, an American citizen, residing at 45 East 85th Street, New York, New York; and David M. Tappen, Secretary, an American citizen, residing at 460 Park Avenue, New York, New York.

Its directors are: Eugene Gentil, Robert Ingouf, Alain du Breil, Germain Delattre, Andre Delloye, Daniel de Gorter, and Gerard de Piolene.

Its place of business is at 927 Market Street, Wilmington, Delaware, c/o Corporation Guarantee & Trust Company.

2. The defendant, Hamilton Glass Company, is a corporation of Illinois, having a factory and place of business at Chicago, Illinois; another factory and place of business at Vincennes, Indiana; and another factory and place of business at West Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The defendant Edith Building Corporation is a corporation of Indiana having a place of business at Vincennes, Indiana.

4. Hamilton and Edith have been and are under the same control.

6. The manufacture by Hamilton of tempered glass began about 1950; at that time Michael Schapiro was President of Hamilton and Edith, and David S. Levin was Vice President of Hamilton and Edith.

8. The Directors of Hamilton and Edith were Michael Schapiro and David S. Levin and, in each case, a third person who was a nominee of no status, to fulfil the Illinois requirement that there be three directors.

9. The decision of the defendants (Hamilton and Edith) to enter the manufacture of tempered glass was made by Schapiro and Levin about 1950.

10. Under date of January 24, 1951 the defendant Hamilton was notified by plaintiff's counsel of plaintiff's patents.

11. When television came in, a tremendous market for tempered glass was established, mainly as implosion plates to protect the viewers from the implosion of television tubes. Among companies that went into the manufacture of tempered glass for this use were Chicago Dial, Permaglass, Dearborn, Bienenfeld (possibly also called Century), Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Libbey-Owens-Ford, Corning, Shatterproof, and Croname.

12. Defendant, by the decision of Schapiro and Levin, decided to enter the field of making and selling tempered glass. The decision was made under the belief that, to get themselves on an even footing with their competitors and to hold their position in the industry, they were forced to go into tempering. At the time they made the decision, they knew about the antitrust suit involving the plaintiff and other glass manufacturers before Judge Kloeb in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division, Civil Action 5239, which had been terminated by a Consent Decree on October 30, 1948 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,323].

13. Chicago Dial undertook tempering before Hamilton. Its tempering apparatus was constructed under the direction of John Busch. When Hamilton undertook tempering, they employed John Busch to construct their apparatus.

14. Under date of December 21, 1953 Hamilton was notified that it was infringing some of plaintiff's patents. Thereafter, until the filing of the Complaint in this case (on or about July 13, 1955), defendant was repeatedly accused by plaintiff of infringement.

15. Plaintiff offered defendant a standard license before bringing suit.

18. The defendant proceeded, to construct two complete apparatuses for tempering glass at its plant in Vincennes, Indiana.

19. One of plaintiff's licensees was West-Penn Mirror Company at West Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. It manufactured tempered glass, particularly for the television industry, but suffered business reverses. Its plant at West Pittsburgh was acquired by defendant, which thus became possessed of three complete apparatuses for manufacturing tempered glass.

20. The tempering plant at West Pittsburgh was operated, at first, by Hamilton in substantially the same condition in which it was received from West-Penn Mirror Company.

22. For a time, defendant operated the West Pittsburgh plant without substantial change in its construction.

23. Thereafter, defendant made changes in the construction of the West Pittsburgh plant, but continued to manufacture tempered glass.

II

Facts Concerned With But Not Limited to Matters Involving Antitrust and the Consent Decree

202. The plaintiff entered into a Consent Decree on October 30, 1948 in the nature of a contract between plaintiff and the United States of America before the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division, hereafter called the Ohio Court.

203. The Ohio Court has held that plaintiff has not violated the Consent Decree.

204. The plaintiff gave notice of its patents to Hamilton in January 1951 (letter dated January 24, 1951).

205. The plaintiff gave Hamilton notice of infringement on December 21, 1953.

206. Additional notice, also including West-Penn, September 9, 1954.

207. Plaintiff's letter, asserting undue delay in reply, October 29, 1954.

210. Since the Consent Decree, the plaintiff has not attempted to fix prices.

211. Since the Consent Decree, the plaintiff has not attempted to restrain commerce in unpatented articles.

212. Since the Consent Decree, the plaintiff has not attempted to eliminate jobbers.

213. Since the Consent Decree, the plaintiff has not attempted to standardize trade practices throughout the industry.

214. Since the Consent Decree, the plaintiff has not issued price-fixing licenses.

215. Since 1948, the plaintiff has been bound by the Consent Decree to issue a license at a reasonable and a non-discriminatory royalty to anyone who applies therefor in writing.

216. Since 1948, any applicant dissatisfied with the terms of a license offered by plaintiff has had the right to apply to the Ohio Court for relief.

217. The defendant has not applied in writing to plaintiff for a license and has not applied to the Ohio Court for relief.

218. After the Consent Decree, the first applicants for license were PPG and LOF. Separate negotiations were carried on with them by plaintiff between November 1948 and March 1949, resulting in the grant of licenses on similar terms; the outstanding terms of each license provided a royalty of 2¢ per square foot of glass tempered, regardless of the number of patents actually used by the licensees. The licenses also provided for a minimum annual royalty, required the licensee to furnish a written statement of the number of square feet of glass sold under the agreement, required licensee to furnish such information as was necessary to enable licensor to determine the amount of royalties due, required licensee to give notice of any suit for infringement, and provided for termination by the licensor for failure of the licensee to perform and by the licensee on thirty-days notice, for arbitration, and that New York law should govern.

219. In July 1950, upon a written application, plaintiff issued to Croname, Inc. a license at the same 2¢ royalty on 37 patents, being all the patents then owned by plaintiff. This license was then printed, designated "Standard License Contract", and offered generally to the trade. This Standard License differed from the PPG and LOF licenses in that it contained some changes which were made at the request of the Department of Justice, and a lesser minimum royalty.

220. In 1952, Permaglass, Inc. requested a license under two patents. Plaintiff offered such a license, but at the same royalty of 2¢ per square foot. Permaglass then executed the Standard License including all the patents.

221. In 1954, Eagle Convex Glass Specialty Company requested a license under only one patent at the royalty of 2¢. Plaintiff requested Eagle Convex to accept the Standard License contract, advising that it could cancel after the expiration of the requested patent on September 27, 1955. Eagle Convex accepted the standard form license and did cancel after the patent expired.

222. Between 1949 and 1955 approximately twenty companies discussed with plaintiff its Standard License or a similar license, and seven companies executed package licenses at the 2¢ royalty.

225. From 1951 to 1955 there was considerable correspondence between plaintiff and Hamilton Glass Company about infringement.

227. Plaintiff's royalty was the result of negotiations with applicants Libbey-Owens-Ford and Pittsburgh Plate Glass, who agreed on 2¢ per square foot as the reasonable value for the use of any, some or all of plaintiff's patents to a person desiring to enter the glass tempering field. Plaintiff's licensees have not been required to use any of plaintiff's patents, they have been free to use any, some or all of plaintiff's patents, and they have been free to cancel their licenses at any time, for any reason or no reason, on thirty-days notice. To those licensees who used one patent (Eagle Convex) the royalty was 2¢ per square foot, to those who used two or a few patents (Croname) the royalty was 2¢ per square foot, and to those who used several patents (PPG and LOF), the royalty was 2¢ per square foot.

228. The nature of plaintiff's patents made it impossible for any licensee to use all patents. For example, patents 1,916,174, 1,944,625 and 1,971,268 describe different cooling machinery; 2,052,254 and 2,093,040 describe different methods for tempering the glass; and 2,151,266 and 2,062,567 describe different machinery for supporting the glass. The possibility that anyone would use all patents was not contemplated because of the varied nature of the patents.

229. At no time was a licensee limited to the use of any specified patent or number of plaintiff's patents.

230. Glass that has been tempered by the use of any one or several of plaintiff's patents has been improved, so that it commands a higher price.

231. The higher price of tempered glass depends on the fact that it is tempered, not on the number of patents used in the tempering.

232. At no time was a license granted charging 2¢ per square foot for the use of a specified number of patents. In every instance, the number of patents to be used was left up to the licensee.

233. The plaintiff has not issued licenses fixing the resale prices of tempered glass.

234. Plaintiff's licenses have been limited to those who asked for them in writing and accepted them when offered, constituting only seven companies out of twenty who applied, and only a small percentage of the companies in the glass industry.

235. Plaintiff has not tried to raise the prices of tempered glass.

236. Plaintiff has not tried to fix the prices of tempered glass.

237. Plaintiff has not tried to limit the manufacture of tempered glass or to stabilize the prices of related products.

238. Plaintiff has not tried to control the distribution of tempered glass.

239. Plaintiff has not concerted with manufacturers and distributors to control the price of tempered glass.

240. Plaintiff has not sought control over the prices and distribution of tempered glass.

241. Plaintiff has not organized the industry under patent licenses.

242. Plaintiff has issued no license containing a price-fixing clause.

243. Plaintiff has issued no license requiring payment of royalty on unpatented products such as window glass.

244. All plaintiff's licenses require a royalty only on glass which has been improved in value by the use of plaintiff's patents.

245. The terms of plaintiff's licenses do not require the industry or any manufacturer to fix prices on tempered glass.

247. Plaintiff has not attempted to systematize sales of glass.

248. Plaintiff has made no special provision for special classes of customers.

604. * * *

The depositions of Messrs. MacNichol and Wall, President and General Counsel of Libbey-Owens-Ford, state that Shatterproof Glass Co. directed to Libbey-Owens-Ford, another party to the Consent Decree (see paragraph 12 hereof), a demand for package licenses couched in terms like those addressed to plaintiff; that L-O-F made a counter-offer of licenses under individual patents; that prices were set on individual patents at 3¢ per square foot, at 2½¢ per square foot, at 2¢ per square foot and at lesser prices differing by ½¢ per square foot; that Shatterproof demanded a package license and that the license finally issued was a package license permitting the use of substantial numbers of L-O-F patents; that the maximum price was 2% of the net sales price of the product; and that Shatterproof used only from four to one patents.

These facts do not raise any question concerning the relations of plaintiff and defendant, nor any question of patent misuse by plaintiff.

Conclusions of Law

1. The United States Gypsum Company cases (53 F. S. 889, 59 P. Q. 318 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,473]; 67 F. S. 397, 70 P. Q. 48 [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,226]; 333 U. S. 364, 76 P. Q. 430; 180 Fed. 2nd 753, 85 P. Q. 32 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,729]; 340 U. S. 76, 87 P. Q. 276 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,627]; 352 U. S. 457, 112 P. Q. 340) constitute an intricate series of actions in which the Federal Government took part and in which the crux of the government's charges was the alleged illegality of Gypsum's system of industry-wide uniform patent licensing agreements containing clauses giving Gypsum the right to fix resale prices on gypsum board and products. (112 P. Q. 341).

The course of decisions in the anti-trust litigation clearly shows that the only misuse ever adjudicated was that arising from the uniform price fixing provisions of the license agreements. (112 P. Q. 345).

The plaintiff Securit, did not issue licenses with price fixing provisions and is not guilty of any misuse comprehended by the Gypsum cases.

2. The Consent Decree in U. S. A. v. Libbey, Owens-Ford Glass Co. and others, C. A. 5239 Northern District of Ohio Western Division [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,323], to which this plaintiff was a party, effective Oct. 30, 1948, provided for the grant of licenses under plaintiff patents to any applicant who applied in writing. The plaintiff and defendant have entered into extensive stipulations of fact in which no written application by defendant for a license is found.

3. In a proceeding between the U. S. Government and this plaintiff before the court which issued the said Consent Decree, brought in 1958 by plaintiff for a construction of that Decree, of which this defendant had notice, plaintiff was held guiltless of any violation of the Decree.

Under the rule of full faith and credit, it would require a very substantial showing of facts that were not before that court to induce this court to take an opposite position. Such a showing of fact is lacking here. The opinion of the Consent Decree court, that this plaintiff has not violated its decree, is adopted by this court.

4. The defense of patent misuse appears to be based largely upon a situation that arose between certain prospective licensees and plaintiff, in which quotations of royalties on different groups or packages of plaintiff's patents were asked, and plaintiff offered any individual patent or any group or package of patents for 2¢ per square foot.

If any applicant had the right to ask about prices for package licenses under the "any, some or all" phrase of Sec. XIV of the Consent Decree, the plaintiff had the right to offer them. Indeed, under the Consent Decree, plaintiff was compelled to grant licenses under any, some or all of its patents to applicants in writing. It appears that plaintiff did make offers, as aforesaid, and that no applicant adopted the remedy that was open to it of appealing to the Consent Decree court for a license on other terms.

This situation does not constitute a question of patent misuse or of anti-trust law.

5. The patents pleaded by plaintiff are valid.

The Mosmieri patent is not invalid in the light of the references listed against it.

The Clitherow patent is not invalid in the light of the references listed against it.

The Forbes patent is not invalid in the light of the references listed against it.

The Long patent is not invalid in the light of the references listed against it.

There is no evidence to support the defense which asserts that the inventions of plaintiff's pleaded patents are within the skill of a mechanic working in the art or that they represent mere mechanical skill.

The patents are not invalid for indefiniteness, lack of sufficient description, or inoperativeness.

There is no evidence of prior publication, knowledge, use, or sale which would invalidate any of plaintiff's pleaded patents.

6. The depositions of Messrs. MacNichol, Wall, and Chase relating to dealings between Shatterproof and Libbey-Owens-Ford relate circumstances parallel to the dealings of Shatterproof with plaintiff and show that in this patent field royalties up to 3¢ per square foot may be reasonable for an individual patent. Plaintiff's offer completed its obligations under the Consent Decree and left the inquirer to its remedies of making a counter-offer or of appealing to the Consent Decree court. Any applicant that failed to take the remedies offered by the Consent Decree to the Consent Decree court may not now assert wrongdoing on the part of plaintiff. Having made one offer, the plaintiff was not thereafter required to make other or lesser offers.

7. The evidence before the Court shows no patent misuse by the plaintiff. It was required by the Consent Decree to offer its patents at a reasonable royalty but the remedy of a dissatisfied applicant was an appeal to the Consent Decree court, and outside of that remedy the law provided none other. There is no evidence that plaintiff failed to make an offer, or that any applicant was so dissatisfied with the offer made as, within a reasonable time, to apply for relief to the Consent Decree court.

8. The evidence before the Court shows compliance by the plaintiff, and a willingness to comply, with the terms of the Consent Decree.

9. The facts before the Court show no violation of the anti-trust laws by the plaintiff.

10. The plaintiff's policy as set forth in the evidence now before the court is not a violation of any statute, rule of law, or canon of public policy.

11. The Court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter herein.

Judgment

The parties having entered into a certain settlement agreement, dated February 13, 1959, whereby the parties have settled and compromised all their differences concerning the subject matter of this action, the said agreement is now approved by the Court.

Pursuant thereto, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed:

1. The Defendant shall disclose to Plaintiff and assign to Plaintiff the entire right, title, and interest in and to the following developments and inventions:

(a) A development for suspending glass vertically.

(b) A development for after-cooling glass during tempering.

(c) A mirror development called "Sparkletone."

In each said development Defendant shall have a royalty-free shop right; and Defendant shall have the right to license others in the United States upon payment by Defendant to Plaintiff of one cent (1¢) per square foot of glass, any part of which has undergone the process of the development. Applications on said developments shall be filed in the United States Patent Office by Defendant and the cases as filed shall then be turned over to Plaintiff for prosecution at its own expense. Filing in foreign countries shall be at Plaintiff's will and expense, except that Defendant shall do all that is needful to make possible the filing.

2. The judgment of this Court related to patent use is that which is set forth in the findings of fact and the settlement agreement.

3. The patent identified as Mosmieri, No. 2,131,406, September 27, 1938, is valid.

4. The patent identified as Clitherow, No. 2,151,266, March 21, 1939, is valid.

5. The patent identified as Forbes, No. 2,198,622, April 30, 1940, is valid.

6. The defenses, affirmative defenses, and counter claims of the Defendant are dismissed, with prejudice.

7. The Plaintiff is not guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws or any of them.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action, File 296-58. Filed December 19, 1958.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolies—Practices—Refusal to Deal—Distributor's Refusal to Supply Newspapers and Periodicals to Retailer—Publishers' Refusal to "By-Pass" Exclusive Distributor—Legality.—A wholesale distributor of newspapers and periodicals did not violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act by ceasing to supply a retailer with such merchandise. The wholesaler had suspended its service to the retailer as a result of a dispute over money which the wholesaler claimed was owing and had indicated that it would resume supplying the retailer upon payment of the alleged indebtedness. Section 2 of the Sherman Act does not restrict the general right of a trader engaged in an entirely private business activity to freely exercise his own discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal, although that right is not absolute nor exempt from regulation if accompanied by unlawful conduct or agreement, or conceived in monopolistic purpose or market control. The distributor could, without running afoul of the Sherman Act, refuse to deal with a customer who had proved unsatisfactory. Its refusal to sell to the retailer was not grounded in any attempt to monopolize since it was undisputed that its dealing with the retailer would be resumed upon the settlement of the claim for money allegedly due from the retailer. In the absence of any scheme to fix prices or to eliminate competition, such a refusal to deal was not offensive to the Sherman Act. Also, the publishers' refusal to sell directly to the retailer, when he had a dispute with their exclusive distributor, was not evidence of a conspiracy having for its object a monopolistic practice; it was, instead, a good business practice.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Monopolies—Practices—Tying Arrangements—Alleged Tying of Unwanted Publications to Sale of Other Publications—Legality Under Sherman Act, Section 2.—A retailer of newspapers and periodicals who alleged that a wholesale distributor compelled him to accept unwanted magazines as a condition to supplying him with other publications failed to show a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Tying arrangements are illegal under the Sherman Act when (1) the supplier of the "tying" product enjoys a monopolistic position in the market, and (2) a substantial volume of commerce in the "tied" product is restrained. The facts set forth failed to establish the second of those two conditions and further failed to specify an intention on the part of the wholesaler to destroy competition or build a monopoly. Nothing was alleged which would justify the conclusion that the public suffered any injury since it could exercise its prerogative of buying or not buying the questionable magazines. Also, the wholesaler's competitors had no reasonable grounds for complaint. The retailer was free to, and did, sell merchandise supplied by others than the wholesaler. In addition, there was nothing to show that the wholesaler exercised any restraint over the distribution of publications other than those which it distributed. Lastly, any inference that the wholesaler's alleged "tie-in" sales were a monopolistic practice was negatived by the fact that the wholesaler's delivery to the retailer of unwanted magazines cost the retailer nothing; he received full credit for unsold merchandise which he returned to the wholesaler.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.850.

Monopolies—Combinations and Conspiracies to Monopolize—Alleged Conspiracy to "Tie" Sale of Unwanted Publications to Other Publications and Prevent Retailer from Obtaining Supplies—Legality.—A retailer of newspapers and periodicals had no cause of action under the Sherman Act against a wholesale distributor who allegedly conspired with publishers to (1) "tie" the sale of unwanted publications to other publications, and (2) prevent the retailer from obtaining supplies directly from the publishers after the wholesaler ceased dealing with him. In essence, the publishers told the retailer they would not supply him if he had any outstanding bills owing to their wholesaler. The retailer conceded that he spoke to only one magazine publisher and one newspaper publisher concerning direct delivery, and that he made no attempts to purchase such merchandise from wholesale distributors in other counties. It was admitted by the retailer that the alleged delivery of unwanted magazines cost him nothing since he could return unsold publications. There was no allegation in the complaint that the charged conspiracy had as its object the control of prices of the merchandise distributed by the wholesaler. Also, the publishers' refusal to sell directly to the retailer during his dispute with their distributor was not evidence of a conspiracy having for its object a monopolistic practice but was, instead, a good business practice.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Monopolization—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Undue Restriction Upon Interstate Commerce.—A retailer of newspapers and periodicals who sought treble damages for a wholesale distributor's alleged monopolization of the distribution of such merchandise failed to plead facts which would show that the free flow of interstate commerce was unduly restricted or that there was any appreciable monopolistic effect upon interstate commerce. It was conceded that the wholesaler's distribution of newspapers and periodicals formed a part of interstate commerce insofar as it was a link in the chain of distribution from an out-of-state publisher to a consumer-reader within the state. However, there was nothing to show that the wholesaler exercised any restraint over the distribution of publications other than those which it distributed itself. Its refusal to sell to the retailer, in the absence of a scheme to fix prices or eliminate competition, was not offensive to the Sherman Act. As to an alleged "tying" of unwanted publications to the sale of other publications, no facts were set forth which would establish that a substantial volume of commerce in the "tied" product was restrained.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.600.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Monopolization—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Injury to Public.—A retailer of newspapers and periodicals who claimed that a wholesale distributor monopolized the distribution of such merchandise in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act was not entitled to treble damages since he alleged nothing which justified the conclusion that the public suffered any injury. There was no allegation in the complaint that an alleged conspiracy between the wholesaler and the publishers of the merchandise had as its object the control of prices, and there was no showing that the wholesaler's refusal to sell to the retailer caused any harm to the general public. Further, the public was not injured by the alleged "tying" of unwanted publications to the sale of other publications to the retailer, since the public could exercise its prerogative of buying or not buying the magazines which the retailer found objectionable. Also, nothing was alleged which showed that the wholesaler's competitors had any reasonable grounds for complaint.

Opinion

[Monopoly Charged]

WORTENDYKE, District Judge [In full text]: The following views are evoked by defendant's motion for summary judgment, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b).

Plaintiff Bragen is seeking threefold damages alleged to have resulted from defendant's violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 26 Stat. 209 (1890) and 38 Stat. 731 (1914), 15 U. S. C. §§ 2 and 15 (1952). There being no diversity of citizenship between the parties jurisdiction depends upon the cited Federal statute.

Defendant's right to summary judgment depends upon the absence of any genuine issue as to any material fact as determined by the pleadings, depositions and affidavits on file upon the pending motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

[Distribution of Newspapers and Magazines]

The complaint alleges the following: Bragen operates a store in Jersey City, New Jersey at which he sells at retail "newspapers, magazines, books and other publications, as well as confectionery, tobacco and other merchandise." He asserts that his retail sale of newspapers and periodicals is a department or phase of the publishing business which constitutes a part of interstate commerce. Defendant Hudson County News Company (Hudson) is the sole wholesale distributor, within most of Hudson County, in which Bragen's store is located, of "practically all of the newspapers, magazines, paper covered books and certain other publications" which Bragen handles. As a consequence, Hudson has monopolized the distribution of this merchandise and "by means of agreements, contracts, understandings and conspiracies with [the] publishers" of such merchandise is enabled to determine "by whom, in what manner, and under what conditions" the ultimate consumers within Hudson County may obtain access to this merchandise. Further, the alleged monopoly enables Hudson to compel retail newsdealers to accept for resale publications which such retailers have not ordered, cannot or do not wish to sell and which are "obscene, lascivious, and offensive to morality and good taste," as a condition of defendant's continued supply to such retailers of other publications. Since June 1957, Bragen alleges, Hudson has refused to supply him with merchandise and that he has been unable to secure such supply either from the publishers or from other wholesaler distributors because they have refused to supply him without the consent of the defendant.

[Alleged Indebtedness]

Hudson has denied the existence of the alleged monopoly and further denies the pleaded unavailability to the plaintiff of supplies of the merchandise which he handles as well as the alleged compulsion to accept offensive and unordered merchandise. It also denies its alleged refusal and that of others to supply Bragen with merchandise which he desired. Hudson has conceded that Bragen had at times received unordered deliveries of merchandise, together with his regular deliveries, but that this practice was not unknown in the general custom of the trade. Moreover, if such "volunteered" merchandise did not sell, it was later picked up by Hudson and the charges against the retailer for such deliveries were credited accordingly. Hudson contends that the sole issue between the parties is an indebtedness Hudson claims Bragen owes it in the amount of $126.19, for a service charge and billing for certain magazines delivered to Bragen, which has not been paid by him. Hudson states that upon payment of this amount, it will resume doing business with Bragen.

[Conspiracy Charged]

The "conspiracy" which Bragen charges in his complaint is mainly related to the objectionable periodicals which he stated Hudson supplied to him together with the other standard magazines and periodicals. On deposition he stated:

> "Well, the thing that makes me say there is a conspiracy is the way the smut hits the stands, and the quantities that it hits the stands. There is something deeper in this business than Hudson County News. There are some people in my mind who have made agreements with probably every local or every reasonable [sic.—responsible?] distributor in the country."

Thus the conspiracy charged between Hudson and the publishers is "to flood the market with dirty books * * * because there is a greater profit in handling that trash than there is in the Saturday Evening Post or Good Housekeeping."

The second aspect of the conspiracy charged is that upon termination of Hudson's service for the reason of Bragen's non-payment of the amount claimed by Hudson, Bragen was unable to obtain directly from the publishers the newspapers and periodicals which had previously been supplied to him by Hudson. In essence, Bragen was told that if he had any outstanding bills owing to Hudson they would not supply him. He concedes, however, that he spoke to only one magazine publisher and one newspaper publisher concerning direct delivery. He further admits that he made no attempts to purchase such merchandise from wholesale distributors outside of Hudson County.

[Market Area]

From the affidavit of the president of Hudson it appears that when Hudson ceased serving Bragen it was delivering hundreds of different publications to approximately seven hundred retail dealers in Hudson County. Within a radius of two blocks of Bragen's store Hudson served four other similar retailers. Hudson does not deliver two of the seven New York City newspapers and one of the two Jersey City newspapers, of which the combined circulation within Hudson

County exceeds the combined circulation of all of the newspapers which Hudson does distribute. Hudson does not make deliveries in certain portions of Hudson County, but concedes that in the area thereof in which it does make deliveries it is the sole wholesale distributor of magazines and paper-backed books. Hudson's former sole competitor, the American News Company, discontinued its business in 1957. It is denied that Hudson has any agreement which could or does prevent any publisher from shipping directly to a retailer or from utilizing any other wholesale distributing agency. With respect to Bragen's charge that Hudson had delivered publications to him which he had not ordered and did not wish to receive, it is stated that such occasional instances resulted from mistake and nothing more. Such deliveries are at no cost to Bragen, since it has always been defendant's policy to give full credit to all retail dealers for all magazines and paper-backed books returned whether ordered or unordered, wanted or unwanted, displayed or not displayed. This is admitted by Bragen.

[Jurisdiction]

Upon a motion for summary judgment the Court is not called upon to decide any issues of fact but merely to determine whether any material issues of fact exist. It appears beyond contradiction, from the material before me, that a dispute arose between Hudson and Bragen concerning certain charges made by Hudson to Bragen's account. In consequence of this disagreement Hudson suspended its service to Bragen, but indicated that such service would be resumed upon payment of his alleged indebtedness. It appears without question that Bragen's sole cause of action, if any, is one sounding in contract. There being no diversity of citizenship here, this Court would be without jurisdiction to entertain such an action.

[Refusal to Deal—No Public Injury]

Assuming as true all well-pleaded facts, as distinguished from conclusory allegations, set forth in the complaint, as they are qualified or elaborated by Bragen's own testimony on deposition, there appears no issue of fact which, if resolved in his favor, could support an inference that Hudson had committed such a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act as would give rise to a cause of action in Bragen for threefold damages under Section 15. It is conceded that Hudson's wholesale distribution of newspapers and periodicals formed a part of interstate commerce insofar as it was a link in the chain of distribution from an out of the State publisher to a consumer-reader within the State. Cf. Mandeville Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,251], 1948, 334 U. S. 219. Section 2 of the Sherman Act relied on by Bragen forbids monopolization, attempts to monopolize and combinations or conspiracies to monopolize any part of commerce among the several States. Monopoly power which offends against this section has been said by the Supreme Court to exist when there is control of price or competition in the competitive market for the particular product in question. United States v. DuPont & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 1956, 351 U. S. 377. There is no allegation in Bragen's complaint that the charged conspiracy in any way has as its object the control of prices of the merchandise Hudson distributes. Neither does Bragen complain of Hudson's exclusive territorial franchise with the publishers with whom it does business as being a monopoly or conspiracy to monopolize interstate commerce. That of which Bragen does complain is the cutting off by Hudson of his service, and his subsequent inability to obtain from the publishers the merchandise which he had previously secured from Hudson. However, in this action to recover treble damages for Hudson's alleged violations of the Sherman Act, it must be shown that Hudson's acts were harmful to the general public as well as to Bragen. Injury to Bragen alone by Hudson is not enough, but Hudson's acts must unduly restrict the free flow of interstate commerce. Feddersen Motors v. Ward [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 10 Cir. 1950, 180 F. 2d 519. Moreover, the monopolistic effect upon interstate commerce must be appreciable. Shotkin v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341], 10 Cir. 1948, 171 F. 2d 236; see Times-Picayune v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 1953, 345 U. S. 594, 611. The complaint herein does not contain the familiar allegations in a charged monopoly that there is a conspiracy to fix prices, divide marketing territories, apportion customers, restrict production or otherwise suppress competition. Cf. Apex Hosiery v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 1940, 310 U. S. 469, 494-98. The pleadings and proof before me simply show a personal grievance between Bragen and Hudson arising upon the refusal of the latter to continue doing business with Bragen. Cf. Shotkin v. General Electric Co., supra; Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hales Stores [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,007], 9 Cir. 1958, 255 F. 2d 214, cert. granted, 27 Law Week 3110 (No. 76, 1958).

Section 2 of the Sherman Act does not restrict the general right of a trader engaged in an entirely private business activity freely to exercise his own discretion as to parties with whom he will deal, United States v. Colgate & Co., 1919, 250 U. S. 300, although such right is not absolute nor exempt from regulation if accompanied by unlawful conduct or agreement or conceived in monopolistic purpose or market control. Lorain Journal v. United States [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,957], 1951, 342 U. S. 143. The publishers' refusal to sell to Bragen directly when Bragen had a dispute with the publishers' exclusive distributor is not evidence of a conspiracy having for its object a monopolistic practice. Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,459], 3 Cir. 1946, 155 F. 2d 99. Indeed it is a good business practice. Certainly Hudson can refuse to deal with a customer who has proved unsatisfactory to it without running afoul of the Sherman Act. Hoffman v. Riverside & Dan River Cotton Mills [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,219], D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1944, 55 F. Supp. 13. Clearly, Hudson's refusal to sell is not grounded in any attempt to monopolize since it is undisputed that service would be resumed upon the settlement of the claim for money owing. In the absence of any scheme to fix prices or eliminate competition such action is not offensive to the Sherman Act. Interborough News Co. v. Curtis Publishing Co. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,129], 2 Cir. 1955, 225 F. 2d 289.

["Tie-In" Sales]

Bragen further claims violation of the Sherman Act by reason of the "tie-in" sales to him of magazines offensive to him with such suggestive titles as Titter, Wink, Eyefull, Whisper, Frolic and Figure, which Hudson compels him to accept as a condition of a continuing supply of the more "morally wholesome" publications such as the Saturday Evening Post and Good Housekeeping. The Supreme Court in Times-Picayune v. United States, supra, set forth the standard of illegality under the Sherman Act of trying arrangements to be when the supplier of the "tying" product, in this case the acceptable (to Bragen) magazines and periodicals, enjoys a monopolistic position in the market AND if a substantial volume of commerce in the "tied" product, in this case the magazines of questionable taste, is restrained. Id. at 608-609. Nowhere in the pleadings or depositions before me are there any facts set forth which would establish the second of these two conditions necessary to bring Hudson's activities within Section 1 of the Sherman Act. However, Bragen is not proceeding under Section 1 but under the monopolization offense of Section 2. But here again the facts as set forth fail to specify an intention on the part of Hudson to destroy competition or to build a monopoly. Times-Picayune v. United States, supra, p. 626. Nothing is alleged which would justify the conclusion that the public suffered any injury (since it could exercise its prerogative by buying or not buying the questionable magazines) or that competitors had any reasonable grounds for complaint. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 1920, 253 U. S. 421. Further Bragen is free to sell magazines, periodicals and newspapers supplied by others than Hudson and indeed does so. See Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair Co., 1923, 261 U. S. 463. There is nothing to show that Hudson exercises any restraint over the distribution of magazines and publications other than those which it distributes. Journal of Commerce Pub. Co. v. Tribune Co., 7 Cir. 1922, 286 F. 111. Lastly, any inference that this is a monopolistic practice is negatived by the fact that Hudson gives full credit to the retailer for any magazines and paper-backed books it supplied which were unsold by the retailers.

[Summary Judgment Granted]

This Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction in this case because the plaintiff has not brought himself within the provisions of 15 U. S .C. § 15, and there is no diversity of citizenship between the parties. The defendant's motion for summary judgment will be granted and an appropriate order may be presented in accordance with the views hereinabove expressed.

[¶ 69,305] The A. L. B. Theatre Corporation v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 56 C 727. Filed February 27, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Motion to Strike Matter Relating to History of Alleged Conspiracy—Relevance.—Motion picture distributors were denied a motion to strike from an exhibitor's complaint allegations addressed to a conspiracy existing prior to 1935 and continuing during the period when the exhibitor operated its theatre, November 1, 1955, to January 31, 1957. Trial matters need not always be limited to the precise time when a particular plaintiff was adversely affected by a segment of an overall conspiracy. The allegations of the existence of the conspiracy, from its inception, would be permitted to stand, it being understood that it was that particular conspiracy which affected the exhibitor at a later time. However, the floodgates of discovery and evidence were not to be opened to all aspects of the time and territory involved, but merely insofar as such matters were relevant to show the history of the overall conspiracy so that the setting of the instant case might be understood. The court also rejected the distributors' contention that allegations of a conspiracy prior to 1947 should be stricken. In that year, they re-divided the district which they had earlier zoned for the distribution of the same run of film. The court was of the opinion, however, that the mere physical subdividing of a territory which was a part of an overall existing conspiracy was not tantamount to the creation of an entirely new and disassociated scheme, apart from the prior conspiracy.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.595.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Motion to Strike Allegations Relating to Prior Government Decree—Relevance.—Motion picture distributors were denied a motion to strike from an exhibitor's complaint allegations relating to decrees entered and proceedings had in a prior government action. Determination of the relevance of that matter should await its use, if any, during the trial.

Memorandum

On Motion of Defendants to strike Paragraphs 13, 14, 15, 16, 29 and portions of Paragraphs 12 and 17 of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

[Motion to Strike]

Edwin A. Robson, District Judge [In full text]: Defendants have moved to strike Paragraphs 13, 14, 15, 16, 29 and portions of Paragraphs 12 and 17 of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint for the reason that these allegations address themselves to a conspiracy existing prior to 1935 and continuing during the period of November 1, 1955 to January 31, 1957, when plaintiff operated its Belmont Theatre. Furthermore, defendants contend that allegations of conspiracy prior to 1947 should in any event be stricken.

[Conspiracy Charged]

This is a civil anti-trust suit wherein plaintiff contends that the conspiracy of defendants foreclosed its procuring of film which its competitors, the Covent and Century Theatres, were able to procure. The City had been zoned by defendants for the distribution of the same run of film, and in 1947 defendants redivided the district in which these theatres were located. It is on the basis of this further subdivision of districts that the defendants claim there must be deemed to have occurred the formation of a new and different conspiracy from the one theretofore existing, if any, and therefore allegations of a conspiracy prior thereto must be stricken. The Court is of the opinion that the mere physical subdividing of a territory, which is part of an over-all existing conspiracy, is not tantamount to the creation of an entirely new and disassociated scheme, apart from the prior conspiracy.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Relevancy]

The inherent and inescapable complexities of an anti-trust suit demand the rejection of all unnecessary and extraneous allegations, and evidentiary matters in support thereof. Therefore, a critical examination must be made to limit the allegations, discovery procedures and admissible evidence as far as possible to the actual issues presented. However, that strictness does not always require a limitation of these trial matters to the precise time when this particular plaintiff was adversely affected by a segment of an over-all conspiracy of antecedent duration. The history of the over-all conspiracy, having some pertinency, is entitled to be very briefly established so the setting of the particular case may be better understood.

The disparity in holdings on this matter probably does not represent a true conflict in the law, but rather in the application of the rule of "relevancy" to the particular facts of the case involved.

In Alamo Theatre Co. Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,391] 143 F. Supp. 419 (D. C. Ill. 1956), it was held that certain paragraphs of the complaint should be stricken "for the reason that they relate to historical matter not pertinent to the matters here complained of by the plaintiff." Yet, the same court in United States v. E. I. DuPont deNemours and Co., [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,898] 126 F. Supp. 27, held that > "* * * in anti-trust cases, if full effect is to be given the anti-trust laws, it is necessary to develop fully the background of facts out of which the alleged conspiracy arose and in which it operated, and that broad discretion and great latitude toward the reception of evidence should be exercised."

In Maple Drive-In Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,972], 17 F. R. D. 226 (D. C., N. Y.), the complaint was stated to allege all the wrong-doing of the motion picture industry in the United States for the last 30 years, and the court ordered it stricken but went on to say:

> "While technically, perhaps, the pleader has indicated a causal connection between these misdeeds and the specific injury he complains of, nevertheless the connection lacks genuine relevancy, and this shotgun type of pleading could be employed to raise innumerable issues utterly foreign to the gravamen of the complaint. . . . Therefore, so much of the complaint as is devoted to the historical recitation of the defendants' malefactions will be stricken. . . . However, I am also in accord with Judge Dawson's suggestion that if some of these practices which were condemned . . . continued and were continuing at the time of plaintiff's claimed injury, it is permissible to assert that fact. . . .
> "Although the line is one which cannot be drawn without difficulty, I am unwilling in other respects to strike references to a national conspiracy from which the plaintiff claims to have suffered damages. . . . The plaintiff will be permitted to plead a national conspiracy without, however, employing the type and technique of allegations which have been stricken."

It was similarly held in New Dyckman Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,853], 16 F. R. D. 203 (D. C., N. Y.).

In Metropolitan Theatre Co. v. Warner Bros. Pictures [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,304], 12 F. R. D. 516, 518 (D. C., N. Y.), the court held that the ". . . plaintiff is not prevented from pleading a nation-wide conspiracy if such it is claimed to be, provided, of course, plaintiff alleges damages therefrom."

In Milgram v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,938], 192 F. 2d 579, 584 (C. A. 3), the court said, "We think that the past proclivity of these defendants to unlawful conduct may be of some significance here, where the conspiracy alleged by plaintiff is identical in scope and nature to one of the conspiracies found in the Paramount case. . . ."

[Motions Denied]

The allegations of the existence of the conspiracy from its inception will be permitted to stand, it being understood that it was this particular conspiracy which at a later time affected plaintiff, who was located in one small segment of the territory involved. The floodgates of discovery and evidence, however, are not to be opened to all aspects of time and territory involved but merely in so far as such matters are relevant to show the history of the over-all conspiracy so that the setting of this particular case may be understood.

[Prior Decrees]

The motion also seeks to strike the part of Paragraph 29 relating to decrees entered and proceedings had in other litigation, i. e., the "Paramount" decree. This aspect of the motion is denied, and as Judge LaBuy stated in the Alamo Theatre Co. case, supra, the relevance of that matter should await its use, if any, during the trial.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Production of Evidence—Deposition—Businessmen's Club as "Real Party in Interest"—Secrecy of Grand Jury Testimony.—A plaintiff was not required to answer, at an oral examination on deposition, questions pertaining to the activities of a "club," which was allegedly sponsoring and paying for a treble damage action. The defendants claimed that they were entitled to know the activities of the club and its members in initiating and supporting the suit, as the "real party in interest," in order to have the judgment operate as a judgment by estoppel, and to avoid multiplicity of suits. However, the plaintiffs were the actual parties assertedly injured by the activities complained of; therefore, even conceding the interest of the club in the litigation, the defendants could not interrogate the plaintiff as to the club's connection with the litigation because the club was not and could not be, absent injury to it, a "real party in interest."

Also, the plaintiff was not required to answer questions concerning the nature and substance of his testimony before a grand jury which investigated possible antitrust violations in the defendants' industry. There was no "compelling necessity" for the disclosure of that testimony. Although Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure does not impose any obligation of secrecy on witnesses, the defendants had no right to make him disclose that which transpired before the grand jury unless he voluntarily wished to do so.

Edwin A. Robson, District Judge [In full text]: This is a civil antitrust suit brought by several independent glazing contractors, who install glass in offices and stores, against several large manufacturers and distributors, some of whom are alleged to be glazing contractors, for treble damages for violation of the Antitrust Acts.

[Conspiracy Charged]

The Complaint alleges a conspiracy by the defendants in discriminating as to prices between defendants and plaintiffs, charging the latter higher prices and thus preventing plaintiffs from obtaining bids for glazing contracts. The Complaint also charges refusal of defendants to furnish plaintiffs with certain types of glass, such as Thermopane, with which to do certain jobs; and finally, it charges that defendants prevent the influx of lower priced foreign glass, except when defendants' own supply is low.

[Deposition]

There is said by defendants to be a "Businessmen's Club" composed of independent glaziers, of whom plaintiffs are some of the members, and defendants claim this Club is really sponsoring this litigation and paying for it, and defendants set forth several letters as indicative of the fact.

The defendants' motion to compel plaintiff Shaffer to answer questions which were propounded of him at the oral examination on deposition on February 4, 1958, and February 11, 1958, which questions he refused to answer on advice of his counsel, pertains to two matters:

(a) the activities of the Club and its members in initiating and supporting this suit as real parties in interest, and

(b) the nature and substance of the testimony of plaintiff Shaffer before the Special Federal Grand Jury of this district, investigating possible antitrust violations in the flat glass industry in the Chicago area during the years 1955 and 1956.

["Real Parties in Interest"]

(a) Defendants maintain they are entitled to know the activities and relationship of the Glazing Contractors Businessmen's Club, and its members, in initiating and supporting this suit, as the "real parties in interest," for these reasons: Judge LaBuy has previously denied a motion to quash the portion of the subpoena pertaining to documents concerning that Club and he has therefore impliedly ruled on the matter; and, furthermore, because defendants are entitled to know the "real party in interest," which is the party required by Rule 17 of the Rules of Civil Procedure to bring the suit, and also it needs to know the real party in interest in order to have the judgment operate as judgment by estoppel, and to avoid multiplicity of suits.

Conceding, for the purposes of this motion, the inference of a fostering interest of the Club in this litigation, the Court is nevertheless of the opinion that inasmuch as the plaintiffs are the actual parties assertedly injured by the defendants' alleged activities, the defendants may not interrogate as to the Club's connection with the litigation because they are not and could not be, absent injury to the Club, a "real party in interest." Thus, in Northern California M. D. Ass'n v. Interment Association of California [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,715], 120 F. Supp. 93 (D. C., Cal., 1954), the Monument Dealers Association suit for treble damages for alleged violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts was dismissed because (p. 94)

> "As a trade association whose members have allegedly been damaged by violations of the antitrust laws, plaintiff does not itself have any right to relief or cause of action, since the association is not the 'real party in interest.'" (Emphasis ours.)

It is, therefore, apparent that the information sought relative to the Club is not predicable on that basis. Also, the ruling of Judge LaBuy on the overruling of the motion to quash the subpoena was not a ruling on the admissibility or relevancy of all possible evidence which might be adduced.

[Grand Jury Testimony]

(b) The second matter raised is the right of the defendants to interrogate plaintiff Shaffer concerning his testimony before the Special Federal Grand Jury, impaneled on January 3, 1955, for the purpose of investigating possible antitrust violations, which investigation continued during 1955 and 1956 when the Grand Jury was dismissed without having taken any action to indict anyone.

["Interest of Justice"]

The test most generally used in determining the need for lifting the cloak of secrecy accorded grand jury proceedings is whether the "interests of justice" require such revelation. This test of "interest of justice" has been applied in U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 234; U. S. v. Alper, 156 F. 2d 222 (C. A. 2, 1946); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 4 F. Supp. 283 (D. C., Penn., 1933); U. S. v. Skurla, 126 F. Supp. 711 (D. C. Penn., 1954); and Wigmore on Evidence, Vol. VIII, Sec. 2362, p. 724 (3rd Ed.). Furthermore, a "strong and positive showing is required of persons seeking to break the seal of secrecy," (U. S. v. Brennan, 134 F. Supp. 42, 52 (D. C., Minn., 1955)), and the safeguard of secrecy continues even after the grand jury has completed its efforts. (In the Matter of the April 1956 Term Grand Jury, 239 F. 2d 263 (C. A. 7, 1956.) The "inviolable necessity" for secrecy of grand jury proceedings was pointed out in U. S. v. Smyth, 104 F. Supp. 283 (D. C. Cal., 1952). The Court concludes that the circumstances of this case do not require a revelation by plaintiff Shaffer of his testimony theretofore given before the grand jury.

[Witnesses]

The Court is cognizant of the fact that Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure imposes an oath of secrecy only on specific persons and does not include witnesses in the list, and furthermore, the Advisory Committee's Note to this Rule states "The rules does not impose any obligation of secrecy on witnesses." (Emphasis ours.) It was similarly so held in the case of In the Matter of Hearings Before the Committee on Banking & Currency of the U. S. Senate, 19 F. R. D. 410 (D. C., Ill., 1956). (Contra, see U. S. v. Central Supply Assn., 34 F. Supp. 241 (D. C., Ohio 1940).) The Court is also aware that here the defendants are not seeking to discover as to the entire transcript of proceedings before the grand jury, which fact was repeatedly stressed in the Supreme Court decision in United States v. Procter & Gamble [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677. On the other hand, both that decision and many others, cite the need for secrecy of grand jury proceedings, even on behalf of witnesses, and even after the grand jury probe has terminated. As the Supreme Court said in the Procter & Gamble case, supra, (p. 682): "This 'indispensable secrecy of grand jury proceedings,' . . . must not be broken except where there is a compelling necessity." (To the same effect, see U. S. v. Schack, 165 F. Supp. 371, (D. C., N. Y. 1958).)

The Court sees no "compelling necessity" in the disclosure by plaintiff Shaffer of the testimony he gave before the grand jury. Defendants may interrogate plaintiff Shaffer on deposition on all revelant matters raised by the issues of this suit's pleadings, but have no right to make him disclose that which transpired before the grand jury, unless he voluntarily wishes to disclose the same. The Procter & Gamble case, supra, acknowledges the fact that broad as the public policy is for wide discovery, the public policy against disclosure of grand jury proceedings is even stronger.

[Motion Denied]

The motion of defendants to compel answers to questions propounded at deposition of Irwin Shaffer is denied.

Louisiana Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Procedure—Statute of Limitations—Tolling of Statute During Pendency of Government Action.—A motion picture exhibitor's counterclaim for treble damages under the Louisiana antitrust laws was governed by a one-year statute of limitations covering tort actions. The counterclaim alleged a tortious injury rather than a breach of contract and was therefore controlled by the one-year statute. There was no merit to the contention that the action was contractual. The counterclaimant did not sue on a contract nor did it rely on any alleged specific breach of the terms of a contract. It was untenable to argue that prohibitory antitrust laws could reform a written agreement between the parties. Furthermore, the counterclaim was not based on a quasi-contractual relationship.

Also, the running of the one-year statute was not suspended by the pendency of a United States antitrust action against the counter-defendant. The counterclaimant had contended that under the Louisiana statute its claim had not prescribed, because of a consent decree entered after a contradictory trial and appeal, and final judgment in the Government action. The Louisiana statute does not apply to consent decrees. At the time the counterclaim was filed, more than a year had elapsed since the occurrence of the acts charged and the rendition of the final judgment in the Government action.

[Licensing Agreements]

HAMLIN, Justice [In full text]: By written agreements, Loew's, Inc., a distributor of motion pictures in interstate commerce and a licensor of the right to exhibit motion pictures distributed by it, granted to Don George, Inc., the alleged owner of seven theatres, the right to exhibit various motion pictures. The agreements provided for payment of either a fixed sum (known as a flat rental) or an amount determinable by a fixed or varying percentage of the gross receipts obtained from admissions to such exhibitions (known as a percentage rental), with or without a guaranty of a minimum amount; and further provided that Don George, Inc. submit to Loew's, Inc. a correct itemized statement of gross receipts for each day of exhibition of a picture at a designated theatre.[1]

[Nature of Action]

On February 17, 1953, Loew's, Inc. instituted suit against Don George, Inc. for $2,500.00 and other unaccounted-for amounts to be determined by the trial court, alleging that these sums represented unreported and unaccounted-for percentages on gross admission receipts.

[Antitrust Counterclaim]

In answer to plaintiff's petition, defendant denied liability and reconvened for the sum of $1,201,585.90, treble damages for loss of earnings, alleged to have been suffered as a result of an unlawful conspiracy against reconvenor's business. As plaintiff in reconvention, defendant further prayed for the sum of $50,000.00 for false and libelous statements alleged to have been made by Loew's, Inc. in a petition filed in the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana on April 11, 1952 (Suit No. 3693, entitled "Loew's, Incorporated v. Don George, Inc., and Don & Darrell George").[2]

In charging that "as a direct and proximate cause of the operation of said unlawful agreements and conspiracy against the Re-

[1] From the allegations of Articles 6 and 7 of plaintiff's petition.

[2] "That the defendants, Don and Darrell George, placed in operation prior to the period in controversy, at some date unknown to the plaintiff, and thereafter kept in operation during the period in controversy, a plan, design and conspiracy in which the corporate defendant joined in or about June, 1946, to defraud the plaintiff by making or causing to be made regularly to the plaintiff during the period in controversy, false and inaccurate statements of the gross admission receipts received from the exhibition of said theaters of various of the pictures distributed by the plaintiff, with the intent and purpose upon the part of the defendants of concealing from plaintiff a portion of such admission receipts derived from the exhibition of such pictures, of inducing the plaintiff to believe, accept, and rely upon such statements as true and accurate in further dealings of the plaintiff with repsect to said theatres.

"In or about August .., 1951, plaintiff discovered the existence of the aforesaid plan, design and conspiracy. The exact total amount of gross box office receipts actually derived from the exhibition of each of said pictures is at this time not known to the plaintiff and is peculiarly within the knowledge of defendants. Plaintiff is therefore unable at this time to state the exact amount of damages which it sustained as alleged in subdivision (a) and (b) of this paragraph.

"Plaintiff is informed, believes and therefore avers that said acts of the defendant in underreporting and misrepresenting to the plaintiff the gross admission receipts actually derived from plaintiff's pictures as aforesaid, were wilfully, deliberately and fraudulently committed with the knowledge, purpose and intent that the plaintiff would believe and rely thereon to its loss and damage in its transactions with the defendants in connection with the exhibition of its pictures at said theaters, and with gross disregard of the rights and interests of the plaintiff, for which plaintiff is entitled to an award of exemplary or punitive damages."

convenor's business, Reconvenor has been subjected to a net loss of earnings in excess of * * * $400,528.63,"[3] Don George, Inc. relied on the findings in the case of United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 92 L. Ed. 1261, 68 S. Ct. 915, wherein Loew's, Inc. and other motion picture distributors were charged with a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 USCA, Sec. 1 et seq. There, the defendants were found guilty of having committed unlawful conspiratorial restraints of trade in unreasonable clearances, pooling agreements, joint ownerships, formula deals, block-bookings, and discriminations.

Loew's, Inc., defendant in reconvention, filed exceptions to the jurisdiction ratione materiae and no cause or right of action to the reconventional demand.

[Trial Court Ruling]

The trial court sustained the exception to the jurisdiction, holding that the cause of action asserted by plaintiff in reconvention was purely statutory (Sherman Anti-Trust and Clayton Acts, 15 USCA, Sec. 1 et seq.) and could only be brought in courts of the United States. In sustaining the exception of no cause or right of action, it held that the demand for libel would have to await the termination of the action, supra, in the federal court.

The demand in reconvention was amended so as to include the State Monopoly Act (LSA-R. S. 51:121-152). Loew's, Inc. filed a plea of prescription, on the ground that the reconventional demand was founded in tort and therefore prescribed in one year. The then trial judge, the late Honorable James U. Galloway, sustained the plea of prescription and dismissed the reconventional demand, stating in part:

"* * * It is our opinion first, that the action asserted by defendant in its reconventional demand is not ex contractu. As we read the reconventional demand of defendant there is no claim that Loew's, Inc. breached any provision of any contract existing between the parties. As we appreciate defendant's position his claim is based solely on his allegations that he has suffered damages as the result of a nationwide conspiracy and combination between Loew's, Inc. and other named parties, which combinations were in restraint of trade and in violation of the Anti-trust Laws of the United States and likewise in violation of the Anti-trust Law of Louisiana in so far as said combinations and conspiracies entered into the realm of intrastate commerce. We agree with the proposition contained in Article 2315 of the Louisiana Civil Code, that every act of man that causes damage to another obliges him by whose fault it happened to repair it. We do not consider that said statutes created a new right or cause of torts. The fact that said statutes authorized the recovery of treble the amount of damages proved does not affect the basic right or cause of action.

"The Supreme Court of Louisiana, in the case of Lagrone v. K. C. S. Railway Company, 157 La. 559, 102 So. 669, has succinctly stated what we think is the law. The Court said:

'It has never been held that the mere fact of the law imposing upon a person some duty towards the public operates to create a quasi contract between such person and each individual member of the public. And it is of the essence of a contractual obligation (contract or quasi contract) that it be due to some particular person as distinguished from the public in general.'

"Certainly defendant's reconventional demand is not based upon any alleged breach of a specific contract between these parties and the mere fact that plaintiff has violated the Anti-trust Laws and breached an obligation imposed upon it by such laws to refrain from a certain type of conduct creates no quasi contractual obligation between them. It is our opinion that the one year's prescription applies to the reconventional demand, unless the operation of the prescription has been suspended."

Don George, Inc., plaintiff in reconvention, then appealed to this Court from the above judgment. We reversed said judgment and remanded the case for trial on the merits (227 La. 127, 78 So. 2d 534), holding that the law did not favor the trial of cases in piecemeal, Succession of Dancie, 187 La. 628, 175 So. 418; and that where the reconventional demand is incidental to and grows out of the main demand, the two demands should be tried together, First Nat. Bank Bldg. Co., Limited, v. Dickson & Denny, 202 La. 970, 13 So. 2d 283.

After the filing of numerous incidental pleas, the case was tried by a jury on its merits. The trial court[4] sustained the plea of prescription of one year as to both the main demand and the demand in reconvention. Plaintiff, Loew's, Inc., offered no further evidence and the trial judge excluded the evidence offered by defendant, Don George, Inc., in support of its reconventional demand. The jury was then discharged since there was no evidence before it for consideration. Final judgment by the court rejected both the main demand and the demand in reconvention.

[3] Article 78, Reconventional Demand.

[4] The case was at this time heard and tried before the Honorable Henry F. Turner.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Appeal]

Don George, Inc., plaintiff in reconvention, appealed to this Court, assigning the following errors:

"(1) The Court erred in excluding all defendants' evidence supporting its reconventional demand.

"(2) The Court erred in sustaining plaintiff's 'exception of prescription' of one year to defendant's demand in reconvention for damages under the Federal and State Antimonopoly Statutes.

"(3) The Court erred in dismissing defendant's demand for damages in reconvention for libelous statements plaintiff caused to be published in the local press and contained in its suit filed in the United States District Court, Western District of Louisiana.

"(4) The Court erred in sustaining the plea to the jurisdiction ratione materiae of the State Court to try a reconventional demand for damages under the Federal Antimonopoly Statutes."

The instant matter involves only the receipts of the Glenwood Theatre, a suburban theatre owned by the defendant, Don George, Inc., in Shreveport, Louisiana; no issue is taken with the finding of the trial court that the last alleged damages encompassed by the reconvenor occurred in the year 1946 —the reconventional demand being filed on March 5, 1953.

[Antitrust Charges]

In its demand in reconvention, Don George, Inc. alleged that Loew's, Inc., together with other film producing distributing corporations "engaged in a national conspiracy to restrain and monpolize, and have unreasonably restrained and monopolized, Interstate Trade and Commerce by the following means:

"1. Price Fixing.

"A. Vertical

"B. Horizontal

"2. Discriminatory and Unreasonable Clearance and Runs.

"3. Pooling Agreements and Joint Ownership.

"4. Formula Deals, Master Agreements and Franchises.

"5. Block-Booking.

"6. Discrimination on Contract Provisions.

"That this conspiracy was continued on and is presently being carried on on a national scale, and your reconvenor was adversely affected and damaged in its business and property by this conspiracy,

* * *

"That from 1939 to 1946 Reconvenor alleges that it could and should have profited to the extent of $61,976.00 per year had it received suitable pictures, or pictures with reasonable clearance, from all conspirators."

[Nature of Counterclaim—Statute of Limitations]

Initially, we shall determine whether the reconventional demand filed herein alleged a tortious injury or a breach of contract. If it alleged a tort, the prescription of one year applies;[5] whereas, an assertion of breach of contract is governed by the prescription of ten years.[6]

The character of the action given by reconvenor in its petition determines the prescription. Sims v. New Orleans Ry. & Light Co., 134 La. 897, 64 So. 823. An examination of the pleadings, stated in part, supra, reflects that in the instant case, reconvenor did not sue on a written contract nor did it rely on the terms of the written agreements which form the basis of plaintiff's action. It alleged that the operation of such agreements caused it to suffer damages.

[5] "The following actions are also prescribed by one year:

"That for injurious words, whether verbal or written, and that for damages caused by animals, or resulting from offenses or quasi offenses." R. C. C., Art. 3536.

"The prescription mentioned in the preceding article runs:

"* * * from that (day) on which the injurious words, disturbance or damage were sustained." R. C. C., Art. 3537.

[6] "In general, all personal actions, except those before enumerated, are prescribed by ten years." R. C. C., Art. 3544.

In Lagrone v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 157 La. 559, 102 So. 669, we said:

"* * * it has been held that where one has bound himself by special contract, i.e., has given bond, for the performance of duties imposed upon him by law, the party injured may sue upon the contract, instead of on the tort, and, if he does so, his action is not prescribed except by the prescription of 10 years. * * *

"On the other hand, it has been held that where the action for damages was not the bond or contract, but merely upon the breach of duty as imposed by law, the damages arose ex delicto, and were extinguished by the prescription of one year. * * *"

Sims v. New Orleans Ry. & Light Co., supra, held:

"The decisions of this court, interpreting article 3536 of the Civil Code, hold that there must have been some infringement by the defendant either to the person or the property of the plaintiff in order to make the prescription therein provided for effective.

"The injuries from which damages spring are generally those from injuries to persons, property, or reputation, from deceit, slander and libel, malicious prosecution, conspiracy, assault and battery, false imprisonment, seduction, trespass, conversion, infringement of patents and trade-marks, damage by animals, negligence, and offenses."

In Sizeler v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, 102 So. 2d 326, Writ of Certiorari denied, the able judge of the Court of Appeal stated:

"There are, in certain relationships, duties imposed by law, and a failure to perform these obligations is considered as a tort though the relationships themselves may be created by contract encompassing the same subject. The case of the common carrier furnishes us with a classic illustration. The law requires it to carry with impartiality and safety those who offer themselves as passengers. If it fails to do so, it is chargeable with a tort, which action is prescribed one year after the occurrence of the accident. Generally when merchandise is delivered to it for carriage, there is also a contract expressed or by operation of law that it will carry with impartiality and safety, and if it fails in this duty, there is a breach of contract which is prescribed ten years after the occurrence. [Now reduced to two years by statute, LSA-R. S. 45:1100] * * *

"Thus, for the breach of the general duty imposed by law because of the relationship, one type of action is initiated, and for the breach of a contract another form of action is indicated. As we have seen, the Revised Civil Code limits the time in which these two forms of actions may be instituted. * * *" Cf. Parro v. Fifteen Oil Co., 26 So. 2d 30; Oliver & Sons v. Board of Com'rs of Lake Charles, 181 La. 802, 160 So. 419.

[Louisiana Antitrust Law]

Our Anti-Trust law, LSA-R. S. 51:121-152, is similar to the federal law, and a review of the Louisiana cases arising thereunder, in which the court considered the nature of the cause of action and the application of prescription, is as follows:

"The general rule is not disputed by plaintiffs, but they contend a cause of action based on the Sherman Law is sui generis and does not sound in tort. With this I cannot agree. In my opinion this case is identical in principle with other cases based on fraud and deceit, which have always been held to come under the general rule. * * *" Caillouet v. American Sugar Refining Co., 250 Fed. 639.

"In response to defendants' motion to strike, plaintiff suggests, first that Article 3536, Louisiana Civil Code, relating to the prescription of 'offenses and quasi offenses' in one year, does not apply to a treble damage antitrust suit since such an action is sui generis and therefore falls within Article 3544, the ten-year omnibus provision covering prescription of all personal actions not otherwise provided for in the Code. It is true that the antitrust suit is a statutory action with no exact equivalent in the common law. Consequently, the courts have experienced some difficulty in applying to it statutes of limitation which list specific types of common law actions. But the Louisiana Civil Code term, 'offenses and quasi offenses,' is, not a specific and exclusive, but a general term which embraces all 'tort' actions, including the action for 'injury to business.' (R. C. C., Article 2315) In federal decisions antitrust damage suits are usually described as 'tort' actions.

"In this state of the law it would be arbitrary and unreasonable now to exclude this 'tort' action from the general category of 'offenses and quasi offenses.' Moreover, the courts of this district and this circuit have regularly applied Article 3536 to treble damage suits under the anti-trust laws. Although the point may never have been strongly urged in these prior cases, this Court can see no reason for changing the rule, and therefore the one year limit applies." Delta Theaters, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,924], 158 Fed. Supp. 644, (U. S. District Court, E. D. Louisiana) [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,134, 69,178] 259 F. 2d 563. See, also, Streiffer v. Seafarers Sea Chest Corporation [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,074], 162 Fed. Supp. 602. Cf. Don George, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,578], 145 F. Supp. 523.

[Tort Claim]

An application of the above jurisprudence to the allegations of the reconventional demand leads to the conclusion that the demand of plaintiff in reconvention is one for damages resulting from a tort. Reconvenor, however, contends that the written agreements into which it entered with plaintiff must be introduced in evidence to prove the facts alleged in the reconventional demand, and that these agreements have been reformed by the monopoly statutes and decisions thereunder.[1] Reconvenor argues that,

> "To go further, Don George, Inc., in order to establish its damage as shown by Article 78, must necessarily take each separate contract for pictures and see what it grossed, then take a contract that was legal and see what it grossed. The difference in what the illegal contract grossed as compared to [what] the legal contract grossed is our measure of damages. In other words, we are suing on the illegal contract as corrected and reformed by law. When we do this, we are suing in 'quasi contracts.'"

In arguing that the damages sustained by it grew out of a contractual relationship—the Anti-Trust Act forming a part of the contract—reconvenor cites the cases of McKane v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 199 So. 175, Certiorari Denied, and Johnson v. Anderson-Dunham Concrete Co., Inc., 212 La. 276, 31 So. 797, wherein it was held that the Workmen's Compensation Act (Act 20 of 1914, as amended) and the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U. S. C. A., Secs. 201 to 219) formed a part of the contract of employment.

Reconvenor still further contends that despite the fact that the federal courts have held that an action for damages under the Sherman Anti-Trust and Clayton Acts is founded in tort, such is not the case in Louisiana, the rights enforced depending upon the law of the origin and not of the forum.

After raising the above ingenious arguments, plaintiff in reconvention contends that if its action is not based on breach of contract, it stems from a quasi-contractual relationship, i.e., defendant in reconvention cannot unjustly enrich itself at the expense of reconvenor, Article 3544, supra, applying.

We find no merit in reconvenor's contention that its action is contractual. As stated supra, plaintiff in reconvention did not sue on a contract, nor did it rely on any alleged specific breach of the terms of a contract. Reconvenor was neither an employee nor a workman. Defendant in reconvention allegedly violated prohibitory laws, and it is untenable to argue that such a law could reform the written agreements executed between plaintiff and defendant.

We now go on to a discussion as to whether or not a quasi contract is involved in this cause.

Article 2293 of the Revised Civil Code provides:

> "Quasi contracts are the lawful and purely voluntary act of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person, and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between the parties."

Article 2294 of the Revised Civil Code further states:

> "All acts, from which there results an obligation without any agreement, in the manner expressed in the preceding article, form quasi contracts. But there are two principal kinds which give rise to them, to wit: The transaction of another's business, and the payment of a thing not due."

In City of New Orleans v. Southern Bank, 31 La. Ann. 560, 567, we held:

> "The distinction between damages ex delicto and ex contractu is, that the latter ensue from the breach of a special obligation, and the former from the violation of a general duty. * * *"

In Knoop v. Blaffer, 39 La. Ann. 23, 6 So. 9, the above case was construed in the following language:

> "* * * In City of New Orleans v. Bank, 31 La. Ann. 566, the court said: 'The marked distinction between a quasi contract and an offense or quasi offense is that the act which gives rise to a quasi contract is a lawful act, and therefore is permitted; while the act which gives rise to an offense or quasi offense is unlawful, and therefore is forbidden. * * *"

[1] "That both the Federal Antimonopoly Statute and the State Antimonopoly Statute created a special duty of an exhibitor having contract relations with the producer and imposed special obligations cannot be gainsaid." Appellant's Brief, p. 37.

See, also, 12 Am. Jur., "Contracts," Sec. 6, p. 502.

This Court distinctly stated, in Kramer v. Freeman, 198 La. 244, 3 So. 2d 609, that:

"It is the well settled jurisprudence of this State that the character which a plaintiff gives his pleadings and the form of his action govern the prescription applicable. See Antoine v. Franichevich, 184 La. 612, 167 So. 98, and Shepard Realty Co. v. United Shoe Stores Co., 193 La. 211, 190 So. 383. In the case at bar, the plaintiff alleges in his petition that the defendants have stolen and otherwise illegally obtained certain jewelry and cash from him and that on one occasion he was assaulted and struck by one of them. He does not, however, ask for damages in redress for the wrongs committed by the defendants (which would include the personal injuries he sustained) but, on the contrary, he prays that they be ordered to return the specific property which they abstracted from him or, in the alternative, in the event they cannot return it, that he be given judgment against them for its value. This prayer clearly indicates an election on his part to waive his right to recover for the defendants' unlawful acts and limit his demand to a suit in quasi contract for the restitution of his property." Cf. Succession of Fields, 222 La. 310, 62 So. 2d 495; Masera v. Rosedale Inn, 1 So. 2d 160; Succession of Savant, 132 So. 263; Burney's Heirs v. Ludeling, 47 La. Ann. 73, 16 So. 507; Roussel v. Railways Realty Co., 165 La. 536, 115 So. 742; Greenfield Box Co. v. Independence Veneer & Box Mfg. Co., 163 La. 86, 111 So. 608; Don George, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,578], 145 F. Supp. 523.

[One-Year Statute Applicable]

Plaintiff in reconvention has not alleged that Loew's, Inc. owed it a special obligation, nor has it prayed for the return of anything unjustly held by the defendant in reconvention. In no way or manner does the character of its petition state or allege a quasi contract; it simply charges that the alleged conspiracy and monopoly accompanied by price fixing damaged appellant and constituted the violation of a general duty. Reconvenor's action is founded in tort and governed by the prescription of one year, and the judgment of the trial court sustained the plea of prescription of one year was, therefore, correct.

Having found that the reconventional demand was controlled by the prescription of one year, we conclude that the trial judge was correct in excluding all evidence which occurred at or referred to a time prior to one year before the filing of said reconventional demand.

[State Tolling Provision]

LSA-R. S. 51:132 provides:

"* * * This Section does not apply to consent judgments. Whenever any proceeding, civil or criminal, is instituted by the United States, or by this state, to restrain or punish violations of its antitrust laws, the running of prescription of a private right of action arising under these laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in the proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency of the proceeding."

Reconvenor contends that under the above section the present action has not prescribed, because of a consent decree entered after a contradictory trial and appeal, and final judgment in the case of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915, October Term, 1947, decided May 3, 1948. There is no merit to this contention; the above section does not apply to consent decrees. At the time the reconventional demand was filed on March 5, 1953, more than a year had elapsed since the occurrence of the alleged conspiratorial acts charged, and the rendition of said final judgment on May 3, 1948.

[Libel Claim]

We find no merit in reconvenor's contention that the trial judge was in error in rejecting its demand for damages alleged to have resulted from alleged libelous statements made by Loew's, Inc. in a proceeding it filed in the federal court, supra, against Don George, Inc. and others. We are not favored with proof of the alleged untruthfulness of the statements, nor do we have before us the final disposition of the matter.

In Manuel v. Deshotels, 160 La. 652, 107 So. 478, we held:

"The contention of the appellees is that when a suit for damages for libel is based upon allegations contained in another suit, the second suit must await the termination of the action wherein the defamatory averments are made. We think this is correct. Wolf v. Ins. Co., 58 So. 507, 130 La. 679, and authorities cited therein." See, also, Howard v. Coyle, 163 La. 257, 111 So. 697.

Robinson Mercantile Co. v. Freeman, 172 So. 797, correctly stated:

"It is also well settled in the jurisprudence of this state that an action for libelous statements made by a party litigant cannot be maintained until the proceeding in which such allegations are made has terminated, as the cause of action does not arise until the party making the allegations has had the opportunity of proving the truth of the allegations in the proceedings in which they are made. See Manuel v. Deshotels et al., 160 La. 652, 107 So. 478. And it is also well settled in our jurisprudence that an action for defamatory allegations cannot be made the basis for damages by a reconventional demand until the final termination of the main demand, and that such claim for damages are premature; that the claim for damages comes in esse only after the litigant making the charges has been given an opportunity to prove them in the suit in which they are made and has failed to make such proof. See Howard v. Coyle et al., 163 La. 257, 111 So. 697; Thompson & Co. v. Gosserand, 128 La. 1029, 55 So. 663."

[Federal Antitrust Claim]

In 15 USCA, Sec. 15, it is provided:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

In United Artists Corp. v. Ancore Amusement Corp. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,550], 91 F. Supp. 132, and Caraway v. Ford Motor Company [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,536], 144 F. Supp. 295, the courts held that the above section vests the federal district courts with exclusive jurisdiction of federal anti-trust actions.

"Section 15 of Title 15 U. S. C. A., vests District Courts with exclusive jurisdiction of federal antitrust actions. It was intended to provide broader and more effective relief, both substantially and procedurally, for persons and corporations injured by violations of the antitrust laws, by enlarging the remedies provided under those laws and enabling persons and corporations to maintain suits for damages sustained as a result of violations. This right to sue granted under Section 15 is to be exercised only in a 'district court of the United States.' * * *" Caraway v. Ford Motor Company [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,536], 144 F. Supp. 295.

The trial court was correct in holding that it did not have jurisdiction to entertain a proceeding brought under the federal antitrust laws.

[Affirmed]

For the reasons assigned, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Suits for Injunctive Relief—Interrogatories—Demand for Documents by Interrogatories—Names of Persons "Having Knowledge" of Challenged Contracts.—In a civil antitrust action charging motion picture distributors with "block booking" films to the motion picture industry, the Government was required to answer interrogatories asking for a description, and the names and addresses of the custodians, of each "block booking contract." However, a further demand in the interrogatories for copies of those contracts was stricken. The production of documents could be secured under Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, but not by interrogatories under Rule 33. Other interrogatories which sought the names and addresses of persons "having knowledge" of any facts or documents tending to prove the existence of oral "block booking" contracts were also stricken. They would require the names of such persons as the Government's lawyers, investigators, informants, and stenographers. As drawn, the interrogatories sought what was, in fact, the work product of the Government's lawyers. The Government could be required, however, by properly drawn interrogatories, to state any oral contracts on which it intended to rely and to give information as to the witnesses it intended to call to prove the existence of those contracts.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.260.

Phillips, Attorney, United Artists Corporation, of counsel), for United Artists Corporation.

[Interrogatories]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This matter involves the objections made by the plaintiff, the United States Government, to interrogatories served by the defendants. The objections are made under the provisions of Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Each of the actions is an anti-trust action brought by the Government under the Sherman Act. The actions have been consolidated to a limited extent, part of which is that all applications for discovery, interrogatories and depositions and motions relating to them shall be made before or referred to the judge to whom the cases have been assigned for all purposes.

This proceeding relates to interrogatories served by the defendants upon the Government. The Government has objected to certain interrogatories of certain of the defendants, which defendants are C & C Super Corp., Screen Gems, Inc., Associated Artists Productions, Inc., National Telefilm Associates, Inc. and United Artists Corporation. The interrogatories are numerous and searching and since the objections of the Government relate to certain categories of interrogatories this opinion will deal with the interrogatories in those categories.

[List of Contracts]

The interrogatories ask the Government to list each contract of certain defendants which the Government claims is a "block booking contract" and to describe such contracts sufficiently for identification, stating its date, the parties thereto, the persons who negotiated and who executed the contract and the name and address of the person in whose custody and control that contract may be found. The objections to such interrogatories are overruled.

[Demand for Copies]

The interrogatories then go on to demand that a copy of each written contract described in the interrogatory be furnished. Insofar as the interrogatories seek to require the production of written contracts or documents the objection to the interrogatory is sustained. The production of documents may be secured under Rule 34 of the Rules of Civil Procedure upon good cause being shown therefor. The production of documents may not be required by interrogatories under Rule 33. Castro v. A. H. Bull & Co., 9 F. R. D. 84 (S. D. N. Y. 1949).

["Work Product"]

A number of other interrogatories ask the Government to describe any contract for block booking which is oral, giving certain facts with reference thereto, which facts may properly be inquired into by interrogatories. But they then continue with a demand that the Government furnish the names and addresses of each person known to plaintiff to have knowledge of any facts or documents tending to prove the existence or circumstances of such oral contracts and specifically requesting, with respect to each such person, certain information, included among which interrogaties are questions as to (A) whether such person was an employee of a television station at the time of the incident and if so the identification by name and the address of such television station, (B) whether such person is an employee of the United States and if so in what capacity, and (C) and (D) whether such person gave any written or oral statements to any officer or agent of the United States in connection with any investigation leading or related to this litigation. To the extent that the interrogatories seek that information they go beyond the reasonable limits of the Rules. The Government can certainly be required to state any oral contracts upon which they intend to rely, and the names of any persons entering into such contracts, and the substance of the terms of the oral contracts. To ask the Government to state the names and addresses of every person known to "have knowledge" of any fact tending to prove the existence or circumstances of such oral contract would impose an impossible burden upon the Government. It would require, for example, that the names of every person who worked upon the case in the anti-trust division, including the lawyers, stenographers, investigators, etc., would have to be furnished, because they all might have received some information about the evidence. It would call for the revealing of what in fact is the work product of the lawyers. See Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U. S. 495 (1947).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Witnesses]

If the defendants seek to get information as to the witnesses whom the Government intends to call to prove the existence of oral contracts or the circumstances of the oral contracts, such information can be obtained by properly drawn interrogatories. See, Kingsway Press v. Farrell Pub. Co., 30 F. Supp. 775 (S. D. N. Y. 1939). However, in a case of this nature it is obvious that the Government must employ attorneys and investigators to ascertain facts, most of whom they will not call as witnesses at the trial because their information will to a substantial extent be hearsay. To require by a "shotgun" interrogatory that the Government provide the names and addresses of all investigators and informants is improper.

[Harassment]

Properly drawn interrogatories may secure all the information that defendants need, which will disclose the basis of the Government's charge, the type of evidence that it will rely upon and any facts which may lead to the discovery of other evidence which might be helpful to the defendants. However, a consideration of the interrogatories in the present case, which seek the type of information hereinabove described, must lead the Court to conclude that the interrogatories are served more for the purpose of harassing the Government and putting it to an impossible task than that they are designed to secure information. Under the circumstances, so much of the interrogatories as seek the foregoing information are stricken.

[Order]

Numerous of the interrogatories to which objections have been made are perfectly proper interrogatories. However, certain of the interrogatories will have to be stricken as objectionable on the bases which are set forth hereinabove. The type of objectionable interrogatory is sufficiently defined in this opinion so that the parties may know to which interrogatories reference is made.

Let the parties submit an order in accordance with the foregoing opinion within ten (10) days from the date of entry herein. So ordered.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Jurisdiction over Parties—Service of Process on Director of Corporation.—Personal service of process on an Illinois resident who was a member of the Board of Directors of a non-resident corporation did not constitute service on the corporation. Rule 4(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for service of process on officers, managing or general agents, or any other agents authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process for a corporation. The individual served was not a managing or general agent, and he was not authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process for the corporation. Further, the director was not an "officer" of the corporation. Under the Illinois Business Corporation Act, the officers of a corporation consist of "a president, one or more vice-presidents . . . a secretary and a treasurer."

Memorandum

[Service of Process]

SULLIVAN, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion to quash service of summons on a nonresident non-profit corporation. The service was made personally on a member of the Board of Directors of the corporation who is a resident of Illinois. Affidavits as to the facts have been filed by both sides.

Rule 4(b)(3), F. R. C. P., provides for service of process on a foreign corporation "by delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an officer, a managing or general agent, or to any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive the service of process".

The affidavits of the plaintiff as to the activities of Mr. Hendrick, the director upon whom service was made, are very vague. Giving them all the weight possible, it is apparent that he was not a "managing or general agent" of the defendant. There is no suggestion that he was authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process. This leaves as the only possibility to sustain service that he was served as an "officer".

["Officer" of Corporation]

A director is not an "officer" of a corporation in the ordinary or the legal sense of that word. Thus the Illinois Business Corporation Act (Ch. 32, Smith-Hurd Statutes Ann. Sec. 157.43) provides that "the officers of a corporation shall consist of a president, one or more vice-presidents * * * a secretary and a treasurer, each of whom shall be elected by the board of directors". The statute illustrates the distinction commonly made between "officers" and the board of directors of a corporation. And in Illinois, it has been flatly held that a director is not an officer for service of process (Sarelas v. Fagerburg, 316 Ill. App. 606 (1952).

[Service Set Aside]

Service on the director, Mr. Hendrick, was not service on the defendant American Gas Association, and defendant's motion to set aside that service and the return thereon will be allowed.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Place Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—"Transacting Business"—Sending "Inspectors" into District.—A corporation was properly sued in the Northern District of Illinois since its practice of sending "inspectors" into that District to "inspect" and approve appliances manufactured there was sufficient to show that it "transacted business" there.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Jurisdiction Over Parties—Service of Process on Corporation—Validity of "Out-of-State" Service Where Supporting Antitrust Action Held Invalid.—In an antitrust action in the Northern District of Illinois, service of process in New York against a corporation would not be quashed if a second amended complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a cause of action. The corporation argued that, in such an event, there would be no valid antitrust action to support the out-of-state service made under Section 12 of the Clayton Act. Under that section, however, service may be made wherever the defendant may be found when "any" antitrust action "may be brought." The validity of the service is tested by the bringing of the action; it cannot await a ruling on a motion to dismiss.

Memorandum

[Motion to Quash Service]

SULLIVAN, District Judge [In full text]: In this anti-trust action, the American Gas Association (A. G. A.) has made a motion to quash service of summons as to it.

[Corporation "Doing Business"]

Service was made in New York under Title 15 U. S. C. § 22. A. G. A. first contended that it was a foreign corporation and not "doing business" in this District as required by that section. Affidavits and counter-affidavits were filed on this point. From them, it must be concluded that A. G. A.'s activities in this District were sufficient to show that it "transacts business" here. In particular, it has a regular practice of sending "inspectors" here to "inspect" gas appliances, and approves appliances manufactured here. (Dairy Industries Supply Assn. v. La Buy [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,599], 207 F. (2d) 554 (7th Cir. 1953).)

[Validity of Antitrust Action]

A. G. A. also argues that if the second amended complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a cause of action, the service should be quashed since in that event there would be no valid antitrust action to support the out-of-state service (Title 15 U. S. C. § 22). The circuity of the argument is apparent. Under that section, service may be made wherever the defendant may be found when "any" anti-trust action "may be brought". The validity of the service is tested by the bringing of the action, not at some subsequent time. Determination of whether or not a defendant is properly served cannot await a ruling on a motion to dismiss.

[Motion Denied]

The motion of A. G. A. to quash service of summons is denied.

The decree also enjoined the association and its members from (1) inducing manufacturers of sheared fur garments to discontinue business relations with any fur shearer, (2) preventing manufacturers from obtaining the services of any fur shearer, or (3) preventing the manufacturers from performing fur shearing services on their own garments. In addition, the decree ordered the association and its members to cancel all contracts with manufacturers which limited those manufacturers to the employment of fur shearers who were members of the association. Further, the decree prohibited participation or membership in any association or organization whose activities are inconsistent with the provisions of the judgment.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

NOONAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 16, 1958, and each of the said defendants having appeared herein and the plaintiff and the defendants, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or admission by any party in respect of any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony or evidence has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as Follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and all the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants and each of them under Section I of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other legal entity;

(B) "Defendant Association" shall mean the defendant Fur Shearers Guild, Inc.;

(C) "Fur shearing" shall mean the process whereby the hairs of selected animal furs are cut to a predetermined uniform length, and, if desired, various grooves are cut into the furs to highlight the natural color gradations that exist in certain furs;

(D) "Sheared fur garments" shall mean fur garments that have been subjected to fur shearing; including sheared fur coats, jackets, stoles, wraps, and other outer garments as well as sheared furs used as trimmings or adornments on outer garments; and

(E) "Fur shearer" shall mean any person whose primary business is the offering of his or its fur shearing services to any manufacturer of sheared fur garments on a fee or charge basis.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to each such defendant and to his or its officers, agents, servants, employees, members, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Cancelldtion of Contracts—Dissolution]

The defendants are ordered and directed:

(A) Forthwith to cause the Defendant Association in writing pursuant to this decree to terminate, cancel and declare of no effect all contracts, agreements and understandings between the Defendant Association and manufacturers of sheared fur garments limiting such manufacturers to the employment of fur shearers who are members of the Defendant Association;

(B) Forthwith to institute such action as may be necessary to dissolve the Defendant Association under the laws of the State of New York and to complete such dissolution within the minimum period of time permitted by the laws of the State of New York; and

(C) Upon completion of such dissolution of the Defendant Association, to file a report with this Court and with the plaintiff setting forth the fact of compliance with this Section IV.

V

[Prohibited Agreements]

The defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, enforcing, maintaining, or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any manufacturer of sheared fur garments and any association or central agency of or for persons engaged in the fur shearing trade or industry:

(A) To limit, restrict, eliminate or reduce price competition between fur shearing concerns; and

(B) To hinder, restrict, limit or prevent any fur shearing concern from offering its services to manufacturers of sheared fur garments.

VI

[Price Fixing—Exclusive Dealing]

The defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Entering into, adhering to, or enforcing any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any other person fixing, determining, establishing, maintaining or stabilizing prices, pricing methods, discounts, mark-ups, or other terms or conditions for the sale of shearing services to any third person;

(B) Advising, suggesting or inducing or attempting to advise, suggest or induce, any or all manufacturers of sheared fur garments to discontinue business relations with any fur shearer; provided however, that the defendants shall not be enjoined from individually soliciting the custom of any manufacturer of sheared fur garments;

(C) Hindering, restricting, limiting or preventing or attempting to hinder, restrict or prevent any manufacturer of sheared fur garments from obtaining the services of any fur shearer or from itself performing fur shearing services on its own sheared fur garments;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(D) Circulating, exchanging or using in any manner, any price list or purported price list containing prices, terms or conditions for shearing of furs which have been agreed upon or established pursuant to agreement between two or more fur shearers; and

(E) Being a member of, contributing anything of value to, or participating in any of the activities of, any trade association or other organization, the activities of which are inconsistent in any manner with any of the provisions of this Final Judgment.

VII

[Price Lists]

Within thirty (30) days following the date of the entry of this Final Judgment, each of the individual defendants shall cause the fur shearing firm or business, which each owns in whole or in part, to:

(A) Withdraw its presently effective price list for fur shearing services originally issued between January 1, 1958 and February 28, 1958;

(B) Individually review the prices withdrawn in conformity with Section VII(A) herein on the basis of its individual cost figures and its individual judgment as to profits and other lawful considerations and issue a new price list on the basis of such independent review; and

(C) File with this Court, and with the plaintiff, a report setting forth the fact and manner of their compliance with this Section VII, together with a copy of the new price list issued by the fur shearing firm or business which each owns in whole or in part.

VIII

[Notice]

The Defendant Association is ordered and directed, within ten (10) days after the date of its entry, to furnish to each of its present members a conformed copy of this Final Judgment and to file with this Court, and with the plaintiff, a report setting forth the fact and manner of its compliance with this Section VIII, together with the names and addresses of each person to whom a copy of this Final Judgment shall have been furnished in compliance herewith.

IX

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Anti-Trust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (A) reasonable access during office hours of such defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment, and (B) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference to interview officers and employees of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon such written request, said defendant shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section "IX", shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

X

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 69,313] Adolph Hohensee, et al. v. The Goon Squad, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 6444. Filed March 19, 1959; amended March 24, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce—Injury to Public.—A complaint in which a lecturer, writer, and seller of food products alleged that his business had been injured by a conspiracy stated no cause of action against a judge before whom he had appeared as a litigant, a newspaper which had reported his court appearances, and the officials of a penitentiary in which he had been incarcerated for the misbranding of drugs. The complaint set forth no interstate involvement; further, it failed to set forth that any of the defendants were in competition with the plaintiffs, or had any interest in any competing business. A complaint under the antitrust laws must describe with definiteness and certainty the conspiracy relied upon and the acts which allegedly resulted in damage to the plaintiff. The complaint was also defective in that it failed to charge any injury to the public. Facts must be alleged from which it can be determined as a matter of law that a conspiracy was entered into which brought about an increase in prices to the public, a lessening of the volume or quality of merchandise available, or other evil consequence in the free flow of interstate commerce.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475, 9009.600.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Be Liable—Parties Defendant—Liability of Judge, Penitentiary Officials, and Press.—A lecturer, writer, and seller of food products who claimed that his business was injured by a conspiracy stated no cause of action under the antitrust laws against a judge before whom he appeared as a litigant, a newspaper which reported his court appearances, and the officials of a federal penitentiary where he was incarcerated for the misbranding of drugs. A judge is not civilly liable to the parties in a law suit for his rulings in a case so long as he has jurisdiction. Also, the employees of the penitentiary were "so closely associated with the judicial process as to make necessary their protection from harassment in order to protect the judicial process." As to the newspaper, the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution precluded any claim against it under the antitrust laws of the United States.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9006.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Transfer of Venue—Convenience of Parties.—A motion to transfer a treble damage action from the Middle to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania was denied since all of the defendants served were residents of the Middle District and a transfer would not be for their convenience.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.600.

There is no indication in the complaint of the residence of any of the plaintiffs or any of the defendants.

[Antitrust Laws]

The complaint alleges that the action is brought under the antitrust laws of the United States and in it the plantiffs seek treble damages in the sum of Ten Million Dollars and injunctive relief.

[Conspiracy Alleged]

Plaintiffs allege that at all times mentioned in the complaint they were engaged in interstate commerce in the following businesses: lecturing; public relations; selling of food products; selling of other products; publishing, writing and distributing books, periodicals and other publications; other businesses. Plaintiffs further allege that during the period therein, to wit: beginning July 31, 1957 to and including June 14, 1958, defendants conducted a conspiracy against plaintiffs in restraint of trade and commerce between the several states, consisting of the following overt and unlawful acts:

a. Libel.
b. Slander.
c. Destruction of personal property.
d. Confiscation of personal property.
e. Unlawful search and seizure.
f. Ransacking of premises.
g. Assault and battery.
h. Abuse of process.
i. False arrest.
j. Obstruction of justice.
k. Impairment of credit.
l. Caused manufacturers to not supply items.
m. Caused the forced sale of real and personal property.
n. Other unlawful overt acts.
o. Destruction of businesses.

Plaintiffs claim that as the result of the alleged conspiracy they were injured in the destruction of lecture business, destruction of product sale business, destruction of health, loss of freedom and liberty, other losses and injuries.

[Service of Process]

The Marshal's return indicates that service of Summons and Complaint was made on the following: Norman S. Hommel, Custodial Force, Robert T. Zimmerman, Custodial Force, John C. Taylor, Warden United States Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., Leon Witkin, Chief Medical Officer, and L. Troy Jacobs, Senior Technical Assistant, John W. Murphy and The Scranton Times.

[Motions]

There is presently before the Court

1. Motion of plaintiffs to transfer the case to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

2. Motion of defendants, Norman S. Hommel, Robert T. Zimmerman, John C. Taylor, and L. Troy Jacobs, to dismiss on the grounds,

(a) lack of jurisdiction on the subject matter,

(b) lack of jurisdiction over the person,

(c) failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, and motion by the same defendants to strike for the reasons,

(a) complaint is impertinent and scandalous,

(b) allegations of the complaint are impertinent and scandalous,

(c) complaint is absurd and preposterous.

3. Motion of Leon Witkin to dismiss on the grounds,

(a) complaint fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted,

(b) complaint is scandalous.

4. Motion of John W. Murphy to dismiss on the grounds,

(a) failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted,

(b) lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter,

(c) Lack of jurisdiction over the person.

5. Motion of The Scranton Times and George Clark to dismiss on the grounds,

(a) lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter,

(b) lack of jurisdiction over the person,

(c) failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, and by the same defendants to strike for the reasons,

(a) complaint is impertinent and scandalous,

(b) failure to identify four of the plaintiffs who are identified in caption of complaint respectively as Richard Roe #1, #2, #3, and #4.

6. Motion of plaintiffs to strike motions of Norman S. Hommel, Robert T. Zimmerman, John C. Taylor, and L. Troy Jacobs to dismiss for the reason substantially that Daniel H. Jenkins, United States Attorney for the Middle District of Pennsylvania and attorney of record for said penitentiary official movants, has no authority under the law to so represent them as the movants are herein sued for their own tortious acts arising independently of their official duties.

7. Motion of plaintiffs to strike motion of John W. Murphy to dismiss substantially for the reason that Eugene F. Smith, law clerk for defendant John W. Murphy, Chief Judge of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, and attorney of record for said John W. Murphy, is barred from practicing law in any court of the United States, and accordingly for that reason the said motion is defective from its inception.

[Transfer of Venue]

Plaintiffs' motion to transfer the case to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania is denied. At the time of service all defendants served were residents of this district, so that a transfer certainly would not be for their convenience. Plaintiffs have set forth no facts to establish the contrary.

[Right of Counsel to Appear]

Motion of plaintiffs to strike motion of defendants, Norman S. Hommel, Robert T. Zimmerman, John C. Taylor, and L. Troy Jacobs is denied. This motion is predicated on the fact that the four defendants, all of whom were employees of the United States Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, an agency of the United States, were represented without authority by the United States Attorney. This is completely without merit.

The United States Attorneys' Manual, Title 3, Civil Division, Page 3, under the caption "Representation of Government Officers and Employees," states, inter alia, as follows:

> "It is the general policy of the Department to afford counsel and representation to Government officers and employees when suits for injunction, mandamus, etc., are brought against them in connection with their performance of their official duties. * * *"

Motion of plaintiffs to strike motion of defendant, John W. Murphy, for the reason that Eugene F. Smith, law clerk for said defendant in his capacity as Chief Judge, United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, is barred from practicing law in any court of the United States, and accordingly the motion is fatally tainted, is denied. In support of their motion plaintiffs cite "62 Stat. 926, sec. 955, 28 U. S. C. A. 955." This section reads as follows:

> "The clerk of each court and his deputies and assistants shall not practice law in any court of the United States."

It so happens that Mr. Smith is law clerk to Chief Judge John W. Murphy. He is not a clerk of any court nor a deputy or assistant clerk of any court. This motion is frivolous in the extreme.

[Judicial Notice]

Now as to the motions of all defendants to dismiss the complaint.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

This Court takes judicial notice of the fact that El Rancho Adolphus Products, Inc., a corporation; Scientific Living, Inc., a corporation; and Adolphus Hohensee, an individual, were found guilty by verdict of a jury on seven counts charging misbranding of drugs in interstate commerce. The trial judge, Hon. Albert L. Watson, a defendant herein although not served, refused defendants' motions in arrest of judgment and for a new trial (140 F. Supp. 645). Judge Watson imposed a penitentiary sentence on defendant Hohensee.

About the same time there was before Chief Judge Murphy of this Court, a defendant herein, application by Federal Trade Commission for an order requiring Scientific Living, Inc., a corporation under investigation, to comply with a subpoena duces tecum of the Commission duly authorized and served on corporation in course of investigation. Judge Murphy refused defendants' motion to quash the subpoena and ordered compliance (150 F. Supp. 495). Plaintiff herein, Adolph Hohensee, was a principal officer of the said Scientific Living, Inc., the corporation then before Judge Murphy.

The brief of the Government in the instant proceeding states that the defendants, Hommel, Zimmerman, Taylor and Jacobs, were officials of the United States Northeastern Penitentiary,[1] Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, during the time the plaintiff, Adolph Hohensee, was incarcerated there. This has not been denied.

Plaintiffs have had considerable experience in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania and they are not happy about it.[2] In fact, they feel aggrieved to the tune of Ten Million Dollars which even in a time of billion dollar budgets is not to be "sneezed at."

The plaintiffs are fortified by four of the phantom Roe family as co-plaintiffs. Albeit with the inclusion of almost one thousand from the phantom Doe family, actually seven defendants were served. These defendants include the Chief Judge of this Court, before whom on occasion the plaintiff, Adolph Hohensee, was a litigant; the five employees of the United States Penitentiary, whose duties included that of hosting the plaintiff, Adolph Hohensee, during his involuntary stay at that institution; and The Scranton Times, whose duty to publish all the news that is fit to print and which apparently did from time to time publish the activities of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, including those involving the said Adolph Hohensee. Defendant George Clark who was not served but joined his employer, The Scranton Times, in its motion to dismiss, was the reporter who apparently wrote the news items of the said court proceedings. Out of that background we are asked to find the kind of stuff that makes for a violation of the antitrust laws of the United States.

[Interstate Commerce]

There is nothing in the complaint to indicate a diversity of citizenship. That is jurisdictional and the responsibility of showing such is on the plaintiffs. Lacking diversity the plaintiffs must look to a federal statute or the Constitution to establish jurisdiction. They have elected to proceed under the antitrust laws which do not include diversity as a jurisdictional prerequisite.

Clearly, the complaint fails to state a claim against any of the defendants upon which relief can be granted. The complaint sets forth no interstate involvement nor that any of the defendants are in competition with plaintiffs or have any interest in any competing business.

In Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., et al. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,062], 4 Cir., 72 F. (2) 885, 887, the court said:

> "Thus it has been held in numerous federal decisions that in a civil suit under this special Act the declaration must allege facts from which the court can determine that there has been a violation of the Act with resultant damage proximately caused thereby to the plaintiff. In Alexander Milburn Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. (C. C. A. 4) 15 F. (2) 678, 680 (certiorari denied, 273 U. S. 757, 47 S. Ct. 459, 71 L. Ed. 876) this Court, by Judge Parker, said:
> 'For it is not sufficient that the declaration be framed in the words of the statute, or that it allege mere conclusions of the pleader. It must describe with definiteness and certainty the combination or conspiracy relied on, as well as the acts done which resulted in damage to plaintiff, and, in doing so, must set forth the substance of the agreement in restraint of trade, or the plan or scheme of the conspiracy, or the facts constituting the attempt to monopolize. * * *'"

[1] The correct designation is now "United States Penitentiary, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania."

[2] United States v. El Rancho Adolphus Products, et al., D. C. M. D. Pa., 140 F. Supp. 645, aff. 243 F. 2d 367, cert. den. 353 U. S. 976; Federal Trade Commission v. Scientific Living, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,673], D. C. M. D. Pa., 150 F. Supp. 495.

[Public Injury]

The complaint is furthermore fatally defective in that it fails to charge any injury to the public.

In Shotkin v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341], 10 Cir., 171 F. 2d 236, 239, the court stated:

"* * * In other words, the complaint failed to allege facts from which it could be determined as a matter of law that a combination or conspiracy was entered into which brought about an increase in prices to the consuming public, a diminution in the volume of merchandise in the competitive markets, a deterioration in the quality of the merchandise available in the channels of commerce, or any other like evil consequence in the free flow of interstate commerce. Instead, the pleading bore clear internal indications of a personal grievance on the part of plaintiff based solely and exclusively upon the declination of the defendant Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company further to transact business with him as an outlet for its manufactured merchandise, with no evil consequence to the consuming public. * * *."

And Feddersen Motors, Inc. v. Ward, et al. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 10 Cir., 180 F. 2d 519, 522, citing Shotkin, supra, stated:

"* * * But injury to plaintiff alone is not enough upon which to predicate such an action. There must be harm to the general public in the form of undue restriction of interstate commerce. An appreciable part of such commerce must be the subject of the monopoly, restraint, or conspiracy. And a general allegation of the forming of such a combination or conspiracy with resulting injury to the public and to the plaintiff is not enough. While detail is not necessary, it is essential that the complaint allege facts from which it can be determined as a matter of law that by reason of intent, tendency, or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, the conspiracy was reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting the free flow of interstate commerce. * * *"

[Freedom of Press]

As to The Scranton Times and its reporter, George Clark, it will suffice to say that the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment precludes any claim by plaintiffs against them under the antitrust laws of the United States. As no details of what part either the "Times" or Clark played in the alleged conspiracy it would appear that reference is had to various news items of plaintiffs' numerous court appearances. There is nothing to indicate libel and even if so, certainly no violation of the antitrust laws.

[Civil Liability of Judge]

The case against Judge Murphy and the five employees of the United States Penitentiary is likewise easily disposed of. It is hornbook law that so long as a judge has jurisdiction he is not civilly liable to the parties in a law suit for his rulings in a case.

In Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall., 80 U. S. 335, 347, 20 L. Ed. 646, Justice Field speaking for the Court said:

"Nor can this exemption of the judges from civil liability be affected by the motives with which their judicial acts are performed. The purity of their motives cannot in this way be the subject of judicial inquiry. This was adjudged in the case of Floyd and Barker, reported by Coke, in 1608, where it was laid down that the judges of the realm could not be drawn in question for any supposed corruption impeaching the verity of their records, except before the king himself, and it was observed that if they were required to answer otherwise, it would 'tend to the scandal and subversion of all justice, and those who are the most sincere, would not be free from continual calumniations.'"

See also 48 C. J. S. Judges § 63; Allen v. Biggs, D. C. E. D. Pa., 62 F. Supp. 229; Paul Ginsburg v. Horace Stern and Patrick N. Bolsinger, 3 Cir., Slip Opinion, February 17, 1959.

In Cooper v. O'Connor et al., C. A. D. C., 99 F. 2d 135, 141, the court said:

"In several of the cases in which the rule of immunity has been applied the rationalization used has been that the particular defendant was a judicial officer, or was engaged in a judicial determination, or was so closely associated with the judicial process as to make necessary his protection from harassment in order to protect the judicial process. * * *

"* * * the rule as now declared in many cases has been applied, not only to officials judicial and quasi-judicial, but to executive officers generally, such as the Postmaster General, the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Members of the United States Parole Board, the Parole Executive, the Warden of a Federal penitentiary, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Chairman of the Tariff Commission, a building inspector, the United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Chief of Record and Pension Office of the War Department."

[Protecting Judicial Process]

Certainly the five employees of the penitentiary, defendants herein, were "so closely associated with the judicial process as to make necessary (their) protection from harassment in order to protect the judicial process," there being nothing in the complaint to indicate any other activities on their part aside from the performance of their duties as penitentiary employees.

[Action Dismissed]

Accordingly, the action should and will be dismissed.

[¶ 69,314] United States v. The Watchmakers of Switzerland Information Center, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 96-170. Filed March 11, 1959.

Case No. 1207 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act and Wilson Tariff Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Suit for Injunctive Relief—Interrogatories—Obtaining Evidence—Narrowing of Issues.—In a civil action charging antitrust violations in the manufacture, importation, and sale of watches in the United States, the Government was required to answer interrogatories which, it contended, required a compilation of data more easily available to the defendants and required evidentiary matters. The scope of the subject matter of the interrogatories was as broad as the subject matter of oral depositions. Thus, it was no ground for refusal to answer an interrogatory that the answer constituted evidentiary detail. The obtaining of evidence, or even information which might lead to evidence, is one of the functions of interrogatories. A further function is to obtain admissions and narrow the issues to be tried. The Government was also required to give further answers where those that it had given were incomplete, equivocal, contradictory, and unresponsive. In addition, a further answer was required where the Government's answer referred to other answers and other documents. Neither the court nor the defendants should be forced to pursue the laborious process of following cross-references to numerous other documents or answers which might not be completely relevant to the inquiry. The Government was not, however, required to state its "claims" in regard to facts of which it had no knowledge; forcing it to answer such interrogatories would be merely allowing the defendants to use interrogatories "as a device or stratagem to maneuver the adverse party into an unfavorable position."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.260.

For the plaintiff: Richard B. O'Donnell, Chief, New York Office, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice; and Mary Gardiner Jones, Elliott H. Feldman, and Elhanan C. Stone, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Goodwin, Danforth, Savage & Whitehead, New York, N. Y., by Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine (James V. Hayes, William F. Clare, Jr., Sidney P. Howell, Jr., and John A. Manning, of counsel), for Longines-Wittnauer Watch Company and Wittnauer et Cie, S. A.; and Robert Perret, New York, N. Y., by Solinger & Gordon (Eugene H. Gordon, of counsel), for Federation Suisse des Associations de Fabricants D'Horlogerie and Ebauches, S. A. Uhrenfabrick.

[Interrogatories]

CASHIN, District Judge [In full text]: This is a civil anti-trust action instituted on October 19, 1954. Plaintiff has already had extensive discovery. The present motions are by two groups of defendants, the first, Longines-Wittnauer Watch Company and Wittnauer et Cie, S. A. (hereafter collectively "Longines/Wittnauer"), and the second, Federation Suisse Des Associations De Fabricants D'Horlogerie and Ebauches, S. A. (hereafter collectively "F. H./Ebauches"). These motions attack the plaintiff's answers to the interrogatories as insufficient, for various reasons. The interrogatories of Longines/Wittnauer were served on September 6, 1957 and the interrogatories of F. H./Ebauches on September 20, 1957. The time to answer or move with respect to the interrogatories was extended until late in 1958, at which time plaintiff objected to certain categories of interrogatories. The objections were sustained by me, in their entirety, in an Opinion dated December 23, 1958. Although the answers attacked must, because of the various bases for the attack, be considered separately, certain fundamental principles as to the functions of interrogatories must first be reviewed before any separate discussion. Interrogatories to parties are covered in Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The scope of the subject matter of the interrogatories is as broad as the subject matter of oral depositions taken under Rule 26. Thus, it is no ground for objection to an interrogatory, or for refusal to answer an interrogatory, that the answer constitutes evidentiary detail. The obtaining of evidence, or even information which may lead to evidence, from an adverse party is one of the functions of interrogatories. A further function is to obtain admissions and narrow the issues to be tried. Of course, if "annoyance, expense, embarrassment or oppression" would be caused to a party served with interrogatories, a protective order, under the provisions of Rule 33 itself, or under the provisions of Rule 30(b) as incorporated in Rule 33, could be obtained. Viewed within the framework of the foregoing restatement of certain fundamental principles, I will now consider, seriatim, the answers attacked.

I.

Motion of F. H./Ebauches.

(The portion of the motion concerning interrogatories Nos. 39, 124, 123, 147 and 148 has been withdrawn.)

A.

Interrogatory No. 38 in subdivisions (d) and (e) asks, with reference to certain entities, the name and address of each person who participated in said act (any act performed by a party in adhering to the terms of the Collective Convention), the nature of such participation and the business entity or other body represented by such person. The plaintiff merely answers that "These defendants acted through their officers, employees and agents which included among others defendant American Watch Association, Inc. (herein called AWA)".

The only reason advanced by the plaintiff for failing to name the individuals requested was that such an answer would require a compilation of data much more easily available to the defendants than to the plaintiff, and thus not required in the plaintiff's answer. Under the fundamental principles heretofore reviewed, plaintiff's reason for not answering is not persuasive. Defendants are entitled to know upon what evidence the plaintiff intends to rely in order that they may prepare their defense. The information requested in Interrogatory No. 38 is the type of information which will facilitate the preparation of defenses. Accordingly, plaintiff is directed to supply those names and addresses, together with the names of the entities that those persons are claimed to have represented.

B.

[Enforcement of Regulations]

Interrogatories Nos. 116, 120 and 121 request details concerning the imposition of penalties for failure to abide by the provisions of various documents which regulate or prescribe conduct of individuals engaged in the watch industry, investigations concerning the imposition of penalties, and decisions made to enforce, or not to enforce, any ruling. The plaintiff defends the answers given by it on the ground that enforcement of regulations against specific persons, at specific times, or investigations or decisions concerning such enforcement, are evidentiary matters and that, in any event, plaintiff does not have knowledge of all specific instances. Once again, the reasons advanced in defense of plaintiff's answers are not persuasive. As pointed out heretofore, evidentiary matters are the proper subject of inquiries. Lack of knowledge of all instances of enforcement of violations is no excuse for not giving information as to the instances of which plaintiff does have knowledge. Of course, if plaintiff has absolutely no knowledge, its sworn statement to that effect will suffice. Accordingly, plaintiff will supply answers to Interrogatories Nos. 116, 120 and 121 to the extent of its knowledge, in accordance with the tenor of the interrogatories.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

C.

[Issues]

Interrogatories Nos. 123, 127, 141 and 145 all begin with the general query:—"State whether the violation or violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act or Section 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act alleged by plaintiff consist, in whole or in part, or are evidenced by:". Each of these interrogatories then lists numerous subdivisions. It is clear that defendants seek by these interrogatories to determine which of the matters covered in the subdivisions remain in issue in the case so that they may intelligently prepare a defense. I cannot perceive any reason why the plaintiff cannot, unequivocally, answer all of these interrogatories. Qualifications concerning the plaintiff's rights, as respect to the proprietary of the form of the interrogatories, are not now available. The plaintiff has already objected to the interrogatories and has received favorable action on those objections. Once again, it might be noted that plaintiff need answer these interrogatories, as all interrogatories, based upon its present knowledge. If it obtains further information which would necessitate any change in its answers, amended answers may be served. Plaintiff is directed to answer Interrogatories Nos. 123, 127, 141 and 145, unequivocally, without qualification, based upon its present knowledge.

[Evasiveness]

Interrogatory No. 124 requests information as to whether sales or resales of watches, component parts or repair parts, referred to in the answers to various subdivisions of Interrogatory No. 123, are on any level ranging from a sale from the manufacturer to the importer through a sale from the retailer to the consumer. The plaintiff's answer makes it clear that any sale or resale within the United States is included within the purview of its answer to Interrogatory No. 123. This is clearly a sweeping affirmative answer and thus cannot, in any way, be considered evasive. The answer cannot be successfully attacked on this ground.

[Alleged Contradictions]

Defendants further charge, however, that the answer to Interrogatory No. 124 contradicts the answers to Interrogatories Nos. 72 and 71. Interrogatory No. 72 reads as follows:—

> "Identify each agreement entered into by each defendant listed in paragraph 33 of the complaint and by each person referred to in the complaint as a co-conspirator by which such parties agreed that watches and component parts shall not be offered for sale in the United States subject to any guaranties other than those approved by FH by stating the date thereof and the parties thereto".

Interrogatory No. 71 reads as follows:—

> "Identify each agreement entered into by each defendant listed in paragraph 33 of the complaint and by each person referred to in the complaint as a co-conspirator by which such parties agreed that watches and component parts shall not be sold in the United States at prices lower than agreed upon as minimum prices by stating the date thereof and the parties thereto".

To both of these interrogatories plaintiff has unequivocally answered "None". However, in its answer to Interrogatory No. 124 plaintiff has stated the following:—

> "Plaintiff alleges in its complaint that defendants have agreed that they will not guarantee any watch sold by them under any but the agreed upon conditions and have also agreed that no one else shall be permitted to offer for sale or sell Swiss watches under guarantee conditions different from those agreed upon by the defendants".
> "Plaintiff alleges in its complaint that defendants have agreed to establish minimum sales prices for Swiss watches . . . from United States importers to other persons in the United States principally retail jewelers and from retailers to consumers".

Plaintiff argues that the charged contradictions are not real but only apparent. To support this conclusion the plaintiff points to its footnote to its answer to Interrogatory No. 9, which reads as follows:—

> "Counsel for defendants FH and Ebauches advised plaintiff that its term 'agreement' as used throughout its interrogatories is intended to refer only to formal contracts either written or oral. Plaintiff's replies to defendants' interrogatories herein are responsive to this definition of the term 'agreement'."

and states, in its affidavit in opposition, that—

> "When the plaintiff uses the word 'agreements' in its answer, however, the word carries a much broader meaning and evidence of a formal contract to fix prices need not be introduced to prove the offenses alleged."

I must confess that I do not understand exactly what is connoted by the two uses of the term "agreement". Accordingly, I direct that a further answer be given to Interrogatory No. 124 in which the distinction between the definitions of the word "agreement" as used in the interrogatories, and as used in the answer, is clarified.

E.

[Incomplete Answers]

Interrogatories Nos. 143 and 144 ask information concerning the agreements or meetings or oral discussions with respect to each subdivision of Interrogatory No. 141 to which plaintiff gave an affirmative reply. As stated under Subdivision "C" of this Opinion, plaintiff has not yet given unequivocal answers to Interrogatory No. 141. Thus, the answers to Interrogatories Nos. 143 and 144, being based upon an insufficient answer to Interrogatory No. 141, must necessarily be incomplete. The giving of unequivocal answers to Interrogatory No. 141 would, perhaps, enable plaintiff to give further answers to Interrogatories Nos. 143 and 144. However, even that portion of the answers to Interrogatories Nos. 143 and 144 which was given is attacked by defendants on the ground that the answer merely refers to the answer to other interrogatories and to a portion of the Statement of Plaintiff's Claims. I have attempted, by following the references given in the answers to Interrogatories Nos. 143 and 144, to ascertain whether such references do give adequate answers. Possibly extended efforts on my part would enable me to spell out such complete answers. I do not, however, believe that either I, or the defendants, should be forced to pursue this laborious process. Plaintiff has indicated in its answer to Interrogatory No. 126 that it can efficiently answer a similar type of interrogatory in detail with no cross-references. The plaintiff is, therefore, directed to serve a further answer to Interrogatories Nos. 143 and 144, which will enable defendants to obtain the information requested without referring to numerous other documents or answers which may or may not be completely relevant to the inquiry.

F.

[Equivocal Answer]

Interrogatory No. 139 requests information concerning any "understanding between the parties" referred to in the Collective Convention. The plaintiff's answer to the interrogatory is, on its face, equivocal. However, an analysis of the answer indicates that there is no "understanding between the parties" except the Convention itself. The plaintiff's affidavit in opposition to the motion agrees with this analysis. In order that no misunderstanding might later result, it is directed that plaintiff serve a further answer to Interrogatory No. 139 unequivocally stating that there is no "understanding between the parties" except for the Convention.

II.

Motion of Longines/Wittnauer

A.

[Jurisdiction]

Interrogatory No. 1 requests plaintiff to state facts upon which personal jurisdiction over Wittnauer et Cie, S. A. (hereafter "Wittnauer") is based. Defendant seeks to strike the answer as unresponsive and conclusory and seeks the compelling of a responsive and detailed answer. A prior motion to dismiss the complaint as to Wittnauer, addressed to Judge Walsh, has been denied on the basis of affidavits. However, the denial was without prejudice to renewing the motion at the trial. Thus, the issue of lack of jurisdiction over the person of Wittnauer is still in the case. Plaintiff claims that it has, in its answer, given all facts within its knowledge. On the papers before me I cannot state that this assertion is incorrect. Accordingly, the answer will not be stricken. The plaintiff's answer to Subsection c to Interrogatory No. 1, which subsection, generally, requests any facts relied on by plaintiff to support personal jurisdiction over Wittnauer, is as follows:

> "Facts stated in Section I, 3B of Statement of Plaintiff's Claims, in answer to interrogatories herein respecting defendants' liability and in all the papers filed in connection with Wittnauer's Motion to Dismiss referred to above."

The remarks made under I, E of this Opinion are apposite here. Accordingly, the plaintiff is directed to serve a further answer to Interrogatory No. 1 c, which will enable defendant Wittnauer to obtain the information requested without referring to numerous other documents or answers which may or may not be completely relevant to the inquiry.

B.

[Lack of Knowledge]

Defendants Longines/Wittnauer move to strike, as unresponsive, much of plaintiff's answers to Interrogatories Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 25, 27 and 43 because plaintiff generally denies knowledge of the facts inquired into. Defendants wish further answers to be served wherein plaintiff will state what it "claims" the facts to be irrespective of its knowledge or lack of knowledge concerning those facts. While I consider a function of interrogatories to be the narrowing of the issues, I do not believe that issues should be narrowed by forcing a party to answer, under oath, as to facts of which it has no knowledge. Plaintiff, of course, will be precluded at the trial of the action from proving any facts of which it presently asserts it has no knowledge, absent a showing that it could not reasonably have had knowledge of the facts at this time. Forcing the plaintiff to such a position, based upon facts of which it has no knowledge, would be merely allowing defendants to use interrogatories "as a device or a stratagem to maneuver the adverse party into an unfavorable tactical position." (Aktiebolaget Vargos v. Clark (D. C. D. C. 1949) 8 F. R. D. 635).

The answers to Interrogatories Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 25, 27 and 43 will stand.

C.

[Responsiveness of Answers]

Defendants Longines/Wittnauer attack the answers to Interrogatories Nos. 19, 21, 24, 27, 34, 36 and 41 on the ground that no answers at all, or unresponsive answers have been made to part of those interrogatories. The answers attacked will be considered separately below:

(1) Defendants have requested in a portion of Interrogatory No. 19 that plaintiff specify each price established for products sold by Longines or Wittnauer during the period covered by the complaint. The plaintiff contends that its answer denies any knowledge whatsoever. A reading of the answer shows that there is possible ground for more than one interpretation of the plaintiff's answer. This follows because specific reference is made to the fact that plaintiff has no knowledge of "date of each price set." Thus, it might be argued that plaintiff knows the prices set but not the date, or even that plaintiff knows the prices and dates in many instances but not in all. A further answer is, therefore, directed which will either state beyond peradventure of doubt the fact that plaintiff has no knowledge of any prices set at any date or will set out specifically the prices and dates presently known to plaintiff.

Defendants Longines/Wittnauer also request that a portion of the answer of plaintiff to Interrogatory No. 19 appearing on page 12 be stricken as devoid of any of the facts called for by the interrogatory, and as argumentative in nature. Plaintiff merely states that the material contained on page 12 of its answer is responsive. I have examined the interrogatory and the answer and find that neither party's contention is wholly correct. Thus, the question in the interrogatory asks for any acts in which Longines or Wittnauer participated in establishing prices. Subsection 2 of the answer refers to the enactment of regulations by F. H., on behalf of Wittnauer, binding on Wittnauer and Longines, as enumerated in Section I, 5B of the Statement of Plaintiff's Claims. This section of the Statement of Plaintiff's Claims lists numerous documents by number and date. Thus, a portion of the answer is responsive. However, Subsection 3 of the answer merely refers to Section I, 3B(6)(a) of the Statement of Plaintiff's Claims. That section is quoted, in full, as follows:

"American importers of Swiss watches shall refrain from soliciting or accepting any reduction from the cost price of the watch fixed in Switzerland."

Clearly, there is no detail of fact contained in this answer. I will not further review the remaining portions of the answer. I merely hold that the answer, as it stands, shall be stricken and direct that the plaintiff serve a further answer either setting forth specific facts or denying knowledge.

(2) The portion of Interrogatory No. 21, the answer to which is attacked, requests details as to activities of Longines or Wittnauer in recommending or participating in blacklisting or boycotting violators. As in the answer to Interrogatory No. 19, there appears doubt from plaintiff's answer as to whether it is stating that Longines' or Wittnauer's participation is only through the activities of F. H., whether plaintiff knows only some but not all specific instances of blacklisting and boycotting, or whether plaintiff has no knowledge whatsoever of specific instances participated in by Longines or Wittnauer. In view of this doubt I will strike the portion of the answer attacked, and direct that the plaintiff serve a further answer setting out, in detail, all instances of blacklisting or boycotting known to it, with names, dates and places, and setting out whether the participation of Longines or Wittnauer was based upon their own acts or the vicarious acts of F. H. Similarly, if any blacklisting or boycotting was, to the knowledge of plaintiff, initiated on the recommendation of Longines or Wittnauer, all details known should be specifically stated. Of course, a lack of knowledge of any or all instances of blacklisting, boycotting or recommendations may be set forth. However, a statement of such lack of knowledge should be couched in terms which will leave no doubt as to precisely what knowledge is being denied.

(3) Interrogatory No. 24 refers to Paragraph 29(a) of the complaint. Paragraph 29(a) of the complaint charges an agreement between defendant Benrus and coconspirator Super-holding that Benrus would abandon manufacture of watches and component parts within the United States and liquidate its plant so that no other manufacturer would be able to continue the former activities of Benrus. The interrogatory, insofar as the answer is attacked, requests information as to "every act of Longines or Wittnauer claimed to show such participation." Plaintiff's answer to this clearly indicates that the only participation of Longines or Wittnauer in the acts set forth in Paragraph 29(a) of the complaint are vicarious acts because of the fact that Wittnauer is a signatory to the Collective Convention and a member of F. H. Interpreted in this manner the answer is responsive and will stand.

(4) Interrogatory No. 27 requests information as to whether plaintiff claims that Longines participated in "negotiating or performing" specified agreements. The answer states: "Plaintiff does not claim that Longines or Wittnauer participated in the negotiation of any agreements to which they or their subsidiaries are not signatories." The only ground for attack on this answer by defendants is that it mentions only "negotiation" and is silent as to "performance." Plaintiff, in its affidavit in opposition, states that the omission of the words "or performance" after the word "negotiation" in its answer was inadvertent. Accordingly, the plaintiff is directed to further answer Interrogatory No. 27 with the words "or performance" properly inserted.

(5) Interrogatory No. 34 requests detailed information concerning the use by Longines, in connection with sales of watches and component parts, of only guaranties which were approved by F. H. One detail requested is: "The terms of every such guarantee subject to which Longines was sold (watches and component parts)." In its affidavit in opposition plaintiff admits that it has made no such specification; and admits that it has not denied knowledge with which to answer the interrogatory, but states that the giving of the specifications is not necessary. I cannot comprehend the position of the plaintiff in this regard. In part of the answer to Interrogatory No. 34 it is stated that the plaintiff claims that Longines "sold watches in the United States under such guarantee terms." In its affidavit in opposition to the motion plaintiff states that it "has no objection to stating that it has no knowledge as to any individual sale of watches by Longines under the terms of the guarantee used pursuant to F. H. regulations." To me, these statements seem utterly contradictory.

Under these circumstances, I am unable to give any precise direction as to the answering of the interrogatory. I will, therefore, order the answer stricken and direct plaintiff to give all information it has with respect to the subject matter covered by Interrogatory No. 34.

(6) The portion of Interrogatory No. 36, the answer to which is attacked, is as follows:

> "36. Does the term 'all persons' as used in Paragraph 34 of the Complaint refer to persons other than the named defendants and other co-conspirators who entered into the agreement alleged therein? If so, who were such other persons?"

Plaintiff's answer to that portion is "'all persons' refers to all persons selling watches imported from Switzerland in the United States. Plaintiff does not know the names of all such persons." Paragraph 34 of the complaint charges that the defendants, and named co-conspirators, agreed that all persons who did not adhere to established prices would be reported to defendants F. H. and Ebauches for possible reprisal action. If plaintiff were to be forced to answer the request with reference to "all persons" literally, it would merely give the defendants a catalogue of all dealers and importers of Swiss watches. While, perhaps, plaintiff should have objected to this portion of the interrogatory, it would seem clear that its failure to do so was mere oversight. This oversight will be overlooked.

The balance of plaintiff's answer to Interrogatory No. 36 lists the "persons" who were reported to F. H. and Ebauches by Longines/Wittnauer for possible reprisal action, the dates of the reports, the substance of the reports, and the action taken where known. Defendants thus have all information in the possession of plaintiff necessary to prepare their defense. No further answer to the interrogatory is necessary. The alternative relief requested by defendants, namely, that plaintiff be ordered to give the names of the persons on whom it will rely as witnesses, or from whom it has derived evidence, is correctly characterized by plaintiff as an attempt to propound a supplemental interrogatory under the guise of objecting to plaintiff's answer. This alternative relief is also denied.

(7) Interrogatory No. 41, insofar as it is attacked, seeks details with regard to Longines' refusal to deal with entities in the United States who were "blacklisted" in accordance with the alleged conspiracy. Plaintiff admits that its answer, as it stands, is unresponsive to the portion of the interrogatory which is the basis of the attack. However, in its affidavit in opposition, it states that it has no knowledge of any of the details alleged. Such a statement under oath, in a further answer, will, of course, suffice.

D.

[Relief Sought]

The answers attacked by this branch of Longines/Wittnauer's motion, namely, the answers to Interrogatories Nos. 48, 52 and 54, have to do with the relief sought by plaintiff. I find, however, that the answers to the interrogatories are, at this time, sufficient. The precise relief to be granted, in the event a trial of the action shows violation of the law, will await further proceedings. Thus, no further answers to these interrogatories will be directed.

It is so ordered.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 58-891-F. Dated March 17, 1959.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Clayton Act, Section 2(a)—Charging Lower Prices to Consumer Than to Retailer—Non-Competing Purchasers—Effect on Competition.—Alleged sales of gasoline by a refiner to certain direct buying ultimate consumers at lower prices than it charged an operator of retail gasoline stations did not constitute a violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act because the alleged price differential did not actually affect competition. The ultimate consumers did not compete with the retailer, and they were not customers of the retailer. Also, there was no claim that competition between the plaintiff-retailer and other retailers was affected. Although there was potential competition between the refiner and the retailer as to those consumers who bought directly from the refiner, even that potential competition could not have actually been affected since the retailer could not successfully compete for those customers. Clearly, there would have been no discrimination if the refiner had sold to those ultimate consumers at the same price at which it sold to the retailer. Even then, however, the retailer could not compete for their business since, as a matter of practical economics, it would have to charge them more than it paid for the gasoline. Since the retailer could not compete with the refiner for those customers if there was no price differential, it would not be harmed by any further reductions in price which the refiner might make in the price it charged them. The refiner was under no obligation to sell to the retailer at a lower price than it charged to consumers who bought directly from it in order to enable the retailer to compete with it for the business of those customers.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.620, 3506.300, 3506.700.

Price Discrimination—Services or Facilities Furnished by Seller Under Clayton Act, Section 2(e)—Time of Payment—Extending Credit to Some Retailers and Denying Credit to Another—Legality.—A gasoline retailer's allegation that a refiner required it to pay for gasoline on a "c. o. d." basis while extending thirty days' credit to other retail sellers stated no claim for relief under Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act. The extension of credit is not one of the services or facilities which, under that section, must be accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms. Services or facilities are normally aids which are connected with the processing, handling, or resale of the commodity by the purchaser. The extension of credit is connected only with the original sale and not with any further handling or resale. In addition, the extension of credit involves problems not found in the furnishing of ordinary promotional aids. Some of those problems are illustrated by the fact that, in the instant case, the retailer owed the refiner a large sum of money at the time when credit was withdrawn from the retailer, and that the money was not paid until suit had been brought for its recovery. In those circumstances, the denial of credit was justifiable even if, under some circumstances, differentiation between customers as to credit terms might constitute a violation of Section 2(e). It would be absurd to say that the statute required the refiner to deny credit to all of its retail customers if it wished to protect itself by denying credit to the plaintiff.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3524.340, 3524.870.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Damages Recoverable for Antitrust Violations—Sufficiency of Proof of Damages—Alleged Price Discrimination—Speculative Damages.—A gasoline retailer's allegation that, if it could have bought gasoline from a refiner at the lower price allegedly paid by certain ultimate consumers, it would have increased its profits by the amount of that price differential, constituted a claim for damages that was entirely speculative. That claim assumed that the retailer could have continued to sell gasoline at the same price while paying less for it; however, such an eventuality was unlikely in view of the fact that it was in competition with other retail dealers who would have had to receive the benefit of such a lower price from the refiner, and who could have, therefore, lowered their retail prices. In any event, such a loss of profit afforded no basis for recovery since the alleged discrimination did not affect actual or potential competition.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.560.

Memorandum of Opinion
On Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment

[Price Discrimination]

FORD, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff brings this action under the provisions of 15 U. S. C. A. § 15 and 26 for damages and injunctive relief, alleging violations by defendant of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 13. Defendant moves for summary judgment on the basis of the pleadings and the depositions of the plaintiff's president and principal stockholder. The facts as set forth in these documents have not been controverted.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Parties]

Plaintiff operates two large retail gasoline stations in East Boston. It actually sells only to customers who bring their vehicles to one of its stations where gasoline is pumped into the tanks of the vehicles and has no facilities for delivering or selling off its premises. Defendant is a refiner and distributor of petroleum products. It operates no retail gasoline stations. It sells gasoline to customers who take delivery in their own tank trucks at defendant's refinery and also delivers in its own tank trucks to customers who have storage tanks and pumps on their own premises.

[Alleged Discriminatory Sales]

Counts 1 and 3 charge that defendant discriminated in price in violation of 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(a)[1] by selling to certain direct buying consumers at prices lower than it charged plaintiff. The consumers to whom sales were allegedly made at a lower price are all ultimate consumers, large industrial or commercial users who do not resell any of the gasoline they purchase. None of them has ever been a customer of plaintiff. Plaintiff has never tried to sell gasoline to them and does not have the facilities to deliver gasoline to their tanks as defendant actually does.

[Effect on Competition]

Assuming, as alleged, that defendant did sell to these ultimate consumers at a lower price than it sold to plaintiff, such a price differential would not constitute the discrimination in price forbidden by § 13(a) unless it affected competition. The competition affected could only be that between plaintiff and defendant. Admittedly these ultimate consumers who are alleged to have bought gasoline at a lower price are not in competition with plaintiff. There is no claim that competition between plaintiff and other retail gasoline dealers has been affected, since defendant's price to them was always the same as its price to plaintiff. There is a potential competition between plaintiff and defendant as to these ultimate consumers. Although plaintiff has never sold to them or tried to sell to them, and although admittedly he has lost no customer to defendant, nevertheless as ultimate consumers of gasoline they are possible future customers of plaintiff. It is only this potential competition which could possibly have been affected by any price differential offered to these ultimate consumers by defendant.

[Competition Between Distributor and Retailer]

However, even this potential competition could not actually be affected by the alleged price differential. Clearly there would be no discrimination if defendant sold to these ultimate consumers at the same price at which it sells to plaintiff. But even then plaintiff could not compete with defendant for their business for it would as a matter of practical economics have to charge them more than it paid defendant for the gasoline in order to cover its expenses of operation, to say nothing of making a profit on the transaction. If plaintiff cannot successfully compete with defendant for these customers when there is no price differential, it is not harmed by any further reduction which defendant may make in the price it charges to them. Jarrett v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,241], 131 F. 2d 674, 676; A. J. Goodman & Son, Inc. v. United Lacquer Mfg. Corporation [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,355], 81 F. Supp. 890, 893. Defendant is under no obligation to sell to plaintiff at a lower price than it charges to consumers who buy directly from it in order to enable plaintiff to compete with it for the business of those customers. But unless it does this, plaintiff will never be able to compete successfully with defendant, at least with respect to price.

[Damages]

In fact, the only claim made by plaintiff's president as to damages actually suffered is

[1] "§ 13. Discrimination in price services, or facilities—Price; selection of customers

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: . . ."

his statement that if plaintiff could have bought its gasoline at the lower price allegedly paid by other purchasers, it would have increased its profits by the amount of this price differential. This is, of course, entirely speculative. It assumes that plaintiff could have continued to sell gasoline at the same price while paying less for it, an unlikely eventuality in view of the fact that it was in competition with other retail dealers buying from defendant who would also have to receive the benefit of a lower price from defendant and could therefore lower their retail price. In any event, such a loss of profit would afford no basis for recovery unless it could be shown that it was due to a price discrimination affecting competition. It is clear that the only price differential alleged here has not actually affected competition and further as has been pointed out above, it could not have any effect on potential competition between plaintiff and defendant.

[Services and Facilities—Credit]

Count 2 alleges discrimination by defendant in violation of 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(e)[2] against plaintiff in favor of other purchasers of its gasoline in that defendant since June 1, 1957, has refused to sell to plaintiff, as it does to competing retail sellers of gasoline, on thirty days' credit and has placed plaintiff on a c. o. d. basis. This raises the question of whether the granting or withdrawing of credit is a service or facility with respect to which discrimination is forbidden by § 13(e). The services and facilities referred to are normally those aids connected with processing or handling or resale of the commodity by the purchaser. They include in particular various promotional and merchandising aids connected with resale of the commodity. The extension of credit is not ordinarily thought of as a service or facility of this type. It is connected only with the original sale of the product to a retailer such as plaintiff here and not with any further handling or resale. The extension of credit involves problems not found in the furnishing of ordinary promotional aids. It may involve difficult questions of business judgment as to the future willingness or ability of the customer to pay. It may entail a possibility of substantial financial loss to the creditor. It may require difficult decisions as to whether to risk financial loss by extending credit or losing a customer's business by denying it.

[Credit Difficulties]

The facts surrounding defendant's denial of credit to plaintiff in this case are illustrative of some of the difficulties involved. Defendant formerly extended credit to plaintiff on a 30-day basis. Plaintiff's monthly purchases amounted to $50,000 to $60,000. Beginning in 1956 plaintiff began to withhold large sums from its monthly payments on the claim that defendant owed it its legal expenses in connection with other litigation then pending between the parties. Although agreeing on April 1, 1957, to make payment, plaintiff failed to do so. On June 7, 1957, when credit was withdrawn, plaintiff owed defendant $103,045.75 and this sum was not finally paid until August 1957 after defendant had brought suit against plaintiff to recover this amount. Certainly in these circumstances defendant was clearly justified in refusing further credit to plaintiff. It would be absurd to say that § 13(e) would require it to deny credit to all its retailer customers if it wished to protect itself by denying further credit to plaintiff.

[Conclusion]

The conclusion must be that the extension of credit is not one of the services or facilities covered by § 13(e) and that Count 2 therefore fails to state any claim for relief under that section, and further that even if under any circumstances differentiation between customers as to credit terms might constitute a violation of § 13(e), a justifiable denial of credit such as that which occurred in this case would not be such a violation.

[Summary Judgment Allowed]

Defendant's motion for summary judgment is allowed.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1958. No. 76. Dated April 6, 1959.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief and Treble Damages—Necessary Allegations—Public Injury—Group Boycott Allegations Sufficient to Establish Public Injury.—A local retailer's allegations that interstate manufacturers and distributors of household appliances conspired among themselves and with a local chain of department stores not to sell to the retailer or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms, and that the local chain of department stores used its "monopolistic" buying power to bring about the conspiracy, showed a group boycott, one type of trade restraint and public harm the Sherman Act forbids; therefore, the dismissal, by summary judgment, of the retailer's action on the ground that public injury was not alleged or shown was reversed.

There are certain agreements whose validity under the Sherman Act depends upon surrounding circumstances; however, there are classes of restraints which from their "nature or character" are unduly restrictive and hence forbidden by the Act. As to such classes of restraints, Congress has determined its own criteria of public harm, and it is not for the courts to decide whether in an individual case injury has actually occurred. Group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category. They cannot be saved by allegations that they are reasonable in the specific circumstances, nor by a failure to show that they "fixed or regulated prices, parcelled out or limited production, or brought about a deterioration in quality." The alleged boycott interferes with the natural flow of interstate commerce; it clearly has, by its "nature and character," a "monopolistic tendency." "As such it is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups."

[Private Antitrust Charges]

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text].

Klor's, Inc., operates a retail store on Mission Street, San Francisco, California; Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., a chain of department stores, operates one of its stores next door. The two stores compete in the sale of radios, television sets, refrigerators and other household appliances. Claiming that Broadway-Hale and 10 national manufacturers and their distributors have conspired to restrain and monopolize commerce in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, Klor's brought this action for treble damages and injunction in the United States District Court.[1]

In support of its claim Klor's made the following allegations: George Klor started an appliance store some years before 1952 and has operated it ever since either individually or as Klor's, Inc. Klor's is as well equipped as Broadway-Hale to handle all brands of appliances. Nevertheless, manufacturers and distributors of such well-known brands as General Electric, RCA, Admiral, Zenith, Emerson and others[2] have conspired among themselves and with Broadway-Hale either not to sell to Klor's or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms. Broadway-Hale has used its "monopolistic" buying power to bring about this situation. The business of manufacturing, distributing and selling household appliances is in interstate commerce. The concerted refusal to deal with Klor's has seriously handicapped its ability to compete and has already caused it a great loss of profits, goodwill, reputation and prestige.

[Lower Court Rulings]

The defendants did not dispute these allegations, but sought summary judgment and dismissal of the complaint for failure to state a cause of action. They submitted unchallenged affidavits which showed that there were hundreds of other household appliance retailers, some within a few blocks of Klor's who sold many competing brands of appliances, including those the defendants refused to sell to Klor's. From the allegations of the complaint, and from the affidavits supporting the motion for summary judgment, the District Court concluded that the controversy was a "purely private quarrel" between Klor's and Broadway-Hale, which did not amount to a "public wrong proscribed by the [Sherman] Act." On this ground the complaint was dismissed and summary judgment was entered for the defendants. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the summary judgment. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,007] 255 F. 2d 214. It stated that "a violation of the Sherman Act requires conduct of defendants by which the public is or conceivably may be ultimately injured." 255 F. 2d, at 233. It held that here the required public injury was missing since "there was no charge or proof that by any act of defendants the price, quantity, or quality offered the public was affected, nor that there was any intent or purpose to effect a change in, or an influence on, prices, quantity, or quality . . . ." Id., at 230. The holding, if correct, means that unless the opportunities for customers to buy in a competitive market are reduced, a group of powerful businessmen may act in concert to deprive a single merchant, like Klor, of the goods he needs to compete effectively. We granted certiorari to consider this important question in the administration of the Sherman Act. 358 U. S. 809.

[Scope of Sherman Act]

We think Klor's allegations clearly show one type of trade restraint and public harm the Sherman Act forbids, and that defendants' affidavits provide no defense to the charges. Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes illegal any contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade, and § 2 forbids any person or combination from monopolizing or attempting to monopolize any part of interstate commerce. In the landmark case of Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, this Court read § 1 to prohibit those classes of contracts or acts which the common law had deemed to be undue restraints of trade and those which new times and economic conditions would make unreasonable. Id., at 59-60. The Court construed § 2 as making "the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section, that is, restraints of trade, by any attempt to monopolize, or monopolization thereof . . . ." Id.,

[1] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . . ." Section 2 of the Act reads, "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ." Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, states, "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained. . . ."

[2] The appliance manufacturers named in the complaint are: Admiral Corp., Emerson Radio and Phonograph Corp., General Electric Co., Olympic Radio and Television, Inc., Philco Corp., Rheem Manufacturing Co., Radio Corp. of America, Tappan Stove Co., Whirlpool Corp., Zenith Radio Corp.

at 61. The effect of both sections, the Court said, was to adopt the common-law proscription of all "contracts or acts which it was considered had a monopolistic tendency . . ." and which interfered with the "natural flow" of an appreciable amount of interstate commerce. Id., at 57, 61; Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 609. The Court recognized that there were some agreements whose validity depended on the surrounding circumstances. It emphasized, however, that there were classes of restraints which from their "nature or character" were unduly restrictive, and hence forbidden by both the common law and the statute. 221 U. S., at 58, 65.[3] As to these classes of restraints, the Court noted, Congress had determined its own criteria of public harm and it was not for the courts to decide whether in an individual case injury had actually occurred. Id., at 63-68.[4]

[Group Boycotts]

Group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category.[5] They have not been saved by allegations that they were reasonable in the specific circumstances, nor by a failure to show that they "fixed or regulated prices, parcelled out or limited production, or brought about a deterioration in quality." Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,101], 312 U. S. 457, 466, 467-468. Cf. United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392. Even when they operated to lower prices or temporarily to stimulate competition they were banned. For, as this Court said in Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211, 213, "such agreements, no less than those to fix minimum prices, cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment." Cf. United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 542.

["Monopolistic Tendency"]

Plainly the allegations of this complaint disclose such a boycott. This is not a case of a single trader refusing to deal with another,[6] nor even of a manufacturer and a dealer agreeing to an exclusive distributorship. Alleged in this complaint is a wide combination consisting of manufacturers, distributors and a retailer. This combination takes from Klor's its freedom to buy appliances in an open competitive market and drives it out of business as a dealer in the defendants' products. It deprives the manufacturers and distributors of their freedom to sell to Klor's at the same prices and conditions made available to Broadway-Hale, and in some instances forbids them from selling to it on any terms whatsoever. It interferes with the natural flow of interstate commerce. It clearly has, by its "nature" and "character," a "monopolistic tendency." As such it is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy.[7] Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups. In recognition of this fact the Sherman Act has consistently been read to forbid all contracts and combinations "which 'tend to create a monopoly,'" whether "the tendency is a creeping one"

[3] See also United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 179, where the Court noted that the statute forbade all "acts or contracts or agreements or combinations . . . which, either because of their inherent nature or effect or because of the evident purpose of the acts, etc., injuriously restrained trade . . . ."

In this regard the Sherman Act should be contrasted with § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45(b), which requires that the Commission find "that a proceeding by it . . . would be to the interest of the public" before it issues a complaint for unfair competition. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed and the cause is remanded to the District Court for trial.

Reversed.

[Concurring Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, believing that the allegations of the complaint are sufficient to entitle the petitioner to go to trial, and that the matters set forth in respondents' affidavits are not necessarily sufficient to constitute a defense irrespective of what the petitioner may be able to prove at the trial, concurs in the result.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 57-392-S. Dated January 30, 1958.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—When Recovery Under Antitrust Laws May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations—Tolling of Period of Limitation—Pendency of Government Action.—A complaint filed in April, 1957, by an individual who had manufactured shoe machinery from 1938 to 1946 stated no cause of action against a manufacturer of shoe machinery who allegedly monopolized that business. Competition between the individual and the manufacturer ceased in 1946; therefore, with respect to the individual's activities in the manufacturing and marketing of shoe machinery, the manufacturer could not have invaded his interests after that time. Section 4B of the Clayton Act provides for a four-year statute of limitation for any suit brought to enforce a cause of action under the antitrust laws. Therefore, the complaint could not support a recovery based on any cause of action which arose prior to April, 1953. Hence, any cause of action which the individual might have had as a result of the alleged unlawful acts of the manufacturer during the period 1938 to 1946 was barred by the statute of limitations. Furthermore, that statute was not tolled, under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, by the pendency of a Government action against the manufacturer. The Government's case was terminated, at the latest, in June, 1954. The present action, which was brought well over a year later, was therefore barred.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100, 9010.275.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Injury to Plaintiff—Direct or Incidental Injury.—An individual engaged in the business of shoe manufacturing "research" failed to state a cause of action against a manufacturer who allegedly monopolized the manufacture of shoe machinery. It is a fundamental requirement of any claim brought under the antitrust laws that the plaintiff be an actual going business and that the injury be a direct, and not incidental, result of the defendant's unlawful acts. Since the plaintiff's business involved only the sale of information, he could not have possibly been directly injured by the manufacturer's alleged monopolization of the shoe machinery business.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275.

¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469, in reaching its conclusion. While some language in that case can be read as supporting the position that no restraint on trade is prohibited by § 1 of the Sherman Act unless it has or is intended to have an effect on market prices, such statements must be considered in the light of the fact that the defendant in that case was a labor union. The Court in Apex recognized that the Act is aimed primarily at combinations having commercial objectives and is applied only to a very limited extent to organizations, like labor unions, which normally have other objectives. See United States v. Hutcheson [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,091], 312 U. S. 219; Allen Bradley Co. v. Local 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797. Moreover, cases subsequent to Apex have made clear that an effect on prices is not essential to a Sherman Act violation. See, e. g., Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,101], 312 U. S. 457, 466.

Monopolies—Practices as Evidence of Monopolization—Refusal to Deal—Manufacturer's "Attitude" Toward Plaintiff.—A manufacturer of shoe machinery did not violate the antitrust laws by (1) refusing to furnish an individual engaged in the business of shoe machinery "research" with its price lists, (2) dealing directly with its customers rather than through that individual, and (3) maintaining its "attitude" toward that individual. None of those acts appeared to be illegal under the Sherman Act. Denial of a generally available price list is not an unlawful means of monopolization, and there is no language in the Sherman Act which prohibits a manufacturer from dealing directly with a customer. In addition, no law subjects a corporation to damages for its "attitude" toward a particular person.

[Motion]

SWEENEY, Chief Judge [In full text]: There is before the court the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The basis of the motion is that the action is barred by the Statute of Limitations, 15 U. S. C. § 15b, and also that the plaintiff has failed to allege any unlawful acts on the part of the defendant which were in furtherance of the defendant's alleged monopoly and which injured the plaintiff.

[Monopoly Charged]

The original complaint made allegations to the effect that the plaintiff was a competitor of the defendant and that he was damaged by the defendant's alleged monopoly. However, upon motion duly filed by the defendant, the plaintiff was compelled to set up a more definite statement and, in that statement, he alleges that he had been engaged in the development, design, manufacturing and marketing of shoe machinery, in which business he was in direct competition with the defendant, from 1938 to 1946. After 1946, the plaintiff limited his activities to the business of "research of shoe machinery and shoe manufacturing, which embodies technical analysis of all types of shoe machinery, shoe materials, shoe designs, shoe processes and construction of shoes." The plaintiff publishes the results of this research in bulletin form, in correspondence with his clients, and in trade magazines. In addition to the above, the plaintiff also acted as a consultant to shoe manufacturers, shoe machinery manufacturers, and engineering firms. Thus, it can be seen that the plaintiff was in open competition with the defendant and vice-versa up to 1946, but that direct competition ceased at that time.

[Statute of Limitations]

Section 15b of Title 15 provides for a four-year Statute of Limitations for any suit brought to enforce a cause of action under Section 15. This complaint was filed on April 18, 1957 and cannot, therefore, support a recovery based on any cause of action which arose prior to April 18, 1953. With respect to the plaintiff's activities in the manufacturing and marketing of shoe machinery, it is apparent that the defendants could not have invaded his interest after 1946. Clearly, then, any cause of action which the plaintiff may have as a result of alleged unlawful acts of the defendant during the period 1938-1946, arose prior to April 18, 1953 and are consequently barred by the Statute of Limitations.

[Tolling of Statute]

It might be argued that the Statute of Limitations was tolled by Section 16(b) of Title 15. This contention is entirely without merit, since the government's case against this defendant, United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F. Supp. 295 [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,436], aff'd. 347 U. S. 521 [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,755], was terminated at the latest on June 23, 1954, and this action was not begun until well over a year later.

[Injury to Plaintiff]

As to the period subsequent to 1946, I find and rule that the complaint does not state a cause of action under the anti-trust laws. It is a fundamental requirement of any claim brought pursuant to § 15 of Title 15 that the plaintiff be in an actual going business and that the injury be a direct, not incidental, result of the defendant's unlawful acts. Peller v. International Boxing Club, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,202], 227 F. 2d 593, Image and Sound Service Corp. v. Altec Service Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,581], 148 F. Supp. 237, Conference of Studio Unions v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,953], 193 F. 2d 51. Since the plaintiff's business now involves only the sale of information, he could not possibly have been directly injured by the defendant's alleged monopolization in the manufacture of shoe machinery.

[Refusal to Deal]

In addition, the complaint does not set forth any unlawful acts of the defendant. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant violated the anti-trust laws in that it refused to furnish the plaintiff with its price lists, that it insisted on dealing with its customers directly rather than through the plaintiff, and by its attitude toward the plaintiff. None of these acts appear to be illegal under the Sherman Act. Denial of a generally available price list is not an unlawful means of monopolization, and there is no language in the Sherman Act which prohibits a manufacturer from dealing directly with a customer, while no law has been devised yet which subjects a corporation to damages for its attitude toward a particular person.

[Judgment on Pleadings]

From the foregoing I find and rule that the motion for judgment on the pleadings must be allowed.

[¶ 69,318] Sandee Manufacturing Co. v. Rohm & Haas Company.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Excluding Competitors by Supply Control, Price Fixing, and "Price Squeeze".—A manufacturer of chemical products which allegedly prevented a producer of plastic materials from competing in the manufacture of "acrylic sheet" was denied a motion to strike from a complaint references to the basic ingredient used in making that product. The manufacturer contended that references to the basic ingredient were immaterial since the producer did not claim to have ever dealt in it. That contention, however, failed to give credit to the structure of the producer's allegation. The complaint charged that the manufacturer, which occupied 70 per cent of the domestic market in that basic ingredient, accounted for the other 30 per cent by price fixing agreements with all other manufacturers, both domestic and foreign. It was alleged that, as a result of the manufacturer's all but complete actual control of the field, it kept the price of its "acrylic sheet" at a low level while keeping the price at which it sold the basic ingredient used in making the product at a high level, thus making it impossible for others to compete. The producer claimed that it was forced out of competition in the "acrylic sheet" field by the manufacturer's device of charging itself less for the basic ingredient than it charged other potential manufacturers of "acrylic sheet." That allegation was one of the central links in the structure of the producer's allegations, and the practice, if established, stood clearly condemned.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181, 2011.247; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.640, 2610.800.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Pretrial Procedures—Production of Evidence—Interrogatories—Statute of Limitations—Period of Plaintiff's Competitive Activities—Confidential Information.—In an action charging a manufacturer of "acrylic sheet" with monopolizing the field and excluding a competitor, interrogatories seeking information beyond (1) the two-year time period of the applicable statute of limitations, and (2) the time when the competitor began production of the product, were not objectionable. In suits seeking to establish a defendant's monopoly position, discovery is not limited to such time periods. Further, interrogatories concerning 25 other products, which the manufacturer's answer contended were in competition with each other and the competitive product, could not be attacked since they were directly relevant to the issues raised by the pleadings. Also, interrogatories dealing with the basic ingredient used in making the competitive product were relevant to the plaintiff's claim that the manufacturer was preventing competition by keeping prices of the basic ingredient high and employing the device of charging itself less for that ingredient, in making the competitive product, than it was charging other purchasers. Interrogatories allegedly inquiring into confidential cost information and internal bookkeeping were also relevant to that charge. As to the claim that certain interrogatories sought confidential manufacturing processes, the court noted that the interrogatories were confined to information regarding the ingredients of the products without directly calling for the proportions in which the ingredients were used in manufacturing any product. There is no absolute privilege protecting such information; if otherwise relevant to the issues, it is not protected from disclosure.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Memorandum and Order

[Treble Damage Action]

CAMPBELL, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff is an Illinois corporation engaged in the extrusion of plastic materials which it sells in interstate commerce. Defendant is a Delaware corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of various chemical products, including methyl methacrylate monomer from which it produces cast sheet and molding powder.

The complaint states that the action is based on Sections 1, 2, 7, and 8, of the Sherman Act and Sections 1, 4, 12, and 16, of the Clayton Act. Plaintiff seeks treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Defendant has filed a motion to strike certain portions of the complaint and an objection to certain interrogatories propounded to it by plaintiff. I shall first consider defendant's motion to strike.

[Alleged Exclusion of Competitor]

Briefly, the complaint states that plaintiff is in competition with defendant in the sale of acrylic sheet; that as a result of defendant's violation of the sections of the Sherman and Clayton Acts relied on, plaintiff has been prevented from competing with defendant in the sale of acrylic sheet from on or about November 15, 1953, to and including the date when this complaint was filed which is November 1, 1955; that the acrylic sheet which plaintiff was thus prevented from manufacturing and selling in competition with defendant's sheet, is sheet extruded from a powder, known as acrylic molding powder, which in turn is manufactured from a liquid, known as methyl methacrylate monomer; that the acrylic sheet which defendant is manufacturing and selling and with which competition by plaintiff's extruded sheet has been prevented, is sheet cast directly from the methyl methacrylate monomer. The complaint alleges that since 1950 defendant has produced and sold approximately 70% of all the methyl methacrylate monomer sold in the United States, that E. I. DuPont deNemours & Co. has produced and sold approximately the remaining 30% thereof, and that Rohm & Haas Gesellschaft mit beschraenkter Haftung, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of West Germany, and Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Great Britain, are the only other producers and sellers of methyl methacrylate monomer but that little if any methyl methacrylate monomer is imported into the United States. The complaint further alleges that prior to June 1, 1953, defendant has manufactured and sold approximately 80% of all the acrylic cast sheet produced in the United States, and that E. I. DuPont deNemours & Co. has produced and sold approximately the remaining 20% thereof; that after June 1, 1953, defendant has manufactured and sold approximately 99% of all the acrylic cast sheet produced in the United States and that little or no acrylic cast sheet is imported from without the United States. The complaint further alleges that since 1950 defendant has manufactured and sold approximately 75% of all of the acrylic molding powder produced and sold in the United States, and that E. I. DuPont de-Nemours & Co. has manufactured and sold approximately the remaining 25% of such molding powder. Little or no acrylic molding powder is imported from without the United States.

[Alleged Unlawful Acts]

Defendant's acts, upon which plaintiff relies as violations of the cited provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, are alleged to be as follows:

(1) That defendant has sought to monopolize the production, manufacture and sale within the United States, of the methyl methacrylate monomer, the cast acrylic sheet and the acrylic molding powder, in particular:

(2) That despite a reduction in the cost of the principal ingredients, the price at which methyl methacrylate monomer is sold by defendant has not been correspondingly reduced.

(3) That defendant has entered into an agreement with E. I. DuPont de-Nemours & Co., Rohm & Haas Gesellschaft mit beschraenkter Haftung and Imperial Chemicals Industry Ltd., to fix and maintain in the United States and in various parts of the world, the price of methyl methacrylate monomer at a level which is disproportionate to the reduced cost of the principal ingredients.

(4) That defendant has kept and is keeping the price of acrylic molding powder at a level which does not reflect the reduction in cost of the principal ingredients used in the production of methyl methacrylate monomer and thus of the powder itself.

(5) That defendant has entered into an agreement with E. I. DuPont de-Nemours & Co. to keep the price of the acrylic molding powder high disproportionately to the reduced cost of the principal ingredients.

(6) That defendant charges itself for the methyl methacrylate monomer used in its production of cast acrylic sheet a price far below the price at which it is willing to sell such monomer to any purchaser.

(7) That defendant charges itself for the methyl methacrylate monomer used in its production of acrylic molding powder a price far below the price at which it is willing to sell such monomer to any purchaser.

[Production Control]

The gist of plaintiff's complaint, therefore, is that as a result of defendant's all but complete alleged actual control of the production, manufacture and sale of methyl methacrylate monomer, cast acrylic sheet and acrylic molding powder, and its alleged complete control of the field through agreements with other producers, manufacturers and sellers of these materials and products, it has been able and has in fact kept the price of cast acrylic sheet low and the price at which it sells the basic ingredient, the monomer, and the other product, the powder, high thus making it impossible for others (a) to compete in the manufacture and sale of cast acrylic sheet and (b) to compete in the manufacture and sale of acrylic molding powder.

Plaintiff's position is that it has been forced out of competition with defendant in the acrylic sheet field either because the price of the molding powder, from which plaintiff extrudes its competitive product, the extruded acrylic sheet, is kept at an artificially high level through the device of keeping the basic ingredient, the monomer, high, or in the alternative, because the price of the cast acrylic sheet has been kept at an artificially low level through the device of keeping the basic ingredient, the monomer, at a considerably higher price when offered to purchasers than the price which defendant charges itself for that ingredient in the manufacture of cast acrylic sheet.

[Motion to Strike]

Defendant's motion to strike seeks to expunge from the complaint all reference to the methyl methacrylate monomer including reference to the price which defendant charges itself for such monomer (a) in the production of the cast sheet and (b) in the production of the acrylic molding powder, on the ground that such reference is immaterial since plaintiff does not claim ever to have purchased, utilized or sold any monomer, or to have attempted to do so, but claims solely to have been damaged with regard to loss of an investment and profits from extruded methyl methacrylate sheet manufactured from methyl methacrylate powder. In addition defendant objects to any reference to the activities of Rohm & Haas Gesellschaft mit beschraenkter Haftung and Imperial Chemical Industry, Ltd. with respect to methyl methacrylate monomer, as irrelevant and prejudicial to defendant in its effect upon a jury.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Alleged "Price Squeeze"]

Defendant's position here cannot be accepted. Its contention that all reference in the complaint to methyl methacrylate monomer is irrelevant to plaintiff's claim fails to give credit to the structure of plaintiff's allegations. One of the central links in this structure is the allegation that defendant charges itself less for the basic ingredient, the monomer, from which both the cast sheet and the powder are manufactured, than it charges other potential manufacturers of such sheet and powder. Such practice, if established, stands clearly condemned in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,342], 148 F. 2d 416, 438 (C. A. 2d Cir). Defendant argues that this central link in the structure of plaintiff's complaint is meaningless without some show of unlawful monopoly in the basic ingredient, the monomer. It points to the fact that in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, there was proof of restrictive practices in the basic material. While it is an interesting question whether a bare allegation of defendant's actual substantial occupation of the domestic market in the monomer coupled with an allegation that defendant is offering such monomer at a substantially higher price to potential domestic producers of cast sheet and molding powder, than that which it charges itself for the monomer in the manufacture of the sheet and molding powder, would be sufficient to charge a violation under the Sherman and Clayton Act, plaintiff in fact goes further. Plaintiff alleges, in effect, that defendant, not satisfied with its actual 70% occupation of the domestic market in the monomer, entered into an agreement with E. I. DuPont deNemours & Co., which accounts for the other 30% of the domestic market, and with Rohm & Haas Gesellschaft mit beschraenkter Haftung and Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd., the only other producers of the monomer, to fix prices of the monomer. This is therefore not a case where allegations of restrictive practices in the basic ingredient, of both cast sheet and molding powder, are lacking. It is, on the allegations of the complaint, a case which is on all fours with United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra. These allegations are certainly relevant and possibly essential to support the central link in the structure of plaintiff's complaint.

[Motion to Strike Denied]

Defendant's motion to strike is denied.

[Interrogatories]

I come next to the interrogatories. So far as material to the objections raised by defendant, its answer alleges, in substance, that during the period August 1950 through November 1955 plaintiff was at all times able to purchase methyl methacrylate monomer on the open market and to convert it into cast sheet or molding powder; that during the same period plaintiff was at all times able to purchase all the ingredients which go into the manufacture of methyl methacrylate monomer itself on the open market; that during the same period other firms in the United States were engaged in the manufacture and sale of cast methyl methacrylate sheet in successful competition with defendant (naming them); that during the same period other firms in the United States were engaged in the manufacture and sale of extruded methyl methacrylate sheet in successful competition with defendant's cast sheet (naming them); that cast methyl methacrylate sheet competes not only with extruded methyl methacrylate sheet but with other acrylic products, other members of the vinyl compound family, and other plastics, all of which are produced and sold in the United States by defendant's competitors. In addition defendant's answer sets up the defense of the applicable period of limitation which, in this jurisdiction, is two years. Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925], 191 F. 2d 912; Shiffman Bros. & Texas Co., 196 F. 2d 695.

[Period of Limitation—Period of Competition]

Defendant's first objection to the interrogatories is that they range over a period from August 1950 to November 1955. Defendant seeks to limit these interrogatories to the period November 1953 to November 1955 as being the two year period of limitation. In any event, defendant argues that the scope of discovery ought not to precede July 1951 the month in which plaintiff entered the production of extruded methyl methacrylate sheet. Defendant's objection cannot be sustained. It is well settled that in suits of this nature, where defendant's monopoly position is sought to be established, discovery is not limited to the period of limitation (Burroughs v. Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,339], D. C. 12 F. R. D. 491), nor is it limited to a period measured from the date when plaintiff first came into existence or commenced competing activities. Caldwell-Clements Inc. v. McGraw Hill Pub. Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,261], D. C. 12 F. R. D. 531; Hillside Amusement Co. v. Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. D. C. 7 F. R. D. 260; see Baush Machine Tool Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America [1932-1937 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,057], 72 F. 2d 236, 239 (C. A. 2d Cir.) cert. den. 293 U. S. 589, 55 S. Ct. 104.

[Relevance]

Defendant's second objection to the interrogatories is that they are not confined to defendant's manufacture and sale of methyl methacrylate powder and cast methyl methacrylate sheet but range over other acrylic products. Defendant's main point here is that any interrogatories involving methyl methacrylate monomer are irrelevant to plaintiff's claim. This objection involves the same reasons as were urged in support of defendant's motion to strike all reference to the monomer in the complaint. My rejection of this objection proceeds on the same grounds as my rejection of defendant's motion to strike and I need not repeat them here. Defendant's other objection here is that some of the interrogatories inquire into the characteristics and uses of a whole range of acrylic products manufactured and sold by defendant and by others, there being 25 such products, and that this inquiry cannot possibly have any relevance to plaintiff's claim. I cannot say that this inquiry has no relevance to plaintiff's claim when it is part of defendant's contention in the answer that those products compete with each other and that since many of them are manufactured and sold by other firms it is unrealistic to isolate two of them, methyl methacrylate cast sheet and extruded methyl methacrylate sheet, for independent consideration on the issue of monopoly. While it is not necessary, to sustain the relevancy of interrogatories, that they be relevant directly to the issues raised by the pleadings provided that they are or may become relevant to the subject matter of the action (Glick v. McKesson & Robbins Inc. D. C. 10 F. R. D. 477; Gutowitz v. Pen. R. Co. D. C. 7 F. R. D. 144; 4 Moore's Fed. Prac. 2d Ed. par. 33.15), clearly where such interrogatories are relevant directly to the issues raised by the pleadings they cannot be attacked. Browning King Co. v. Browning King & Co. D. C. 5 F. R. D. 386.

[Confidential Information]

Defendant's third and final objection to the interrogatories is that they inquire into confidential cost information and defendant's internal bookkeeping, and require disclosure of defendant's confidential manufacturing processes, capacity, customers and sales. As to the cost information and defendant's internal bookkeeping, the inquiries are clearly relevant to plaintiff's claim which is that defendant is keeping prices of methyl methacrylate monomer and molding powder high and is employing the device of charging itself less for the monomer used in the production of cast methyl methacrylate sheet and molding powder than it is charging other purchasers, in order to prevent competition. I see nothing secret or confidential about such information. But defendant contends that many of the questions involving cost require disclosure of confidential manufacturing processes, and that some of the interrogatories specifically ask for such information. The general rule here is that there is no absolute privilege protecting such information from disclosure (Louis Weinberg Associates v. Monte Christi Corp. D. C. 15 F. R. D. 493; Cities Service Oil Co. v. Celanese Corporation of America D. C. 10 F. R. D. 458; 8 Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd Ed. Sec. 2212; 4 Moore's Fed. Prac. 2d Ed. par. 26.22). But the courts at their discretion will protect such information from disclosure where it appears that it is not sufficiently important in its bearing on the issues in the case. Plaintiff's interrogatories do not seek to force defendant to reveal any secret processes, concealed methods of compounding and the like. So far as they seek to obtain information with regard to defendant's products they are confined to information regarding the ingredients of such products without directly calling for the proportions in which such ingredients are used in the manufacture of any such product. It is well settled that such information, if otherwise relevant to the issues in the case, is not protected from disclosure. Glick v. McKesson & Robbins Inc. D. C. 10 F. R. D. 477; Lenerts v. Rapidol Distributing Corp. D. C. 3 F. R. D. 42.

Defendant's objection to interrogatories requiring disclosure of capacity, customers and sales must equally fall in view of its position in the answer that certain named companies successfully compete with it in the manufacture and sale both of the cast sheet and of the extruded sheet.

[Objections to Interrogatories Overruled]

Defendant's objections to interrogatories are overruled.

[¶ 69,319] Federal Trade Commission v. Hallmark, Inc., and Ben Cole, Vice President, Hallmark, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. No. 12467. September Term, 1958—January Session, 1959. Dated March 30, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, District Judge.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence and Witnesses—Investigations—Lack of Hearing on Motion to Quash Subpoenas—Subpoenas Returnable Before Investigator—Constitutionality.—A District Court properly ordered compliance with Federal Trade Commission subpoenas requiring the production of documents by a distributor of watches and the testimony of one of its officers. It was contended that the Commission violated the Administrative Procedure Act by (1) denying a motion to quash the subpoenas without a hearing, and (2) making the subpoenas returnable before an investigative employee of the Commission rather than before an independent hearing examiner. Both arguments were rejected on the ground that the investigation did not qualify as an "adjudicative proceeding" under the Administrative Procedure Act. "Adjudication" is an "agency process for the formulation of an order." An order is an agency's "final disposition" of any matter. The Commission had issued no complaint, but sought information on which to determine whether or not there was reason to believe that a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act had occurred; the investigation itself would result in no final disposition of the rights and duties of the distributor. Neither the Administrative Procedure Act nor the requirements of due process barred the Commission from making the subpoenas returnable before the investigator. Further, the distributor would not have been entitled to a hearing on its motion to quash the subpoenas even if an adjudicative proceeding had been involved. Since enforcement of the subpoenas in a court would have resulted in a "trial of the law and the facts de novo," the matter was within an exception to those cases which, under the Administrative Procedure Act, require an agency hearing.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.10, 8741.55.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Relevance of Information Sought—Scope of Subpoena—Trade Secrets.—A District Court properly ordered a distributor of watches to comply with a Federal Trade Commission subpoena duces tecum which sought documents relating to the computation and publication of wholesale and retail prices for its products, invoices of sale, and corresponding customer purchase orders. It was contended that the information sought was irrelevant to an investigation of "fictitious pricing" since that offense usually consisted of misrepresentation of retail prices, while the distributor sold only to wholesalers. Even if the distributor sold only to wholesalers, it could have supplied dealers with the means of misleading the public by ticketing its products with fictitious "retail" prices. However, the Commission asserted that one facet of its investigation involved the question of whether or not the distributor was a retailer. In that respect, the documents sought were relevant. Also, the challenged specifications of the subpoena were not unduly broad general demands, but were limited to documents pertinent to the investigation described in the subpoena. Lastly, the court did not reach the issue of whether or not the documents contained trade secrets; the investigation was not a public one, and the documents would routinely go into the Commission's files.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,673, ordering compliance with a Federal Trade Commission subpoena duces tecum.

Before Duffy, Chief Judge, and Hastings and Knoch, Circuit Judges.

[Enforcement of FTC Subpoenas]

Knoch, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The Federal Trade Commission, hereinafter called the "Commission," applied to the District Court, under authority of Section 9, Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 49) for order requiring Hallmark, Inc., to produce certain books, papers, and documents listed in a subpoena duces tecum, and requiring Ben Cole, Vice President of Hallmark, Inc., to testify in accordance with a subpoena ad testificandum, both issued by the Commission on March 14, 1958.

For several years, the Commission had been conducting an investigation (its file No. 552 1105) to determine whether Hallmark, Inc., was using misleading and deceptive representations, in violation of Section 5 of the Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45) in advertising, sale and distribution in commerce of Hallmark and Waltham watches.

In the course of the investigation, the Commission issued the two administrative subpoenas, both returnable Monday, April 7, 1958, before Daniel Zmuda, attorney and examiner, who was also the agency investigator in charge of the investigation, for the Commission.

[Motion to Quash]

On Friday, April 4, 1958, Hallmark, Inc., and Ben Cole, (both hereinafter referred to as "Hallmark") moved to quash the subpoenas. The motion was denied the same day by order issued over the official seal of the Commission, stating on its face: "By the Commission," and signed by the Secretary of the Commission.

In conferences between Zmuda and Hallmark's attorney, prior to the issuance of the subpoenas, Zmuda made available to Hallmark's attorney an "Outline of Procedure" which indicated that the information sought related in part to proposed analysis of the spread between cost and price, or "mark-up."

The return date of the subpoenas was changed by agreement to April 14, 1958. Hallmark's attorney on behalf of Hallmark appeared and refused obedience to the subpoenas, in so far as they pertained to invoices and purchase orders which would permit analysis of cost.

[Order]

On September 17, 1958, the District Judge entered an order enforcing the subpoenas and setting new return dates. This appeal followed.

[Arguments on Appeal]

Hallmark's position may be summarized as follows:

1. Denial of the motion to quash the subpoenas without oral hearing and opportunity to present argument violated the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U. S. C. A. Sections 1001-1011).

2. The subpoenas were improperly made returnable before an investigative employee, not qualified as a Hearing Officer under the Administrative Procedure Act, who sought thus to secure material for use in his investigation.

3. Mark-up between cost and the wholesale price and between wholesale and retail price is irrelevant to investigation of alleged use of deceptive representations in advertising, sale and distribution.

[Right to Argue Motion—Administrative Procedure Act]

Both parties agree that Hallmark's assertion of a right to oral argument on motion to quash the subpoenas presents a novel question.

["Adjudicative Proceeding"]

Hallmark relies in part on certain sections of the Administrative Procedure Act which provide for hearings on agency processes exercised under a rule making, adjudicative, or licensing power. Sections 1004(b) and (c) and 1005(a) [1] cited by Hallmark follow an introductory unnumbered paragraph which reads:

"Sec. 1004 Adjudications

"In every case of adjudications required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, except to the extent that there is involved (1) any matter subject to a subsequent trial of the law and the facts de novo in any court; (2) the selection or tenure of an officer or employee of the United States other than examiners appointed pursuant to section 1010 of this title; (3) proceedings in which decisions rest solely on inspections, tests, or elections; (4) the conduct of military, naval, or foreign affairs functions; (5) cases in which an agency is acting as an agent for a court; and (6) the certification of employee representatives."

We do not agree, as will appear below, that the investigation involved in this case presently qualifies as an adjudicative proceeding. In any event, the Commission may invoke Court aid in cases of disobedience to a subpoena, which will result in "a subsequent trial of the law and facts de novo . . ." thus bringing the matter within the first exception noted above.

Section 1005(a) provides for an interested person to appear before any agency or its responsible officers or employees, so far as the orderly conduct of public business permits. Oral hearing before the Commission

"Procedure

"(b) The agency shall afford all interested parties opportunity for (1) the submission and consideration of facts, arguments, offers of settlement, or proposals of adjustment where time, the nature of the proceeding, and the public interest permit, and (2) to the extent that the parties are unable so to determine any controversy by consent, hearing, and decision upon notice and in conformity with sections 1006 and 1007 of this title.

"Authority and functions of officers and employees

"(c) The same officers who presided at the reception of evidence pursuant to section 1006 of this title shall make the recommended decision or initial decision required by section 1007 of this title except where such officers become unavailable to the agency. Save to the extent required for the disposition of ex parte matters as authorized by law, no such officer shall consult any person or party on any fact in issue unless upon notice and opportunity for all parties to participate; nor shall such officer be responsible to or subject to the supervision or direction of any officer, employee, or agent engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for any agency. No officer, employee, or agent engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for any agency in any case shall, in that or a factually related case, participate or advise in the decision, recommended decision, or agency review pursuant to section 1007 of this title except as witness or counsel in public proceedings. This subsection shall not apply in determining applications for initial licenses or to proceedings involving the validity or application of rates, facilities, or practices of public utilities or carriers; nor shall it be applicable in any manner to the agency or any member or members of the body comprising the agency."

"§ 1005. Ancillary matters

Every party shall be accorded the right to appear in person or by or with counsel or other duly qualified representative in any agency proceeding. So far as the orderly conduct of public business permits, any interested person may appear before any agency or its responsible officers or employees for the presentation, adjustment, or determination of any issue, request, or controversy in any proceeding (interlocutory, summary, or otherwise) or in connection with any agency function. Every agency shall proceed with reasonable dispatch to conclude any matter presented to it except that due regard shall be had for the convenience and necessity of the parties or their representatives. Nothing herein shall be construed either to grant or to deny to any person who is not a lawyer the right to appear for or represent others before any agency or in any agency proceeding."

itself is not provided. In the instant case, the return date of the subpoenas might have had to be postponed, thus perhaps interfering with the orderly conduct of public business.

[Court Subpoenas Distinguished]

In contending that Rule 45(b) Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and cases interpreting its operation, may be helpful to construe statutes granting the power of administrative subpoena, Hallmark draws a false analogy to subpoenas issued by a District Court. Disobedience to subpoenas issued by a District Court subjects the witness to possible punishment for contempt. Administrative subpoenas do not subject the witness to punishment for contempt until the agency has secured enforcement from a District Court after proceedings in which, as in the case before us, the witness has an opportunity to raise all issues pertinent to a motion to quash a subpoena alleged to be unreasonable or oppressive.

In support of its view of the requirements of a proper administrative hearing, Hallmark cites two cases which are readily distinguished. Neither involved a subpoena. Green Spring Dairy Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 4 Cir., 1953, 208 F. 2d 471, concerned on adjudicative proceeding to determine a tax deficiency. Morgan v. United States, 1937, 304 U. S. 1, related to a rule making proceeding which fixed maximum rates to be charged by stockyards commission men.

[Order Signed by FTC Secretary]

The order denying Hallmark's motion to quash states that it was "Before Federal Trade Commission", (listing the participating Commissioners), and that it was determined "By the Commission". Absent evidence of irregularity, the mere fact that the Secretary signed it, as he signs all orders of the Commission, does not render the order suspect.

[Subpoenas Returnable Before Investigator]

Hallmark contends that the subpoenas ought to have been returnable before an independent hearing examiner as described in the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1010) and that the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 49) requires return before a member of the Commission, or an independent hearing examiner.

As yet, however, the Commission has issued no complaint against Hallmark. The Commission seeks to acquire information on which to determine whether or not there is reason to believe that Hallmark has been using deceptive practices in commerce, and whether or not it appears that further proceedings would be in the public interest. At the conclusion of its investigation, the Commission may or may not, issue a formal complaint giving rise to an adjudicative proceeding to which the Administrative Procedure Act would be applicable.

The Federal Trade Commission Act empowers the Commission to investigate the practices and management of any corporation engaged in commerce (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 46) and to require by subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 49).

"Adjudication" is defined by 5 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1001(d) as meaning "agency process for the formulation of an order". The same section defines "order" as meaning "the whole or any part of the final disposition (whether affirmative, negative, injunctive, or declaratory in form) of any agency in any matter other than rule making but including licensing." The present investigation does not qualify as an adjudicative adversary process for which an independent hearing examiner is required by the Administrative Procedure Act. The investigation may eventually lead to an adjudicative proceeding, but the investigation itself will result in no final disposition of the rights and duties of Hallmark. In Pinkett et al., v. United States, D. Md., 1952, 105 F. Supp. 67, cited by Hallmark, the District Court did set aside an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission as invalid, in part because the examiner who conducted the hearing was not appointed in accordance with the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. In that case, however, the Interstate Commerce Commission had directed issuance of a certificate of public convenience and necessity, an adjudicative act, as a result of a hearing before the unqualified examiner without notice to interested parties.

It is uncontested that Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U. S.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

C. A. Sec. 49)[2] grants two kinds of powers; access and subpoena. Citing F. T. C. v. Tuttle [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,669], 2 Cir., 1957, 244 F. 2d 605 as authority for its analysis of Sec. 9,[3] Hallmark argues that the Commission's duly authorized "agents" may have access to documentary evidence of any corporation, but, if it becomes necessary for the Commission to issue subpoenas, then only "members and examiners" of the Commission may examine witnesses on return of such subpoenas. Zmuda has been designated an "examiner", but Hallmark contends that "examiner" as used in the Federal Trade Commission Act must be construed to include only independent hearing examiners as defined in the later Administrative Procedure Act.

This identical question was considered in Federal Trade Commission v. Scientific Living [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,673], D. C., M. D., Pa. 1957, 150 F. Supp. 495, appeal dismissed 3 Cir., 1957, unreported, and decided adversely to Hallmark's position. Hallmark argues that the District Court in Scientific Living misconstrued the applicable statutory provisions. We cannot agree. The opinion seems well reasoned and sound. It has been followed in Judge Bryan's opinion filed January 14, 1959, In the Matter of the Application to Enforce an Administrative Subpoena Duces Tecum of the Federal Trade Commission v. Waltham Watch Company, a corporation [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,242], Case No. M 18-304, District Court, Southern District of New York.

There is no question that the Commission is here conducting an investigation under Sections 46 and 49 and not issuing a complaint under Section 45 of the Act.

Hallmark also argues that "hearing" as prescribed in the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1006) and made specifically applicable to hearings contemplated by Section 1003 (Rule Making) and 1004 (Adjudications) was intended to apply also to Section 1005 (Ancillary Matters). We find no basis for this conclusion.

Neither the Administrative Procedure Act nor the requirements of due process bar making these subpoenas returnable before Zmuda.

[Relevance]

Hallmark further protests that Specifications 2 and 5 of the subpoena duces tecum[4] seek production of material irrelevant to the investigation.

In the District Court, Hallmark contended that as a manufacturer-importer, engaged in sale or distribution to the wholesale trade, it does not sell directly to the customer; that "fictitious prices" usually consist of misrepresentation of retail prices as "regularly sold at" or "formerly sold at" for some higher figure than the retail customer is asked to pay.

The Commission asserts that one facet of its investigation involves the question of whether Hallmark is or is not a retailer. The documents sought would be relevant in that respect. Even if Hallmark sells only to the wholesale trade, Hallmark could supply dealers with the means of misleading the public as to the customary selling prices of its watches by ticketing them with fictitious "retail" prices. The tags themselves, freely produced by Hallmark, are of little value without the actual selling prices of the watches as shown by the documents sought.

Although the Commission asserts that the subpoenas themselves must govern, rather than the "Outline of Procedure" supplied as a courtesy for Hallmark's convenience, "mark-up" would be relevant to an investigation into alleged ticketing with fictitious retail prices.

"For the purposes of sections 41-46 and 47-58 of this title the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. Any member of the commission may sign subpoenas, and members and examiners of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. * * *"

[3] The Tuttle case differs from that before us in that it concerned a subpoena duces tecum issued to third parties after complaint had been filed by the Commission charging violation of the Clayton Act.

[Scope of Subpoenas]

Unlike the subpoenas condemned in F. T. C. v. American Tobacco Co., 1923, 264 U. S. 298; Federal Trade Commission v. Baltimore Grain Co., etc., D. Md. 1922, 284 Fed. 886; F. T. C. v. Smith, et al., S. D., N. Y. 1929, 34 F. 2d 323, and U. S. v. Basic Products, W. D. Pa., 1919, 260 Fed. 472, cited by Hallmark, Specifications 2 and 5 of the subpoena duces tecum before us are not unduly broad general demands but are limited to documents pertinent to the investigation described in the subpoena.

[Trade Secrets]

As the investigation is not a public one and the documents will routinely go into the Commission's files, we do not reach the issue of whether or not the documents contain trade secrets.[5]

[Judgment Affirmed]

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Southern Division. Civil No. 2150-SD-W. Filed March 19, 1959.

Case No. 1393 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing—Exchanging Price Lists.—Five firms connected with the wholesale distribution of plumbing supplies in the San Diego, California, area were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with any wholesaler to fix the price or other terms or conditions for the sale of plumbing supplies to any third person in the plumbing industry in California. In addition, the firms were prohibited from agreeing with any wholesaler, or any trade association or central agency for wholesalers, to fix or use any arbitrary, average or purported average cost of doing business, mark-up, or margin of profit in determining or fixing the price of plumbing supplies. The decree also enjoined the firms from exchanging with, or disclosing to, any wholesaler information as to the price for the sale of any plumbing supplies to third persons prior to the time when such information is generally available to the trade.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

JAMES M. CARTER, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on the 11th day of June, 1958, and all of the defendants having appeared and filed their respective answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and said defendants, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any of the parties hereto in respect to any such issues;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of all of the parties hereto, it is hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Plumbing supplies" shall mean those materials and fixtures customarily used in the plumbing industry in the installation or repairing of water, gas, or waste disposal systems in homes, dwellings, commercial buildings and industrial buildings, and includes, among other items, steel, soil galvanized, black and cast iron pipe, fittings, valves and trim, vitreous china lavatories, sinks, bathtubs, water closets, copper tubing and water heaters;

(B) "Wholesaler" shall mean a person engaged in the business of selling plumbing supplies in large lots and quantities to "third persons" in the plumbing industry. A manufacturer who sells plumbing supplies to third persons in the plumbing industry in the State of California shall be deemed a "wholesaler" as herein defined, but only with respect to such sales;

(C) "Person" shall mean an individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other business or legal entity;

(D) "Defendants" shall mean those defendants who consent to the entry of this Final Judgment, except that the defendant Republic Supply Company of California shall be subject to the provisions of this Final Judgment only as to activities carried on by or through its Division now known as Mission Supply Company;

(E) "Third Person" in the plumbing industry shall mean plumbing contractors, retailers of plumbing supplies, and purchasers in large quantities of plumbing supplies for use in water, gas or waste disposal systems.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, directors, agents and employees, and all persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who shall receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Price Fixing]

Each of the defendants is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any wholesaler to fix, stabilize or maintain the price, mark-up, or other terms or conditions for the sale of plumbing supplies to any third person in the plumbing industry in the State of California;

(B) Exchanging with or disclosing to any wholesaler information as to the price for the sale of any plumbing supplies to third persons in the plumbing industry in the State of California prior to the time when such information is available generally to the trade; provided, however, that such information may be disclosed or exchanged to or with non-competing wholesalers in advance of such release where the ownership and majority control of said non-competitor is substantially the same as that of the defendant disclosing or exchanging said information so long as said ownership and majority control continues;

(C) Entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or agreement with any wholesaler, or any trade association or central agency for wholesalers, to fix or use any arbitrary, average or purported average cost of doing business, mark-up or margin of profit in determining, fixing, or maintaining the price of plumbing supplies to third persons in the plumbing industry in the State of California.

V

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purposes of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant, made to its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, be permitted:

(A) Reasonable access during the office hours of such defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers and employees of such defendant (who may have counsel present) regarding such matters.

Upon written request, any defendant shall submit such written reports to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary to the enforcement of said Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section V shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the enforcement of compliance therewith and the punishment of violations thereof.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictments—Right to Plead Nolo Contendere.—A motion by defendants to withdraw their pleas of not guilty and interpose pleas of nolo contendere was denied. The court, in rejecting the plea under Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, noted that (1) the Government opposed the motion, making a detailed offer of proof which purported to demonstrate a persistent and long continued course of illegal conduct by the defendants, (2) the defendants were charged with a conspiracy to fix prices, one of the more serious infractions of the law, (3) there was an absence of countervailing considerations of sufficient weight, and (4) private litigants would be deprived of the prima facie case they would have, under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, if the defendants should be found guilty upon trial.

[Nolo Contendere]

PALMIERI, District Judge [In full text]: The oral motion of the defendants, for permission to withdraw their pleas of not guilty and interpose pleas of nolo contendere, is denied. In view of the Government's opposition, and its detailed offer of proof, purporting to demonstrate a persistent and long continued course of illegal conduct by the defendants, and absent countervailing considerations of sufficient weight, I feel impelled to withhold the consent required by Fed. R. Crim. P. 11. I note also that the defendants are charged with a conspiracy to fix prices, one of the more serious infractions of the law; and that the civil action brought by the Government was terminated on consent [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,312], thus making the presumption available to private litigants under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731 (1914), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 16 (Supp. V), unavailable here.

The considerations to be evaluated in ruling on a motion of this sort have been set forth by Judge Weinfeld in United States v. Standard Ultramarine & Color Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,237], 137 F. Supp. 167 (S. D. N. Y. 1955), and I concur with the views expressed in that opinion.

I need hardly add that my determination of this motion should not be taken as any indication that I have reached any conclusion, however tentative, on the guilt of the defendants. That remains to be proven in a trial at which they are accorded the presumption of innocence and where the Government has the burden of proof.

So Ordered.

[¶ 69,322] Frank A. Kerran and Cameron A. Kerran, Individuals and Co-Partners Trading and Doing Business as Double Eagle Refining Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. November Term—1958. No. 5850. Dated March 19, 1959.

On Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Character of Product—Failure to Make Material Disclosures—Failure to Disclose Fact of Motor Oil's Previous Use.—Oil refiners' practice of marketing re-refined lubricating motor oil in containers indistinguishable from those used generally to market oil refined from virgin crude oil, without any disclosure that such re-refined oil was made from previously used oil, constituted a deceptive practice within the intent and meaning of Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Commission's hearing examiner found, in effect, that a substantial portion of the public preferred new and unused motor oil to that produced by the re-refining of crankcase drainings and other previously used motor oil. While it might have been true, as contended by the refiners, that their oil was just as good in quality as that produced from virgin crude oil, the public was entitled to know the facts and to make its own choice between new and re-refined oil, even though that choice was predicated, at least in part, upon ill-founded sentiment, belief, or caprice.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.552, 5105.61.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Validity of Cease and Desist Order—Power to Prevent Deceptive Practices—Tendency of Practices to Deceive.—A Federal Trade Commission order which required oil refiners to cease and desist from selling lubricating oil composed in whole or in part of reclaimed or previously used oil, without disclosing such prior use by a clear and conspicuous statement to that effect on the container, was not invalid since the Commission is empowered to prevent unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices declared unlawful by Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Under the enlarged sweep of the statute, the Commission may take appropriate action to prevent such practices in interstate commerce which are inimical to the public interest. The refiners contended that the order was invalid since their re-refined oil was as good in quality as oil refined from virgin crude oil, there was no prejudice to either the public or their competitors, and disclosure would result in injury to their business, thereby restricting competition and causing a waste of natural resources. The vice, however, that made the acts and practices of the refiners unfair and deceptive business practices, within the meaning of Section 5 of the Act, was the deception of the purchasing public.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.341.

Affirming and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6432.

Before BRATTON, Chief Judge, and PICKETT and BREITENSTEIN, Circuit Judges.

[Labeling Motor Oil]

BRATTON, Chief Judge [In full text]: This proceeding is here on petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission. Petitioners Frank A. Kerran and Cameron A. Kerran, partners doing business under the trade name of Double Eagle Refining Company, at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, are engaged in the business of re-refining previously used lubricating oil, principally crankcase drainings collected at gasoline stations; packaging the re-refined oil in tin cans of the same general size, kind, and appearance as those used for packaging lubricating oil produced directly from virgin crude; and selling the re-refined oil without indicating on the containers or otherwise that the commodity is produced from previously used oil. Some of the supply of previously used oil comes to the refinery of petitioners from other states, and some of the finished product is sold and distributed in interstate commerce. The order of the Commission required petitioners to cease and desist from representing, contrary to the fact, that their lubricating oil is refined or processed from other than previously used oil; and from advertising, offering for sale, or selling lubricating oil that is composed in whole or in part of oil which had been reclaimed or in any manner processed from previously used oil, without disclosing such prior use to the purchaser or potential purchaser in advertising and sales promotion material, and by a clear and conspicuous statement to that effect on the container.

[Public Preference—Deceptive Practice]

The order is challenged upon the ground that the Commission erred in holding that the methods of competition employed by the petitioners are unfair, because the Commission did not base its decision upon all of the pertinent facts of record but upon only a minor part of them; because there is little likelihood that the public is misled since re-refined oil is identical to that which is refined directly from virgin crude; because when previously used oil is re-refined it loses its identity as previously used oil and is now oil in every sense of the term; and because the circumstances which must accompany seller silence in order for it to constitute an unfair method of competition are not present in the proceeding. It is the position of petitioners that lubricating oil does not wear out; that use does not change the chemical composition of the oil or its molecular structure but merely contaminates it; that contamination from use as well as additives put into the oil by the prior producer are eliminated by the re-refining process; that the re-refined oil which petitioners sell is new oil; and that such re-refined product is the equivalent in quality of lubricating oil produced from virgin crude. Evidence was adduced at the hearing before the hearing examiner to the effect that lubricating oil does not wear out with use; that use does not change the chemical composition of the oil or its molecular structure but merely contaminates it; and that contamination from use as well as additives put into the oil by the prior producer are eliminated by the re-refining process. But the hearing examiner in the first instance found in effect that a substantial portion of the public who purchase lubricating oil prefer new and unused oil to that produced by the re-refining of crankcase drainings and other previously used oil; that the failure of petitioners to disclose that their oil is made from previously used oil has a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that such oil is new and unused made from virgin crude oil; and that such failure has a tendency and capacity to cause such members of the public to purchase petitioners' oil as a result of the erroneous and mistaken belief so engendered. These crucial findings were adopted by the Commission. They were adequately sustained by evidence adduced upon the hearing and therefore must stand on review. It may be that lubricating oil does not wear out with use. It may be that use does not change the chemical composition or molecular structure of oil. It may be that contamination from use and additives put into oil by the prior producer are eliminated by the re-refining process of petitioners. And it may be that the oil sold by petitioners is just as good in quality as lubricating oil produced from virgin crude. But the public is entitled to know the facts with respect to the lubricating oil sold by the petitioners being produced from previously used oil and then make its own choice with respect to purchasing such oil or oil produced from virgin crude, even though the choice is predicated at least in part upon ill-founded sentiment, belief, or caprice. Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,041], 291 U. S. 67. And therefore the practice of the petitioners in marketing their re-refined lubricating oil in containers indistinguishable from those used generally to market lubricating oil refined from virgin crude, without any disclosure that it is made from previously used oil, constitutes a deceptive practice within the intent and meaning of section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, 52 Stat. 111, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45(a). Mohawk Refining Corp. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,276], CA-3, — F. (2d) —; Royal Oil Corp., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,234], CA-4, — F. (2d) —.

[Prejudice to Public—Power of FTC]

Petitioners urge further that the order of the Commission is invalid because the purchasing public is not prejudiced by their methods of competition since the public preference is for quality in lubricating oil and not for any particular origin; because the competitors of petitioners are not prejudiced by the methods of competition which petitioners practice since petitioners do not enjoy any unfair advantage over their competitors; because enforcement of the order would result in actually restricting competition since it would destroy the business of petitioners and other re-refiners and thereby eliminate them as potential competitors of the major oil companies; because it is contrary to public policy to require useless disclosures which would result in injury to a company engaged in the business of re-refining oil and selling it in interstate commerce; and because it would result in wasting unnecessarily a precious natural resource. The general trend of the argument in support of the several grounds of challenge to the order is that the practices of petitioners do not prejudice the public; that they do not prejudice the competitors of petitioners; that disclosure would result in injury to the business of petitioners; and that disclosure would result in waste of a natural resource. But section 5(a) of the Act, supra, as amended in 1938, declares unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce to be unlawful; and with exceptions not having any present material bearing, it empowers the Commission to prevent such methods, acts, or practices. Under the statute, as amended, the Commission is vested with power to prevent the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce and also to prevent the use of unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. Under the enlarged sweep of the statute, the Commission may take appropriate action to prevent unfair or deceptive practices in commerce which are inimical to the public interest. Thomas v. Federal Trade Commission, 116 F. (2d) 347; Wolf v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,326], 135 F. (2d) 564; Globe Cardboard Novelty Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,947], 192 F. (2d) 444; Koch v. Federal Trade Commission [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,526], 206 F. (2d) 311. The vice in the acts and practices of petitioners lies in the deception of the purchasing public of lubricating oil with respect to the oil sold by petitioners being re-refined oil instead of refined oil from virgin crude. And that vice constitutes an unfair and deceptive business practice within the intent and meaning of section 5 of the Act, supra. Mohawk Refining Corp. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Royal Oil Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.

[Order Affirmed]

A decree will be entered affirming and enforcing the order of the Commission.

[Dissenting Opinion]

BREITENSTEIN, Circuit Judge (dissenting) [In full text]: The majority opinion sustains the Federal Trade Commission in requiring the manufacturer of an admittedly high quality domestic product to disclose in its advertising and on its container labels the source of its product. It does so in the absence of any claim that such manufacturer has ever made a deceptive or misleading statement in connection with the marketing of the product, re-refined lubricating oil. A deceptive practice is said to result from the marketing of the product "in containers indistinguishable from those used generally to market lubricating oil refined from virgin crude, without any disclosure that it is made from previously used oil." The deception is inferred from the assumption that the buying public prefers a lubricant produced from so-called virgin crude oil.

[Quality of Product]

Certain facts shown by the uncontradicted evidence are pertinent. After crude oil is taken from the ground it is refined first to secure the more volatile distillates such as gasoline. The residuum is then refined again to obtain lubricating oils. Oil does not lose its chemical composition or its molecular structure by use. It does not wear out. The petitioner takes oil which has been drained from automobile crankcases and refines it just as the residuum of crude oil is refined after the capture of the more volatile distillates. The product so obtained has as high quality as that obtained from the residuum of the gasoline distillation.

Many minerals are processed and reprocessed and used and re-used over and over again. In this regard oil is no different from iron, gold and silver. The saving, accumulation, reprocessing and re-use of dental gold, silver ornaments and automobile steel does not differ in basic concept from the similar operations in regard to oil disclosed by this record.[1] The assumption that a purchaser is deceived when he buys a good oil derived from a secondary processing operation is no different from an assumption that a purchaser of a new automobile is deceived if the steel in that automobile has been derived from the processing of scrap iron obtained from a junk yard.

Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended,[2] empowers and directs the Commission to prevent the use of "unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce." Here the unfair method and the unfair or deceptive practice are said to arise from the use of the same type container as that used by manufacturers who produce from virgin crude and from the failure to disclose on the container that the lubricant is produced from previously used oil. There is nothing unfair or deceptive in using the same, common tin can type of container that is used for a multitude of products. The action of the Commission depends solely on the fact that the source of the oil is not disclosed.

[Public Preference]

With due deference to administrative expertness in fact finding, I see nothing in the record to sustain a finding that the public prefers lubricating oil produced from virgin crude. As testified, in substance, by the only witness who covered the attitude of the public,[3] the purchaser desires quality and buys by brand names. Granting that a purchaser is entitled to get what he asks for, even if he is put off with something as good or better,[4] quality is material in determining whether there is customer deception in circumstances where there is no misrepresentation. The fact that a buyer desires a good oil or a brand oil does not mean that he has any interest in the origin of that oil. The assumption that the public prefers a lubricant produced from virgin crude does not follow from the fact that the public seeks to buy a good oil. Yet the Commission makes such an assumption and from it finds a deception.

The product involved here is admittedly of high quality and the petitioner has admittedly made no false statements in regard to either the product or its use. Hence this is not a case for the Commission to exercise its well-recognized negative power of preventing falsity by forbidding certain conduct. Instead it is one where the Commission exercises an affirmative power to require a statement as to origin for the prevention of a falsity which is not shown to exist.

In the foreign origin cases the power of the Commission to require an affirmative disclosure of origin has been upheld.[5] In such cases the assumption of a popular preference for homemade goods is entirely reasonable and is supported by the provision of the tariff laws requiring the marking of imported goods with the name of the country of origin.[6]

[Cases Considered]

Royal Oil Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 Cir., — F. 2d —, involved reclaimed, not re-refined, oil,[7] and did not discuss the issues raised in this case. It is obvious that the sale of reclaimed oil without appropriate disclosure may be a deception. The same conclusion does not follow when the oil is re-refined as then the quality is as high as that found in oil produced from virgin crude.

Mohawk Refining Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,276], 3 Cir., — F. 2d —, affirmed an order similar to that involved here and did so in a case concerning re-refined oil. Reliance was placed on the statement in Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,041], 291 U. S. 67, 78, that the public is entitled to get what it chooses, though the choice be dictated by caprice or ignorance. Algoma was a case of mislabeling.[8] Neither in Mohawk nor in the case at bar was there any false labeling. Although the right to make a capricious or ignorant choice is protected against misrepresentation, the recognition of such right does not require that a manufacturer foresee caprice or ignorance and not only refrain from misrepresentation but also affirmatively state every fact regarding his product which might conceivably be deemed important by the prejudiced and uninformed.

Mohawk quotes approvingly from P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,747], 4 Cir., 186 F. 2d 52, 58, that: "To tell less than the whole truth is a well known method of deception * * *." The validity of such statement is unquestionable but it has no applicability. The omission here of the statement of source has no relation to the quality or usability of the product. Nondisclosure may amount to a deceptive practice when it is accompanied by an affirmative act calculated to deceive, when it has a bearing on quality or usability, or when the nondisclosed facts pertain to national policy. None of these situations is found here.

[Power of FTC]

It may be that advertisements and labels should be much more informative than they ordinarily are in current custom and practice. But Congress has never given to the Commission unrestricted power affirmatively to require informative statements. Its pertinent power is limited to the prevention of unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. Granting that the Commission is the expert body to determine the remedy necessary to eliminate such methods or practices,[9] nevertheless, the affirmative function of requiring informative disclosures may only be exercised to prevent unfairness or deception.[10] Believing as I do that nondisclosure of source of origin of product, standing alone and unaccompanied by any of the factors which I have mentioned, does not constitute unfairness or deception, I am brought to the conclusion that there is no rational basis for the findings, and no legal basis for the order, of the Commission. It is not necessary to comment on the far-reaching implications of the Commission's action under present conditions wherein scientific advances establish methods of reprocessing without loss of quality and thus permit the use and re-use of many substances which are in limited supply.

I most respectfully dissent from the opinion of my associates.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Restrictions on Injunctive Relief—Status of Unions Under Norris-LaGuardia Act—Alleged Conspiracy to Picket and Boycott Foreign Ships—Labor Dispute.—Foreign shippers, in an action seeking to enjoin two seamen's unions from picketing or boycotting their ships, were entitled to go to trial on their contentions that (1) there was no "labor dispute" involved, (2) the unions combined with a non-labor group, and (3) the National Labor Relations Board did not have exclusive primary jurisdiction. The shippers contended that no "labor dispute" was involved since the unions were not acting pursuant to a legitimate labor objective, but were motivated by political, international, and governmental considerations. If that was so, the unions might not be entitled to the protection which the Norris-LaGuardia (anti-injunction) Act would otherwise give them. Also, the shippers contended that an international union with which the unions allegedly combined was not, in fact, a labor union acting in furtherance of a labor purpose. That contention was relevant to the question of whether or not the unions had combined with a non-labor group. A further question of fact, whether or not the National Labor Relations Board had exclusive primary jurisdiction, also remained open for final determination at a trial, since it appeared that some of the shippers operated no ships that had been transferred from United States to foreign registry.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.265, 2441.34, 2453.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Injunctive Relief from Violations of Antitrust Laws—Pretrial Procedures—Summary Judgment—Issues of Fact.—An action by foreign shippers to enjoin two seamen's labor unions from picketing and boycotting their ships raised numerous issues of fact and could not be decided on the unions' motion for summary judgment. In a prior opinion, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,220, the court had denied the shippers' motion for a temporary injunction where it appeared, from the showing made at that time, that the controversy involved a "labor dispute" and that the court, therefore, had no jurisdiction under the Norris-LaGuardia Act to grant injunctive relief. However, successfully resisting a motion for a preliminary injunction does not entitle a party to summary judgment, without a trial. The shippers' failure to make out the clear and convincing showing which would have entitled them to a preliminary injunction did not mean that there were no issues of fact to be tried. While they failed to establish, in their motion for a preliminary injunction, that the unions were not acting pursuant to a legitimate labor objective and that no "labor dispute" was involved, the shippers were entitled to present evidence on that question at a trial. Other questions of fact raised by the affidavits were whether or not the unions had combined with a non-labor group, and whether or not the National Labor Relations Board had exclusive primary jurisdiction of the controversy.

Memorandum

[Injunction Sought]

Bryan, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action by twelve Liberian and three Panamanian corporations to enjoin the defendant unions and two named officers of the defendant unions from picketing, boycotting or inducing others to picket or boycott plaintiffs' ships or from interfering in any manner with their operation.

[Alleged Labor Union Conspiracy]

The complaint alleges, in substance, that the defendants, acting in concert with the International Transport Workers Federation, are engaging in a conspiracy to restrain the foreign commerce of the United States in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and to the irreparable damage of the plaintiffs.

The case originally came before me on plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction and defendants' cross-motion to dismiss the complaint. At that time the defendants had announced their intention of staging a five day demonstration against plaintiffs' vessels and because of the urgency of the matter and the need for haste, I filed a lengthy opinion on the following day in which I denied plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction, while reserving decision on the cross-motion to dismiss the complaint. I will now pass on the cross-motion upon which the parties have submitted additional material.

[Motion to Dismiss]

The motion to dismiss is based upon the ground (1) that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action because exclusive primary jurisdiction lies in the National Labor Relations Board, and (2) that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

In view of the fact that affidavits have been submitted both in support of and in opposition to the cross-motion, it will be treated as a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56, F. R. C. P. See Rule 12(b), F. R. C. P.

[Prior Proceedings]

The facts in this important and far-reaching case were fully set forth in my prior opinion [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,220] (Civil 140-156, December 19, 1958, — Fed. Supp. —) and need not be repeated here.

["Labor Dispute"]

In denying plaintiffs' motion for preliminary relief I held that it appeared, from the showing made before me, that the controversy was one involving or growing out of a "labor dispute" and that this court, therefore, had no jurisdiction under the Norris-LaGuardia Act, § 4, to grant injunctive relief. I also indicated that under the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 the case might be one which lay within the exclusive jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board and that, if this was so, only the Board, after following the procedure outlined in the Act, could petition the courts for injunctive relief.

The standards used to determine the motion for a preliminary injunction were necessarily quite different from those which must be applied to the motion at bar. Plaintiffs' failure to make out the clear and convincing showing which would entitle them to a preliminary injunction is not in any way determinative of the present motion nor does it mean that there are no issues of fact to be tried. Indeed, if substantial issues of fact requiring a trial have been raised this in itself is usually ground for denial of a motion for a preliminary injunction. Successfully resisting a motion for a preliminary injunction does not entitle a party to summary judgment without a trial. See Anderson-Friberg, Inc. v. Justin R. Clary & Son, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,852], D. C. S. D. N. Y., 98 F. Supp. 75, 83. See, also, Arnstein v. Porter, 2 Cir., 154 F. 2d 464.

[Issues of Fact]

The affidavits before me raise numerous issues of fact, and the case is therefore not one which can properly be disposed of on a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs contend that the defendants are not acting pursuant to a legitimate labor objective, but that they are motivated by political, international and governmental considerations and that there is therefore no "labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. While plaintiffs did not establish this to be so on the affidavits submitted in support of their motion for a preliminary injunction, they are entitled to an opportunity to present evidence bearing on this question upon the trial. If, as the plaintiffs claim, the defendants are not acting pursuant to a legitimate labor objective, they may not be entitled to the protection which the Norris-LaGuardia Act would otherwise give them. See Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797; I. P. C. Distributors v. Chicago Moving Pictures Machine Operators [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,107], D. C. N. D. Ill., 132 F. Supp. 294.

A question has also been raised as to whether the International Transport Workers Federation with which defendants are claimed to have combined is, in fact, a labor union acting in furtherance of a labor purpose. This is of course relevant in determining whether the defendants have combined with a labor or a non-labor group within the meaning of Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, supra. Plaintiffs are entitled to develop this more fully upon the trial.

Furthermore, it appears that some of the plaintiff corporations do not operate any ships which have been transferred from United States to foreign registry and have no United States affiliate which has ever transferred ships to foreign registry. Whether or not, under these circumstances, the National Labor Relations Board has exclusive primary jurisdiction over the controversy remains open for final determination. These complex questions should not be disposed of upon affidavits.

The mention of these issues of fact requiring a trial is sufficient to indicate that the motions for summary judgment should be denied. See Arnstein v. Porter, supra; Doehler Metal Furniture Co. v. United States, 2 Cir., 149 F. 2d 130. It is unnecessary to discuss any other issues of fact there may be.

[Dismissal Denied]

Defendants' motions for summary judgment are denied.

So ordered.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Antitrust Violations as Defenses—Where Alleged Antitrust Violation Is Collateral to Right Sued Upon.—A plaintiff's alleged illegal restraint of trade did not bar it from recovering the price of goods sold where the defendant did not deny that the price was fair and reasonable, and similar to the price charged to others. A provision of a contract of sale, even though it may be in violation of the antitrust laws, does not bar the right to recover the price of goods sold where that illegal

[Antitrust Violations as Defense]

LEVEY, Justice [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Plaintiff moves for summary judgment and for other relief. The complaint states two causes of action, the first an account between plaintiff and defendant and the second involving payment for alcoholic beverages sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant, during the period between May 14, 1958, and June 17, 1958, in the net sum of $128,944.85. Defendant in its answer, in addition to denials of liability, has pleaded five defenses, all concerning illegal practice by the plaintiff, to wit, restraint of trade. As a matter of fact, in no instance is there any denial by defendant that the price of the goods sold was fair and reasonable and similar to that charged to all other distributors and wholesalers. * * *

Finally, it is well settled that where a provision of a contract of sale, even though it may be in violation of anti-trust laws, is not an inherent part of the contract and is separable from the promise or obligation to pay for the goods sold, such illegal provision does not bar the right to recover the price (Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540; D. R. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Refining Co.; 236 U. S. 165; General Aniline & Film Corp'n v. Bayer [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,552], 305 N. Y. 479; Jamaica Sash & Door, Inc., v. Prudential Imp. Service, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,896], 137 N. Y. S. 2d 593). Accordingly, the motion for summary judgment is granted. The plaintiff's prayer for the other relief, as well as the cross-motion, is academic. Settle order.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Advertising or Offering for Sale—Reasonableness of Newspaper's Refusal to Publish Advertisements That Violate Fair Trade Laws—Newspaper's Liability for Publishing Unlawful Advertisements.—A trial court properly refused to direct a newspaper to publish advertisements which proposed sales in violation of fair trade agreements under the New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act. The advertising contract provided that the "subject matter, form, size, wording, illustrations, and typography of all advertising" were subject to the newspaper's approval. Under that contract, the newspaper was not required to publish the advertisements, even if it was assumed that a publisher who knowingly and willfully publishes an advertisement of articles to be sold in violation of the fair trade law is not liable to the manufacturer or complying retailers.

[Fair Trade—Advertising]

Before NOLAN, Presiding Justice; and WENZEL, MURPHY, HALLINAN, and KLEINFELD, Justices [In full text]: In an action by the owner of a retail store (1) to compel a publisher of a daily newspaper to accept an advertisement for publication and similar advertisements, (2) to enjoin during the existence of an advertising contract the rejection of similar advertisements, and (3) to recover damages, the appeal is (a) from an order denying the retailer's motion for an order directing the publisher to accept for immediate publication the rejected advertisement, and granting the publisher's crossmotion for summary judgment (Rules Civ. Prac., rule 113), and (b) from the judgment entered thereon. Order and judgment unanimously affirmed, with $10 costs and disbursements. The advertising contract provided that the "subject matter, form, size, wording, illustrations and typography of all advertising is subject to the approval of the publisher." Prior to the execution of the contract between the parties, respondent was notified by the manufacturer of the articles involved in the sale that they were subject to fair trade agreements under the Fair Trade Law of New York (General Business Law, Art. XXIV-A) and that newspapers carrying advertising in violation of that law were equally liable with a non-complying retailer to damage actions. Respondent concedes that it could not arbitrarily reject any advertising copy submitted under the contract and that its refusal to publish the advertisement was required to have a reasonable basis. Appellant does not deny that the proposed sale, which the advertising copy submitted involved, would have been in violation of the fair trade agreements under the Fair Trade Law. We shall assume that the publisher of a newspaper, who knowingly and willfully publishes an advertisement of articles to be sold in violation of the Fair Trade Law, is not liable to the manufacturer or to a complying retailer. Nevertheless, under the contract, respondent was not required to publish an advertisement for a sale which was to be held in violation of the Fair Trade Law (Amalgamated Furniture Factories v. Rochester Times-Union, 128 Misc. 673, 675).

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Restrictive Covenant in Sale of Ship—Covenant Not to Compete—Reasonableness As to Time and Territory.—A restrictive covenant in a bill of sale which provided that a ship would not be operated by the purchaser in the ferry trade between Cuba and certain states of the United States for a period of ten years was reasonably limited as to time and territory. Therefore, it did not violate Section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Running for ten years only, the restriction limited the vessel's use in carrying cargo to Cuba in railroad cars, vehicles, or containers. It did not restrict the vessel's use in any other trade anywhere in the world. In addition, the covenantor and its successors were free to use any other ship with no restriction.

Also, the legality of that covenant was properly before the trial court. The plaintiff, a mortgagee seeking a foreclosure decree permitting it to sell the ship free of all restrictions, had contended that the restrictive covenant was illegal under the Sherman Act and had moved for summary judgment on "all the issues." It could not ask for summary judgment on the issues raised by its adversaries while, at the same time, withholding some of those issues.

Before HUTCHESON, Chief Judge, and TUTTLE and JONES, Circuit Judges.

[Restrictive Covenant]

HUTCHESON, Chief Judge [In full text]: Appealing from a summary judgment entered in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage on a vessel, the Abaco Queen, plaintiff-appellant, challenging as erroneous the findings and conclusions[1] of the district judge, that the restrictive covenant in the bill of sale to the Queen against its use in the specified trade was valid and of binding force against the mortgagee and any purchaser at the foreclosure sale, seeks a reversal and rendition or at least a reversal and remand of the judgment giving effect to these findings and conclusions.

[Mortgage Foreclosure]

The action which resulted in the judgment under attack was begun July 6, 1957, by plaintiff-appellant, Tri-Fi, the mortgagee, as an ordinary proceeding to foreclose its mortgage. Original parties to it were the mortgagor, Tropical Marine Enterprises, Inc. (T. M. E.), T. M. T. Trailer Ferry Co., Inc., parent of T. M. E., and insolvent guarantor of the mortgage indebtedness, and one Gibbs Corp. (Gibbs), a junior lienor.

[Intervention]

On September 4, 1957, appellee Owens Illinois Glass Corp. (Owens) intervened, alleging: that on April 18, 1956, it had purchased the Queen from West India Fruit and Steamship Co. (West India), subject to a restrictive covenant;[2] that on November 20, 1956, it had sold the vessel to T. M. E., subject to the covenant; and that Tri-Fi had taken the mortgage with knowl-

[1] As pertinent here, these are:

Impleaded defendant West India Fruit & Steamship Co., Inc., chiefly engaged in car ferry operations between the United States and Cuba, sold the vessel now known as "Abaco Queen" to National Container Corporation (now intervener Owens-Illinois Glass Co.) in January, 1956. The bill of sale contained a restrictive covenant that the vessel, for 10 years, would not be operated between ports or places in the States of Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, or any one or more of them, and ports or places on the Island of Cuba, as a car ferry, train ferry, truck ferry, auto ferry, or passenger ferry, or any combination thereof, or in any service or trade between said ports or places for the transportation of passengers, or of cargo in trailers, containers, rail cars, automobile or trucks. The covenant also provided that should it be violated National Container (now Owens-Illinois Glass Co.) would be liable to West India in the sum of $1,250,000.00.

"National Container later resold the vessel to defendant Tropical Marine Enterprises, Inc., with the same restrictive covenant. Plaintiff Tri-Continental Financial Corporation financed the transaction with knowledge of the covenant in the bill of sale and took a mortgage on the vessel (which mortgage is here sought to be foreclosed) although the mortgage made no reference to the restriction.

"Plaintiff now brings this suit to foreclose the mortgage, the defendant Tropical Marine Enterprises, Inc. interposes no defense thereto and plaintiff is entitled to a decree of foreclosure subject only to the question of (a) whether the vessel should be sold subject to the restrictive convenant and (b) * * *."

"* * * West India, by affidavit, makes it clear it would never have sold the vessel could the vessel have been used in competition with West India. The Court is convinced that the restrictive covenant is reasonable in time, territory and extent, and is binding on any purchase of the vessel who has notice thereof. A decision of the United States Supreme Court upholding an almost identical restriction is Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 64. To much the same effect is Cincinnati P. B. S. & P. Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179. Under these cases there is no violation of the anti-trust laws. See also West Shore Restaurant Corp. v. Turk (Fla. 1958) 101 So. (2d) 123, and Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber (1887) 106 N. Y. 473, 13 NE 419.

"The Court specifically holds that not only was this a valid covenant as between the original parties, but that it is an equitable servitude, valid and binding on subsequent purchasers with notice. See Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phil. Ch. 774, 41 Eng. Rep. 1143 (1848) Capitol Records v. Mercury Records Corp. (C. A. 2) 221 F. (2d) 657; Lord Strathcona Steamship Co. v. Dominion Coal Co. (1926) A. C. 108 (P. C.) where the English Privy Council pointed out that the vessel was not bought as a free ship and that the buyer could not extinguish the right in the vessel of which he had notice; Great Lakes & St. Lawrence Transportation Co. v. Scranton Coal Co. (C. A. 7) 239 Fed. 603; and Palmer v. Chamberlin (C. A. 5) 191 F. (2d) 532.

"On consideration thereof, it is "Considered, Ordered and Adjudged that the motion for summary judgment be and the same is hereby granted since there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, provided that plaintiff's mortgage is superior to the Gibbs Corporation lien, and that the sale be subject to the restrictive covenant aforesaid."

[2] This provided inter alia:

". . . as a part of the consideration inducing the seller to enter into the agreement for the sale and transfer of the vessel [Abaco Queen] pursuant to this contract, the buyer, for a period of ten years from the date of delivery of the vessel, will not operate said vessel, or cause or permit said vessel to be operated, or sell or charter said vessel to be operated, between ports or places in the State of Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, and edge of, and subject to the covenant. So alleging Owens prayed that the decree of foreclosure provide that the sale of the Queen be made subject to the restrictive covenant, and that it should be binding on the purchaser.

[Sherman Antitrust Act]

Tri-Fi, admitting that it had taken its mortgage with notice of the covenant not to compete and opposing the relief sought by West India and Owens, prayed that the decree of foreclosure permit the Abaco Queen to be sold free of all restrictions on its use. Tri-Fi asserted two issues in defense, viz., (1) that the covenant on the Abaco Queen is, as a matter of law, not enforceable against Tri-Fi as a non-assenting mortgagee, i. e., that such covenants do not run with chattels and (2) that the terms of the covenant not to compete on the Abaco Queen constituted illegal restraints of trade under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. Secs. 1 and 2).

Thereafter West India, made a party by Owens, filed a plea and prayer in general effect the same as the one Owens had filed, except that, unlike Owens, it sought a declaratory judgment that the covenant was not illegal under the Sherman Act. Tri-Fi then moved on the pleadings and the undisputed facts [3] for "an order (1) granting plaintiff summary judgment against defendant, Tropical Marine Enterprises, Inc., for the relief demanded in the Complaint (with the amount of attorneys' fees to which plaintiff is entitled, subsequently to be determined), (2) granting plaintiff summary judgment against defendant, Gibbs Corporation, for the relief demanded in the Com-

Louisiana, or any one or more of them, and parts or places on the Island of Cuba, as a car ferry, train ferry, truck ferry, auto ferry, or passenger ferry, or any combination thereof, or in any service or trade between said ports or places for the transportation of passengers, or of cargo in trailers, containers, rail cars, automobiles or trucks.

"The Buyer agrees that any subsequent sale of the vessel by it or by successor transferees shall be made subject to all the terms, conditions, and restrictions contained herein, and that at or before the vessel shall be transferred to any subsequent purchaser, it shall obtain and deliver to Seller, or cause to be obtained and delivered to Seller, agreement in writing from any such purchaser that said vessel shall not be operated between the ports or places as hereinabove set forth.

"In the event that the buyer and/or any subsequent purchaser of the vessel, whether or not such purchasers have agreed to the conditions contained herein, shall operate, or cause said vessel to be operated in the trade prohibited by this agreement, then and in that event the buyer shall pay the seller as liquidated damages and not as a penalty, the sum of $1,250,000.00. In addition to said payment, the seller may have relief by injunction to prevent operation of the vessel in the trades hereinabove described, together with any other relief provided by law for enforcement of this agreement."

[3] Appellee West India Fruit & Steamship Co., Inc. has, since 1946, been a steamship carrier of general cargo in railroad cars between the United States and Cuba. It operates railroad car ferries between Palm Beach and Havana and between Belle Chasse (Louisiana) and Havana, and a passenger and automobile ferry between Key West and Havana. It serves shippers throughout the central and eastern United States and competes with at least ten general cargo carriers serving Cuba through East and Gulf Coast ports from New York to Houston.

In 1956 West India sold one of its vessels, the SS Abaco Queen (ex-Antonio Maceo) for $750,000.00 to National Container Corp. for use in transporting wood pulp between Jacksonville and the Bahamas. The parties understood that West India would not sell the vessel if she were to be operated in the ferry trade between Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, or Louisiana and Cuba, and National Container did not intend such use. The contract of sale provided as set out in note 2 supra, and further provided that in the event the vessel should ever be operated in the restricted trade, then National Container would pay West India $1,250,000 as liquidated damages.

Running for ten years only the restriction does not limit use of the vessel either for the carriage of cargo to Cuba otherwise than in railroad cars, vehicles, or containers, or for any use whatever in any other trade in the United States, or anywhere in the world. And the covenantor and its successors are free to use any other vessel with no restriction.

Late in 1956 National Container sold the vessel to appellee Tropical Marine Enterprises (TME) for $875,000.00. In the contract of sale, TME bound itself by a restriction substantially the same as that upon National Container and agreed to pay National Container $1,250,000 as liquidated damages if the restriction were breached by TME or by any subsequent purchaser. At about this time National Container was merged into appellee Owens-Illinois Glass Co.

To finance the purchase, TME borrowed $775,000.00 from appellant (Tri-Fi) upon a note secured by a chattel mortgage on the ship. As part of the consideration for the loan, Tri-Fi received a warrant or option to purchase 193,750 shares of the stock of TMT Trailer Ferry, Inc. (TMT) an affiliate of TME. Tri-Fi entered into the loan agreement, made the loan, and accepted the chattel mortgage and warrant with full knowledge of the existence and terms of the covenant. This is admitted.

plaint; (3) granting summary judgment in plaintiff's favor on the issues raised by the petition of Owens-Illinois Glass Company, the answer to that petition and counterclaim of plaintiff, and the petition of West India Fruit and Steamship Co., Inc., on the ground that the restrictive agreement relied upon by Owens-Illinois and West India do not 'run with the boat' so as to bind plaintiff or the purchaser at a foreclosure sale; * * *". (Record p. 142.)

[Judgment of Court Below]

The district judge rejecting plaintiff's contentions and embodying in the judgment of foreclosure provisions directly contrary thereto, appellant is here arguing with earnestness and conviction that in so holding and adjudging, the district judge went counter to established law.

[Issues on Appeal]

With equal earnestness, insisting that it did not ask for a summary judgment on the anti-trust issue, it urges upon us that in holding and adjudging that the covenant was not in violation of the Sherman Act and illegal, the district judge erred (1) procedurally (a) in dealing with that issue, though plaintiff did not present it for summary determination, and (b) in concluding that in respect to it, there was no issue as to any material fact, and (2) as a matter of substantive law, in holding (a) that the covenant is reasonable in time, territory and extent, (b) that it does not violate the anti-trust laws; and (c) that it is binding on the mortgagee and will be on the purchaser at foreclosure sale.

Taking no position with respect to the validity of the restriction under the Sherman Act, except to assert that appellant, for the purpose of the determination of its motion for summary judgment, conceded its validity in that respect, but taking strong issue with appellant's position that the finding and judgment, that the mortgagee took subject to the restrictive covenant and the purchaser at the foreclosure sale would likewise take subject thereto, were erroneous, appellee Owens is here insisting that the judgment must be affirmed.

[Ultimate Issue]

Posting the ultimate issue for decision below and here as whether the covenant between vendor and vendee of the Queen restricting her use in respect to a specific trade is binding upon the mortgagee who with full knowledge of the covenant loaned the vendee the money necessary to purchase the vessel and consequently is binding upon the purchaser at the sale, appellee West India insists that this issue and all the facets of it, including the validity of the covenant against the claim that it violated the anti-trust laws, was properly before the court for decision, the parties, in support of their respective views, its cross action and the intervention of Owens, and was properly decided by the district judge on the undisputed facts.

[Discretion of District Court]

Upon the interesting questions thus presented for decision, the parties, in support of their respective views, have in briefs and arguments, exhibiting a high order of advocacy, marshalled the facts and canvassed the applicable law, and, greatly aided thereby, we have reached the firm conclusion that the district judge was right in permitting the introduction of parties into the foreclosure suit and the tender for declaratory judgment thereon of issues other than those necessary to the mere foreclosure of the mortgage lien.

This is not to say that, since under the general doctrine, "In a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage lien, while it is proper to make anyone claiming under the mortgagor a party to such foreclosure proceedings, it is not allowed to put in issue the mortgagor's title",[4] i. e., the foreclosure passes the mortgaged interest, it neither adds to nor detracts therefrom, we have not had some difficulty in concluding that the district judge was right in determining that there was an actual controversy as to the matters introduced into the foreclosure suit by the pleadings of the parties. It is to say, though, that, considering the wideness of the decretion vested in the district judge by the declaratory judgment statute, Sec. 2201, Title 28 U. S. C. and Rule 57, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 28 U. S. C.,[5] we conclude that the district judge did not abuse his discretion in proceeding as he did to a judgment which, not at all undertaking to add to or subtract from the mortgagor's interest foreclosed, merely declared the existing nature and condition of that interest.

[Request for Summary Judgment]

For the reasons hereafter stated, we think that he was right (1) in regarding all of the issues decided by him as properly before him for decision, (2) in the conclusions that he reached as to these issues, and (3) in the judgment entered in accordance therewith. We recognize that appellants present and argue, not queryingly and tentatively but positively and with confidence, that the anti-trust question was not in issue in the summary judgment proceeding, and we have no disposition to treat this contention lightly. We think, however, that, in the light of the proceedings below taken as a whole, including the pleadings of the parties and particularly plaintiff's motion seeking specifically summary judgment for debt and foreclosure and "summary judgment in plaintiff's favor on the issues raised by the petition of Owens Illinois Glass Co., the answer to that petition and counter claim of plaintiff, and the petition of West India Fruit and Steamship Co., Inc." appellant's reliance on Prepo Corp. v. Pressure Can Corp., 234 F. (2d) 700 will not do, and that its position may not be maintained.

It is true that the ground put forward by plaintiff to support the claim "for summary judgment on all the issues raised" by the litigants is "that the restrictive agreement relied on by Owens Illinois and West India does not 'run with the boat' so as to bind plaintiff or the purchaser at a foreclosure sale", and that the ground that the covenant was illegal under the Sherman Act was not specifically put forward in the motion. This, however, makes against, not for, appellant's present position that, though in its motion it asked for a judgment "in plaintiff's favor on the issues raised" by the pleadings of its adversaries it was at the same time withholding submission of some of those issues. In short, when it is recognized, as it must be, that a final judgment in the suit for debt and foreclosure could not have been entered with the reservations now asserted and there is added to this the specific prayer of the motion that judgment be entered in its favor on all the issues, it appears, we think, in the plainest kind of way beyond the power of argument to change it, that appellant's position, that the request for summary judgment and the granting of the summary judgment were with legally effective reservations, is in fact and in law wholly untenable. Floyd v. Franklin, 245 F. (2d) 896.

When, these procedural questions determined against appellant, we reach those going to the merits, we think it equally clear that its position on both aspects of the case, the validity and the binding force upon it of the covenant, rest upon an approach to the decision of the case which finds no support in the record and none in the applicable law.

[Reasonableness of Restrictive Covenant]

As we understand them, these are its positions as to the anti-trust issue; (1) that the court erred in holding that there was no issue as to any material fact; (2) that the covenant is reasonable in time, territory and extent; and (3) that enforcement of it does not, and will not, violate the anti-trust laws.

Of these, it is sufficient to say: that every fact, which is material here in the determination of these questions, clearly appears from the pleadings, the undisputed facts, and the terms of the instrument itself; that, measured by rules governing such ancillary agreements,[6] the covenant, limited as it is in time and in scope, is, in every respect important here, reasonable in time, territory and extent, and of no further extent than is necessary to protect West India; and that the authorities are almost uniform that such a restriction does not violate the antitrust laws. It will serve no useful purpose, therefore, to discuss these cases. Some of them are cited in the conclusions of the district judge, note 1, supra. Others cited in the briefs are Chicago Sugar Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,449], 176 F. (2d) 1, cert. denied 338 U. S. 948; *Cinn. P. B. S. & P. Packet Co. v. The quotations following from Florida cases are typical of the general attitude of American courts on this question:

> "Contracts entered into between parties, having as their objectives the removal of a rival competitor in a business are not to be regarded as contracts in restraint of trade, because they do not close the field of competition but affect only the parties to the agreement." Janet Realty Corp. v. Hoffman's Inc., 17 So. (2d) 453.

In the recent case of West Shore Restaurant Corp. v. Turk, 101 So. (2d) 123, the Supreme Court of Florida quoted approvingly from a Colorado decision as follows:

> "'Where one is so lost to a sense of moral obligation as to accept a full consideration for his stock in trade and good-will, upon express condition that he refrain from again entering that business for a limited time, within a certain territory, and then immediately, having pocketed the fruits of the agreement, deliberately and willfully ignores the controlling condition thereof, courts should certainly not hunt for legal excuse to uphold him in such moral delinquence. Barrows v. McMurty Mfg. Co., 54 Colo. 432, 449, 131 P. 430, 436.'"

Ancillary restrictions of this kind have, therefore, under facts such as appear here, been uniformly sustained as valid.

[Covenants "Running with the Land"]

We come then to the issue which appellant admits was directly joined and decided against it below, to say that we think appellant makes too much of early and overtechnical common law considerations distinguishing between covenants with respect to chattels and those with respect to land, too little of equitable considerations in dealing with both. As Owens in its brief points out, appellant has stated the question so as to make its and West India's right to the protection of a court of equity against breach of the covenant depend upon whether the restrictive covenant involved "runs with the boat" in the sense that certain covenants related to real estate have been considered by the courts to "run with the land."

[Equitable Considerations]

The position of Owens and West India is that their right to protection at the hands of a court of equity depends not upon whether the covenant can be considered as "running with the boat" but upon principles of right and justice recognized by courts of equity under the influence of which a mere personal covenant restricting the use of property "not running with the land" or "with the boat" will be enforced in equity against purchasers taking with notice to the extent that the use of the property in violation of the covenant should be prevented by injunction or other appropriate equitable remedy. In support they cite the many cases collected in the annotation to Oliver v. Hewitt (Va.), 60 S. E. (2d) 1, 23 A. L. R. (2d) 516; Vetzel v. Brown (Fla.), 86 So. (2d) 138; and 32 C. J. "Injunctions", Sec. 315, p. 203, where it is stated:

> "Where restrictive covenant with respect to the use of property, real or personal, is valid, it may be enforced by injunction but only as against one under obligation not to violate the covenant. Since a purchaser with notice gets title subject to the restriction he may be enjoined from using the property in violation of the restriction."[1]

Finally, they insist, citing cases in support, that if, as appellant seems to argue, the question of the validity of the covenant as against the mortgagee and the purchaser at a sale under it should be determined upon whether the covenant should be regarded not as a merely personal one but as one appurtenant to and running with the vessel, there is ample authority to support a reasoned view that even then appellant would be wrong.

[1] To the same effect see 43 C. J. S. "Injunctions" Sec. 87 at page 579 and 28 Am. Jur. "Injunctions" Sec. 89 et seq and Secs. 101, 102, 103, and 104, "restrictions on trade or business", where the reason for granting such injunctions is stated to be to prevent the interference with obligations justly assumed by persons knowing of their existence. Cf. Lorillard v. Weingarden, 280 Fed. 238; In Re: Waterson, 48 F. (2d) 704; Waring v. WDAS Broadcasting Co., 194 ALR 631; Weissman v. Lincoln Corp., 76 So. (2d) 478; Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phil. Ch. 774, 41 Eng. Rep. 1143; Capitol Records v. Mercury Records, 221 F. (2d) 657.

The case, however, is not to be determined on that ground. It is rather to be determined by whether, under circumstances of the kind disclosed here, where the mortgagee, having itself furnished the money to make the trade with full knowledge of the covenant, is now undertaking to deprive the beneficiary of its benefits and at the same time to impose upon Owens, with whom it arranged to make the mortgage, the burden of the heavy loss which will follow its breach, equity will prevent appellant from taking this plainly inequitable, if not unconscionable course by holding it estopped[8] or otherwise bound by it in equity.

[Technical Distinction]

Under the circumstances obtaining here, a great deal more should be put forward by plaintiff, in support of its claim, to rid the vessel and the parties dealing with it of the covenant, than the dry as dust and technical common law distinction between chattels and realty. The distinction, which has its proper force in some situations, has no place or force here since the judgment did not attempt to add anything to or take anything from the binding force of the covenant but merely declared and applied to the facts of the case the controlling equitable principles.

The judgment is Affirmed.

TUTTLE, Circuit Judge, Dissenting [In full text]: With deference I dissent from that part of the opinion that holds that the appellant's mortgage is subject to the restrictive covenant to which it was not a party. The Court places its decision squarely upon the ground that it would be "inequitable, if not unconscionable" for the mortgagee of the vessel to be permitted to sell it at foreclosure sale freed of all restrictive covenants.

Believing, as I do, that there is a rational basis of continuing validity for the traditional difference between the principle of law which permits the burdening of real estate with restrictive covenants and that which favors the sale of tangible personal property unencumbered by even known restrictive covenants, I think it no more accords with equity and good conscience to permit the owner, Owens, to sit at the closing table and accept the purchase price from Tri-Continental on a mortgage executed by the purchaser without requiring inclusion of the restriction in the mortgage and thereafter to insist that it is binding on Tri-Continental than for Tri-Continental to be permitted to advance the money which is paid to Owens on a mortgage which is silent as to the restriction, but which is known to it, and later foreclose and sell the mortgaged property free of restriction.

In short, I think no such equity is here established to warrant the fashioning of a rule of law not heretofore shown to be applicable in the sale of chattels.

I would reverse and remand for a dismissal of the intervention.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief and Treble Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Injury to Plaintiff—Acquisitions of Stock or Assets Under Section 7 of Clayton Act.—A manufacturer of steel products (including two of its subsidiaries) which allegedly acquired various companies in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act was entitled to a summary judgment where the plaintiff merely alleged that as a result of such acquisitions, he, as a purchaser and user of steel products, has suffered and will continue to suffer damage. The plaintiff failed to show anything from which it could be deduced that anything that the defendants had done had injured him. At the most, the plaintiff described a situation that could affect the economy of the nation as a whole. He had no power to correct this under the antitrust laws, since that is the function of the Attorney General. The plaintiff apparently claimed that "things" would be better if there were more small steel companies operating; however, this would not absolve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving direct damage to himself as a result of the defendants' acts.

Memorandum

[Alleged Acquisitions]

PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, District Judge [In full text]: The complaint here seeks injunctive relief and treble damages under Section 7 of the Clayton Act (Title U. S. C. Sec. 18). Its allegations, summarized, are that:

Plaintiff, who is engaged in making and selling steel products, is a purchaser of steel sheets, galvanized steel sheets and steel angles. Defendants, Inland Steel Company (Inland) and its subsidiaries, Inland Steel Products Company (Products), and Joseph T. Ryerson & Son, Inc. (Ryerson) manufacture, sell, and distribute steel products. Inland which was incorporated in 1917 has been engaged for many years in a program of expansion which has been accomplished by its acquisition of entire or partial control of other related corporations. Inland itself manufactures and sells steel and iron. It "acquired" defendant Ryerson, a steel service organization, as a subsidiary in 1935, and Products, which manufactures steel, in 1936. Inland also acquired, and either merged with itself or used the facilities of, Wilson & Bennett Manufacturing Company (1939), Cleveland Steel Barrel Co. (1955), and Arthur C. Harvey Co. (1955). Over the years since 1917, it has also acquired varying degrees of control or interest in seventeen companies engaged in mining ore, seven companies that mine coal and produce coke, two that mine limestone and flourspar, as well as a rolling mill company, a rail rerolling mill, and a steel post company. Some of these companies were dissolved after Inland acquired them. Primarily as a result of all these "acquisitions", Inland's production has shown a phenomenal increase, and in fact its "growth has been much greater than that of the aggregate of the entire steel industry." Another result has been that the competition acquired by it has been eliminated; Inland's competitors can no longer sell to or (in varying degrees) obtain iron ore, coal, or limestone from various of the "acquired" companies; and purchasers of steel can no longer buy from others. The final allegation is that "As a result of the acquisitions made by Inland, which acquisitions have substantially lessened competition or have tended to create a monopoly, the plaintiff, as a purchaser and user of steel products, has suffered, and is now suffering, and will continue to suffer damage."

[Summary Judgment Motion]

Defendants have taken plaintiff's deposition and relying on this and on the complaint, they have filed a motion for summary judgment which is now before the court (Rule 56(c), F. R. C. P.). They contend that the complaint fails adequately to allege damage to the plaintiff and thus fails to state a cause of action, and that the deposition demonstrates that the plaintiff in fact has suffered no damage which can be traced to defendants' actions.

[Damage to Plaintiff]

Individual damage to the plaintiff, aside from any injury to the public as a whole, is the essence of a private suit under the anti-trust laws. The remedy given to private persons is only for one who has been "injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of the anti-trust laws". (Title 15 U. S. C., Sec. 15). Further, the alleged violations must be the direct and proximate cause of the injury (Tepler v. Frick [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,482], 204 F. (2d) 506 (2nd Cir., 1953); Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 8 (1913)). The complaint here totally fails to allege anything from which it could be deduced that anything defendants have done has injured the plaintiff. The most that can be said of it is that it describes a situation that may affect the economy of the nation as a whole. The plaintiff has no power to correct this under the anti-trust laws (Jack v. Armour & Co., 291 Fed. 741, 745 (8th Cir., 1923)).

As this court remarked in another case, that is the function of the Attorney General (Robinson v. Lull [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,521], 145 F. Supp. 134 (N. D. Ill. 1956)).

Plaintiff's deposition is equally devoid of any showing of damage to him. On the contrary, the most he offers is a vague feeling that things would be better if there were more small steel companies operating. Whether or not this is true as a tenet of philosophy or economics, it does not absolve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving direct damage to him by the defendants' acts.

[Summary Judgment Proper]

There is no doubt that a summary judgment is proper in this type of action (United States v. United States Gypsum Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,729], 340 U. S. 76, 82 (1950); Marion County Cooperative Ass'n v. Carnation Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,792], 214 F. (2d) 557, 560 (8th Cir., 1954)). Here plaintiff does not deny this and further does not assert that there is any "genuine issue as to any material fact". On the contrary, he too relies on his deposition. "It has been said that a summary judgment should be granted, if under the facts, the court would be required to direct a verdict for the moving party". (Hurd v. Sheffield Steel Corp., 181 F. (2d) 269, 271 (8th Cir., 1950)). Certainly that is the case here in view of the complete absence from either the complaint or the deposition of any showing of damage to the plaintiff.

The motion of defendants for a summary judgment will be allowed.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Refusal to Sell to Dealer Which Did Not Sell at Suggested Resale Prices—Legality.—A manufacturer of watch bands did not attempt to engage in an unlawful combination and conspiracy to prevent and restrict the sale of products manufactured by its competitors, to discriminate against the plaintiff as a wholesaler, or to compel the plaintiff to enter into an illegal contract for fixing illegal prices. The manufacturer had advised the wholesaler that it did not wish to sell to wholesalers who cut prices and do not sell at factory suggested resale prices and then informed the wholesaler that it would no longer sell its bands to the wholesaler. The manufacturer's refusal to sell was not the result of any combination or conspiracy and did not have any effect on prices charged to the public. There was no evidence that the manufacturer contracted with any retailer, wholesaler, or competitor for the maintenance of resale prices and no evidence that the manufacturer refused to deal with any other wholesaler. Furthermore, the wholesaler was not damaged, and there was no evidence that the public was injured.

Findings of Fact

[Parties]

JULIUS H. MINER, District Judge [In full text]: 1. Plaintiff Becken is an Illinois corporation having its principal place of business at Chicago, Illinois, and is engaged in the wholesale jewelry business in interstate commerce.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

2. Defendant Gemex is a New Jersey corporation having its principal place of business at Union, New Jersey, and is engaged in the manufacture and sale of jewelry products, including metal watch bracelets or bands, to the wholesale jewelry trade in interstate commerce.

[Business Relationship]

3. Plaintiff, as a wholesaler, has purchased watch bands intermittently over the past twenty years from the defendant, as the manufacturer. In 1953 or 1954 plaintiff again commenced buying defendant's watch bands for resale as an additional line to the other watch band lines then and now being handled by plaintiff.

[Refusal To Deal—Prices]

4. On August 2, 1956, representatives of defendant met with representatives of plaintiff and advised them that defendant did not wish to sell to wholesalers who cut prices and did not sell at factory suggested resale prices. At this meeting plaintiff made certain recriminatory remarks to the effect that defendant, as a manufacturer, could not tell plaintiff, a wholesaler, how to run its business. Reply recriminatory remarks were made to the effect that plaintiff could not tell defendant how to run its business. At this meeting defendant informed plaintiff that it would no longer sell its watch bands to plaintiff, and thereupon, closed plaintiff's account.

5. Defendant thereupon made arrangements to return for credit certain of its watch band items then in the inventory of plaintiff, some of which in turn were later returned to plaintiff.

6. There is no evidence that the discontinuance of defendant's sales to plaintiff had any effect whatsoever on the prices charged to the public for defendant's products by others.

7. Defendant's refusal to sell was not the result of any combination, conspiracy, or attempt to combine and conspire by defendant and anyone.

8. There is no evidence that defendant had before or has since refused to sell to any wholesaler other than plaintiff.

9. There is no evidence that at any time defendant or its representatives contracted or attempted to contract or agree with any retailer in the jewelry business for the maintenance of any suggested resale prices.

10. Defendant did not combine, conspire, or attempt to combine or conspire, or to enter into any agreement, understanding or concert of action with its wholesalers to maintain or fix artificial resale prices.

11. Defendant did not combine or conspire with any of its competitors for any purpose.

12. Defendant did not attempt to fix prices on merchandise manufactured by its competitors.

[Injury]

13. Plaintiff was not damaged as a result of defendant's refusal to sell watch bands to plaintiff subsequent to August 2, 1956.

14. There is no evidence that the public was in any way injured by defendant's refusal to sell watch bands to plaintiff.

Conclusions of Law

1. The evidence as a whole does not support the allegations of Paragraphs 8 and 9 of the complaint. Defendant did not attempt to engage in a wrongful and unlawful combination and conspiracy to prevent and restrict the sale of products manufactured by its competitors nor to discriminate against plaintiff as a wholesaler nor to compel plaintiff to enter into an illegal contract or agreement for fixing illegal prices.

2. No violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act has been shown; no violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act has been shown; no violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act has been shown.

3. Plaintiff has not been damaged and is not entitled to any relief.

4. The complaint should be dismissed with prejudice and award of costs.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Restrictions on Injunctive Relief Under Clayton Act, Section 20, and Anti-Injunction Act—Exemption Under Clayton Act, Section 6—Combining with Non-Labor Group.—A motion to dismiss an action charging that certain locals of a labor union conspired with an association of food retailers to suppress competition among retail meat markets in the Chicago, Illinois, area, to limit the retail sale of fresh meats to designated hours, and to monopolize, for members of the union, the retail portion of the trade in fresh meats was denied. The fact that a labor union is a defendent under proceedings for violation of the antitrust laws does not, per se, bring it within the exemptions contained in Section 6 of the Clayton Act or Section 20 of the Clayton Act. Congress did not intend, by the Clayton or the Norris-LaGuardia Act, that labor unions could aid non-labor groups to create business monopolies and control the marketing of goods and services. The Norris-LaGuardia Act was specifically intended to protect the normal activities of workingmen to form a union and to act together to further their interests as members of the union, though such activities might, to some extent, affect interstate commerce; however, where labor unions combine upon objects outside the field of labor relations, they become amenable to the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063, 2101.110, 2101.248, 2101.265, 2111.102.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Injunctive Relief from Violations of Antitrust Laws—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Sherman Act Violations—Interstate Commerce.—A complaint charging that certain locals of a labor union conspired with an association of food retailers to suppress competition among retail meat markets, prevent the sale of fresh meat before 9 A. M. or after 6 P. M. Mondays through Saturdays, and to monopolize, for members of the union, the retail trade in such meats, stated a valid cause of action under the antitrust laws. Restrictive union rules which limit market distribution would seem to be within the purview of the antitrust laws if the conditions of interstate commerce and intent are met. The complaint alleged a joinder of purpose between the union and independent employers which sufficiently placed in doubt the objectives sought by the union. It was also sufficiently alleged that the restriction on the retailers' operating hours had the effect of restraining interstate commerce. Local restraints having an adverse effect on such commerce are within the prohibition of the antitrust laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9022.20, 9022.75.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Violations as Defense—Participation in Alleged Violations as Defense to Antitrust Action—Pari Delicto.—A motion to dismiss an antitrust action on the ground that the plaintiff was a party to the allegedly unlawful contract and, therefore, in pari delicto, was denied. While a party to an illegal contract usually cannot invoke the aid of a court in its enforcement, a party will not, as a general rule, be barred from setting up the illegality of a contract that is violative of a statute, particularly when doing so will further the public interest which the statute was designed to protect.

Memorandum

[Labor Unions—Alleged Conspiracy with Non-Labor Group]

LA BUY, District Judge [In full text]: This declaratory judgment suit is brought pursuant to the treble damage section of the antitrust laws, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15, charging that certain locals of the defendant union and their officers conspired with the Associated Food Retailers of Greater

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Chicago, Inc., an association of independent retail stores, to suppress competition among retail meat markets in the Chicago area, and to prevent the sale of fresh meats, i.e., beef, veal, lamb, mutton and pork and meat products before 9 A. M. or after 6 P. M. Mondays through Saturdays, and to monopolize for members of the defendant unions the retail portion of the trade or commerce in such meats; that pursuant to such conspiracy, defendants agreed

(1) that no one be permitted to make retail sales of said fresh meats before 9 A. M. or after 6 P. M.;

(2) that union members be prohibited from participating in any sale of such meats before 9 A. M. or after 6 P. M.;

(3) that no one be permitted to sell such meats outside these hours with or without employment of union members;

(4) that defendant members of the Associated Food Retailers agreed among themselves to insist that all collective bargaining agreements between them and defendant union, or between defendant union and plaintiff or other operators, contain the prohibition of retail sales of fresh meats outside these hours;

(5) that Associated conspired and agreed with other defendants that neither plaintiff nor any other merchandiser is to be permitted to compete with them by operating self-service meat markets between 6 P. M. and 9 P. M.;

(6) that defendant unions have acted as the enforcing agent of the conspiracy.

It is also alleged that in 1957 when negotiations on new agreements were required because of the expiration of the old agreement, the plaintiff insisted the clause relating to restriction of hours of operation was illegal, and that it was willing and able to operate its self-service markets after 6 P. M. on one or more nights a week without requiring any members of defendant union to work such hours; that defendant Associated refused to enter into an agreement to permit night openings and defendant union supported and abetted such refusal; that defendant union threatened to strike and picket any operator who refused to sign such contract and under compulsion of said conspiracy plaintiff did sign the agreement; that in May 1958 defendant Kelly, an officer of Local 546 of defendant union, at a meeting with representatives of market operators in this area reported that he and other defendants had learned in several instances markets had been operated outside the designated hours, and that if such continued there would be no arbitration procedure followed and that butchers would be removed from service in such stores.

[Alleged Effects of Conspiracy]

It is further alleged that the effect of this combination and conspiracy has been the unlawful restraint of (1) plaintiff's right to sell fresh precut meats at reasonable hours; (2) competition among retail meat dealers and consequent denial to the public of the benefits thereof, and that the cost of meats at retail in Chicago has been held higher than it otherwise would be; (3) interstate trade and commerce of meats and meat products in that a major part of all of said goods is produced in states other than the State of Illinois and is shipped in interstate commerce from such states, and, insofar as plaintiff is concerned in 1957 its sales of meat, poultry and fish was $85,000,000 and approximately 77.5% of such products retailed by it originate outside the State of Illinois; and (4) plaintiff's right to freely use its property and facilities with a consequent loss of profits in excess of $25,000.

[Relief Sought]

It is requested that the court declare the alleged conspiracy and combination an unlawful restraint of trade and commerce; that defendants be enjoined from continuing the same; that the restriction on hours of marketing be declared illegal, null and void and that defendants be enjoined from enforcing the same; that the defendants be enjoined from harassing, intimidating, hindering, striking or picketing plaintiff for the purpose of restricting the hours of marketing.

[Working Hours]

In the pertinent parts to be considered here, the collective bargaining agreement in Article 4 covers Working Hours and other conditions of employment expressly confining the basic work day to eight hours, work to begin at 9 A. M. and stop at 6 P. M. Article 5 which follows covers Market Operating Hours, and is the clause which is challenged in these proceedings. It provides "Market operating hours shall be 9 A. M. to 6 P. M. Monday through Saturday, inclusive. No customer shall be served before or after the hours set forth above, except that customers in the market at closing time shall be served."

[Motion to Dismiss]

Defendants have filed a motion to dismiss the complaint for the reason (1) that because the complaint alleges the clause restricting market hours is null and void, the plaintiff being a party to the contract is in pari delicto and can not recover any damages; and, in any event has suffered no injury; (2) the alleged activities and contract provision do not affect interstate commerce; (3) the alleged activities are not within the proscription of the antitrust laws since the clause is a reasonable regulation of trade; (4) the alleged controversy regulating market operating hours constitutes a labor dispute over which this court has no jurisdiction; and (5) the alleged controversy comes within the labor exemption to the antitrust law.

The general premise guiding courts in their considerations on motions to dismiss complaints is to be applied in this case as well; that is, would the plaintiff be entitled to relief upon any state of facts which might be proved in support of its allegations.

[Labor Unions—Antitrust Exemption]

At the outset, it is established that the fact that a labor union is a defendant under proceedings for violation of a antitrust laws does not per se bring it within the exemption from suit contained in § 6 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 17) or injunction contained in § 20 of the Clayton Act (29 U. S. C. A. § 52). The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Allen Bradley Co. v. Union [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], (1944) 325 U. S. 808, declared that > "Congress did not intend by the Clayton or the Norris-La Guardia Act that labor unions could, consistently with the Sherman Act, aid non-labor groups to create business monopolies and to control the marketing of goods and services."

The Norris-La Guardia Act was specifically intended to protect the normal activities of workingmen to form a union and to act together to further their interests as members of the union even though such union activities might to some extent affect interstate commerce, 29 U. S. C. A. § 104, but where labor unions combine upon objects outside the field of labor relations they do become amenable to the Sherman Act. Internat'l Assn. Bridge, Structural & Ornamental Iron Workers v. Pauly Jail Bldg. Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,116], (C. A. 8, 1941) 118 F. (2d) 615, 621, cert. den. 314 U. S. 639.

The challenged provision is contended and alleged by plaintiffs to be the means of effectuating the alleged combination and conspiracy; but, the defendants assert its purpose is related solely to employer-employee relationship and its existence is an integral part of the terms and conditions of employment. On a motion to dismiss this question is not possible of determination. Restrictive union rules with [which] limit market distribution would seem to be within the purview of the antitrust laws if the conditions of interstate commerce and intent are met. The complaint alleges a joinder of purpose between union and independent employers inimicable to legitimate objectives of labor organizations and sufficiently places in doubt the objective sought to be attained.

[Interstate Commerce]

It is also sufficiently alleged that this provision has the effect of restraining interstate commerce. Local restraints having an adverse effect on such commerce are within the prohibition of the antitrust laws. United States v. Employing Plasterers [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], (1954) 347 U. S. 186.

["Pari Delicto"]

It is also clear that the determination of the efficacy of the defense of pari delicto raised by defendants on their motion to dismiss cannot be made at this time and on this state of the pleadings. While a party to an illegal contract usually cannot invoke the aid of a court in its enforcement, as a general rule where the contract is violative of a statute, a party will not be barred from setting up its illegality, particularly when it will further the public interest which the statute was designed to protect.

[Dismissal Denied]

The court is of the opinion that the complaint does state a claim for relief under the antitrust statutes and the defendants' motion to dismiss should be overruled. An order in accord therewith has this day been entered.

[¶ 69,330] Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1958. April Session, 1959. No. 12284. Dated April 13, 1959. Amended, April 21, 1959.

Petition to Review and Set Aside Order and Decision of the Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Geographical Price Discrimination—Cutting Prices in One Market—Legality.—A brewer selling on a nationwide basis did not unlawfully discriminate in prices when it reduced its prices in the St. Louis market to practically equal those charged for local and regional beers in that market, while not making such a reduction elsewhere in the country. The price reductions were not price discriminations within the proscription of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act; therefore, a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting such price reductions was set aside. The Commission had found that the reductions disrupted the St. Louis market to the injury of the brewer's local competitors in that market, and it was not seeking to protect the brewer's competitors in other markets. Assuming that the reductions were directed at local competitors, they were not discriminatory. The brewer did not thereby discriminate among its local competitors in that market; it employed the same means of competition against all of them. Moreover, it did not discriminate among those who bought its beer in the St. Louis market since all could buy at the same prices.

Price discrimination means more than a mere difference in price. There must be some relationship between the different purchasers which entitles them to comparable treatment. Where two purchasers from a seller are competing with each other, that competition creates a relationship that entitles them to comparable treatment as to price. However, where the purchasers from a seller are located in different areas of the country and are not in competition with each other, there is generally no relationship which entitles them to be charged the same prices. It cannot be said that because the brewer's acts gave its customers in another area a right to relief, its St. Louis market competitors became entitled to relief under Section 2(a) of the Act. Lacking a showing of discrimination within the St. Louis market, there was no relationship existing between the brewer's competitors in that area, and either its competitors or its customers in other areas, which justified the Commission's conclusion that a discrimination had been shown which brought section 2(a) into play. That section says nothing about lowering prices in any market; such a practice is covered in Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, which does not amend the Clayton Act. The fact that the Commission has not been given the power to enforce Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act does not justify an attempt by it to enlarge the scope of section 2(a) to include a matter lying expressly within the scope of section 3.

Setting aside a cease and desist order in Federal Trade Commission Dkt. 6331.

Before DUFFY, Chief Judge, and SCHNACKENBERG and KNOCH, Circuit Judges.

[FTC Order—Review]

SCHNACKENBERG, Circuit Judge [In full text]: By its petition, Anheuser-Busch, Inc., a Missouri corporation, herein referred to as AB, asks us to review and set aside a cease and desist order issued on September 10, 1957 by the Federal Trade Commission, based upon a complaint charging AB with a violation of section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.[1] 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(a).

[1] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodi-

[FTC Complaint]

In its brief, the Commission states that AB was charged in the complaint with territorial price discrimination. The complaint alleged two price reductions on its beer products made by AB to retailers in the St. Louis, Missouri area during 1954, resulting in substantially lower prices to its customers there than to its customers located elsewhere in the United States. AB's answer consisted in part of a denial and contained an affirmative defense that the reductions were made in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors. See section 2(b) of the Clayton Act, amended as aforesaid, 15 U. S. C. A. § 13(b).[2]

Following hearings before an examiner, he entered an initial decision, in which he made findings of fact and concluded that AB had violated section 2(a) as charged, and entered a provisional order. The Commission issued its final order now before us, adopting the findings and conclusions of the examiner,[3] and filed its opinion.

[Beer Market and Sales]

The evidence is not in substantial conflict. As found by the examiner, the controlling facts which we deem material here are, in summary, as follows:

At all times relevant in this case, AB, a manufacturer of beers, including Budweiser, sold its beers on a nationwide basis, in competition with other brewers in commerce. AB and four other named breweries selling on a nationwide basis, sold and shipped into all states. They were known as national brewers and their products as national beers. There were throughout the country a number of beers having merely local or regional distribution.

There were many separate marketing areas for beer in the country. Each market had a distinct pattern of prices and the prices charged for the same beers varied among the different marketing areas. While it appears that there was no uniform or constant differential, in the great majority of markets Budweiser and the other national beers were sold at some price higher than the price charged for beers having merely regional or local distribution.

In 1953, a strike closed the plants of the other four national brewers and AB became the nation's leading producer. After the strike, the national brewers generally ties of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: Provided, however, That the Federal Trade Commission may, after due investigation and hearing to all interested parties, fix and establish quantity limits, and revise the same as it finds necessary, as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce; and the foregoing shall then not be construed to permit differentials based on differences in quantities greater than those so fixed and established: And provided further, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade: And provided further, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned."

[2] "Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

[3] It modified in some respects the provisional order to cease and desist.

increased prices, though in varying amounts depending on locality. However, neither AB nor its three local or regional competitors in the St. Louis area [4] increased their prices on sales in the St. Louis market.

[Local Price Reduction]

On January 4, 1954 and June 21, 1954, AB reduced its prices on Budweiser beer in the St. Louis market to practically equal those charged for local and regional beers there. These reductions AB did not make elsewhere.

[FTC Ruling]

These price cuts, the Commission held, constituted a discrimination in price "as between purchasers differently located." The examiner found, and the Commission concurred, that these price "discriminations" had the effect of diverting substantial business to AB from its competitors in the St. Louis market; the effect of substantially lessening competition in the line of commerce in which AB and its local competitors "are engaged"; and the further effect of tending to create a monopoly and having the potentialities to continue to do so.

We find it unnecessary to determine whether the evidence proved the effects to which the Commission alluded, or whether the evidence established AB's affirmative defense of good faith.

The Commission makes it clear that no complaint is made by it as to AB's regular practice of selling its beer at different prices in the different markets of the country. It says:

> "We are concerned only with the lowering of the price in one area while maintaining prices in all other areas albeit the maintained prices might be different prices.
> "* * * The proceeding was designed to stop a predatory pricing practice, a practice by which a national seller can disrupt any given market to the injury of its local competitors in that market.
>
> "* * * The Commission found the price reductions confined to the St. Louis area to be price discriminations violative of Section 2(a) of the amended Clayton Act. Petitioner maintains there was no violation of law."

[Discrimination Under Section 2(a)]

We are confronted here with the basic question of whether AB's price cuts in the St. Louis area, which, as contended by the Commission, disrupted that market to the injury of its local competitors in that market, were price discriminations within the proscription of section 2(a). Even if we assume that these cuts were directed at AB's local competitors, they were not discriminatory. AB did not thereby discriminate among its local competitors in the St. Louis area. By its cuts AB employed the same means of competition against all of them. Moreover, it did not discriminate among those who bought its beer in the St. Louis area; all could buy at the same prices. We have here, as far as the St. Louis area is concerned, a nondiscriminatory pricing activity, as to which the affirmative defense of good faith becomes relevant only if the price cuts constituted a violation of section 2(a).

[Relationship Between Purchasers—Right to Equal Treatment]

Actually the only discrimination claimed is said to result from AB's St. Louis price cuts when it failed to make similar cuts in other areas. But it is significant that the Commission is not seeking to protect AB's competitors in the other areas. In fact the Commission does not even say that they have been injured. In effect, the situation is that, while the cuts were discriminatory against AB's competitors only in other areas (about which there is no complaint by the Commission) and the effects on AB's local competitors in the St. Louis area were not discriminatory as among them, the Commission argues that section 2(a) can be used "to stop a predatory pricing practice" in that area. However, it is not every price difference that amounts to a discrimination in price under the Act. Price discrimination means more than a mere difference in price. There must be some relationship between the different purchasers which entitles them to comparable treatment. Inasmuch as the Commission admits that the prices charged in the St. Louis area, on the one hand, and in other areas, on the other hand, were different and that this difference is not the subject of its complaint, it is clear that the mere fact of difference in price resulting from difference of markets, is not price discrimination under the Act. The Commission complains only about the lowering of the price in one area while the prices in all other areas are maintained, albeit the maintained prices might be different from those charged in the area where the lowering took place. But Representative Utterback, a manager of the conference bill which became section 2(a) (80 Cong. Rec. 9416), stated:

> "In its meaning as simple English a discrimination is more than a mere difference. Underlying the meaning of the word is the idea that some relationship exists between the parties to the discrimination which entitles them to equal treatment, whereby the difference granted to one casts some burden or disadvantage upon the other. If the two are competing in the resale of the goods concerned, that relationship exists. Where, also, the price to one is so low as to involve a sacrifice of some part of the seller's necessary costs and profit as applied to that business, it leaves that deficit inevitably to be made up in higher prices to his other customers; and there, too, a relationship may exist upon which to base the charge of discrimination. But where no such relationship exists, where the goods are sold in different markets and the conditions affecting those markets set different price levels for them, the sale to different customers at those different prices would not constitute a discrimination within the meaning of this bill."

Where two purchasers from a seller are competing with each other, that competition creates a relationship that entitles them to comparable treatment as to price, without which treatment there would be a discrimination in price within the meaning of section 2(a). On the other hand, in a case like this, where the purchasers from a seller are located in different areas of the country and are not in competition with each other, there is generally no relationship which entitles them to be charged the same prices. This is particularly true when different prices in different markets are characteristics of all sellers in the industry. Thus, a retailer in Boston or San Francisco, in paying a higher price for beer than a retailer in St. Louis or Chicago, is in no way prejudiced or treated unfairly.

Moreover, if it were assumed that AB's price cuts in the St. Louis area were injurious to its customers in some other area and that the latter customers were given by section 2(a) a right to relief, we find no language in that section transferring that right to AB's competitors in the St. Louis area. It is a complete nonsequitur to say that, because AB's acts gave its customers in another area a right to relief, its St. Louis market competitors became entitled to relief under section 2(a). Certainly congress has not said so in that section and we have no right to extend the section to benefit a group which lies beyond the purpose and scope of the language used.

[Geographical Discrimination Under Section 3]

Lacking a showing of discrimination within the St. Louis area, there is no relationship existing between AB's competitors in that area and either its competitors or its customers in other areas which justifies the Commission's conclusion that a discrimination has been shown in the St. Louis area which brings section 2(a) into play. In reality, the Commission is not complaining of a price discrimination between purchasers in different markets, but rather of a lowering in price in St. Louis, whether or not discriminatory. But section 2(a) says nothing about lowering prices in any market. Such a practice congress did meet head-on when, in 1936, it enacted section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13a, which does not amend the Clayton Act, but stands on its own footing and carries its own sanctions. Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Company, [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,915], 355 U. S. 373, affirming our decision, 238 F. 2d 86. As the Supreme Court said in that case at 377, in regard to section 3:

> "* * * It prohibits three kinds of trade practices, (a) general price discriminations, (b) geographical price discriminations, and (c) selling 'at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.' * * *"

Although there is a partial overlap between the price discrimination clauses of section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act and those of section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the first section of the Robinson-Patman Act, as stated by the Supreme Court in the Nashville Milk Co., supra, at 378, we do not find in section 2(a) the price discrimination proscription sought by the Commission in this case. On the other hand, section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, in the prohibitions [(b) and (c) pointed out by the Supreme Court, supra] has imposed severe sanctions on geographical price discriminations and selling at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.

The fact that the Commission has not been given power by 15 U. S. C. A. 21 to enforce section 3, which is known as 15 U. S. C. A. 13a, does not justify an attempt by it to enlarge the scope of section 2(a) to include a matter lying expressly within the scope of section 3.

[Order Set Aside]

Neither by a charge in the complaint nor by the evidence has the Commission shown a violation by AB of section 2(a) of the Act. For the foregoing reasons, therefore, the cease and desist order issued by the Commission on September 10, 1957, is set aside.

Order Set Aside.

[¶ 69,331] Thomas v. Coastal Industrial Services, Inc.

In the Supreme Court of Georgia. 20401. Decided April 9, 1959.

Georgia Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Employee's Contract Not to Compete With Former Employer—Reasonableness of Territorial Restriction Which Exceeds Employer's Area of Operations.—An employee's agreement that he would not rent uniforms, wiping cloths, and such items to service stations, garages, and similar businesses in 34 named Georgia counties and 12 South Carolina counties for a period of one year after the termination of his employment was void and unenforceable. The employer did business in only 31 of the 34 named Georgia counties, and did no business in the South Carolina counties in which the employee was restricted from working. Contracts in general restraint of trade are contrary to the public policy of Georgia, while contracts in partial restraint of trade, reasonably limited as to time and territory, are valid. In the instant case, the time limitation of one year was unquestionably reasonable; however, the territorial limitation unduly restricted the employee without any reasonable necessity therefor. Prohibiting a former employee from working in a territory where an employer has never had customers is not reasonably necessary for the protection of the employer. Since the contract was void, the trial court improperly enjoined the employee from working in the 31 Georgia counties where the employer did have customers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.12.

For the plaintiff in error: J. Walter Cowart and Thomas Delano Maurice, both of Savannah, Ga.

For the defendant in error: Corish, Alexander & Shea, Savannah, Ga.

[Contract Not to Compete]

Mobley, Justice [In full text]: The exception is to the judgment of the Superior Court of Chatham County overruling the general demurrer to the petition of Coastal Industrial Services, Inc., and to the granting of a temporary injunction against the defendant. The petitioner sought to enjoin the defendant from violating the terms of a contract of employment in which the defendant agreed that during his employment and for a year after termination thereof he would not solicit business or patronage of the kind he had performed for the petitioner of any person whatsoever in 34 named Georgia counties and 12 named South Carolina counties. The court enjoined the defendant from doing business in 31 of the 34 Georgia counties named in the contract. Held:

[Consideration]

1. "Though a promise may be nudum pactum when made, because the promisee is not bound, it becomes binding when he subsequently furnishes the consideration contemplated, by doing what he was expected to do." Brown v. Bowman, 119 Ga. 153 (1) (— S. E. —). Even though the agreement does not disclose what salary the defendant was to be paid or the length of time he was to be employed by the plaintiff, and despite the fact that the defendant was already employed by the plaintiff at the time the agreement was entered into, mutuality and sufficient consideration to vitalize the ancillary agreement were supplied by performance under the agreement. Breed v. National Credit Ass'n, 211 Ga. 629, 632 (— S. E. 2d —). Accordingly, the covenant sued upon was not void for lack of consideration; and the trial court properly overruled the demurrers.

[Reasonableness as to Time and Territory]

2. Although contracts in general restraint of trade are void as being contrary to public policy (Code § 20-504), "a contract concerning a lawful and useful business in partial restraint of trade and reasonably limited as to time and territory is not void." Black v. Horowitz, 203 Ga. 294 (— S. E. 2d —). Unquestionably, under many rulings of this court, the time limitation of one year in this case is reasonable. Griffin v. Vandegriff, 205 Ga. 288, 295 (— S. E. 2d —). Reasonableness as to territory depends not so much on the geographical size of the territory as on the reasonableness of the territorial restriction in view of the facts and circumstances of the case. Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 195 (— S. E. —). ". . . as a matter of law, such a contract is to be upheld, if the restraint imposed is not unreasonable, is founded on a valuable consideration, and is reasonably necessary to protect the interest of the party in whose favor it is imposed, and does not unduly prejudice the interests of the public." Rakestraw v. Lanier, supra, page 194. The evidence showed that the plaintiff company did business in only 31 of the 34 named Georgia counties and that he did no business in the South Carolina counties included in the territory in which the defendant was restricted from working and had no intention of doing so. The plaintiff company is engaged in the business of renting uniforms, wiping cloths, etc., to service stations, garages and similar businesses located on routes out of Savannah. During his employment by the plaintiff company, the defendant serviced these routes as a driver-supervisor, one of his duties being to solicit customers for the plaintiff company. The defendant serviced routes in 31 of the 34 Georgia counties set out in the restrictive covenant; and it was in these 31 counties that the trial court enjoined the defendant from competing with the plaintiff corporation. We are of the opinion that this case comes squarely within the case of Orkin Exterminating Co. of South Ga. v. Dewberry, 204 Ga. 794 (— S. E. 2d —), that this case is controlled by the decision in the Orkin case, and that the restrictive covenant is void and unenforceable. In Orkin Exterminating Co. of South Ga. v. Dewberry, supra, the plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendant from violating the terms of a restrictive covenant ancillary to a contract of employment, which provided that for a period of one year following termination of employment the employee should not engage in the exterminating business in Macon, Dublin, Milledgeville, Perry, Jeffersonville, Forsyth and Barnesville or at any place within a 75-mile radius of any of those towns. The evidence showed that the plaintiff corporation did not operate in all the towns or the adjacent territory but that it intended to expand its operations into all the area covered by the restrictive covenant when business conditions rendered the time opportune for such expansion. The trial judge rendered a judgment temporarily restraining the defendant from calling on customers of the plaintiff company in Bibb County, Dublin, Barnesville, Forsyth, McRae and Reynolds, in which places the defendant had worked while in the plaintiff company's employ, but which constituted only a portion of the restricted territory. This court held that the trial court erred in granting the injunction. In reversing the lower court, it was stated: "In the protection of the employer against the possibility of a former employee's contacting its customers, it is not reasonably necessary that he should be prohibited from working in a territory where the employer has never had customers. Certainly, the inclusion of such territory in a restrictive covenant is broader than reasonably necessary to protect the employer where there is no anticipation of immediately extending the company's business into the prohibited territory, but the anticipation is nothing more than a hope, based upon contingencies, which may or may not occur. Whatever may be the rule with regard to contracts of sale, it is our opinion, in view of the repeated rulings that employment contracts require more limited restraints, that such broad territorial limitation unduly restricts the employee without any reasonable necessity therefor." Orkin Exterminating Co. of South Ga. v. Dewberry, supra, page 807.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Bring Suit—Parties Plaintiff—Stockholders' Derivative Suit—Explaining Failure to Have Action Brought by Corporation Through Demand on Majority of Stockholders.—Four of an automobile manufacturer's stockholders, in a stockholders' derivative antitrust action against a chemical company which, according to the United States Supreme Court, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,723, violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act by acquiring and using 23 per cent of the automobile manufacturer's stock, sufficiently explained, under Rule 23(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, why they did not attempt to secure, from the majority of the stockholders, the bringing of the action by their corporation, the automobile manufacturer. The complaint alleged that such a demand upon the majority of the stockholders would have been futile. The practical effect of such a demand would have been to involve the four stockholders in an expensive proxy contest, and a demand that the corporation bring the action, even if made by the majority of the stockholders, would not have been honored by the automobile manufacturer's board of directors and/or officers, a majority of whom were elected and/or controlled by the chemical company.

Opinion

[Stockholders' Antitrust Action]

Sugarman, District Judge [In full text]: Shortly after the Supreme Court decided United States v. du Pont [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,723], 353 U. S. 586 (1957), three actions by stockholders of General Motors were commenced in this court against General Motors and du Pont. They were consolidated and an amended consolidated complaint was filed.

It states eleven claims. The first six seek triple damages against du Pont in behalf of General Motors under the antitrust laws. The next four seek simple damages against du Pont in behalf of General Motors. The eleventh seeks injunctive relief. The complaint relies heavily upon the aforesaid decision of the Supreme Court.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Defendants move "(1) for an order dismissing the consolidated amended complaint and action herein upon the ground that said complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, in that the allegations of the complaint are insufficient to excuse the failure of the plaintiffs to make demand on the stockholders of General Motors Corporation to bring this action, as is required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b); . . ."

On a motion of this nature the defendants admit the existence and validity of the claim asserted but challenge the plaintiffs' right to relief. The allegations of the complaint must be viewed in a light most favorable to the plaintiffs, admitting and accepting as true, all facts well pleaded.[1]

.[Failure to Secure Corporate Action]

Defendants' attack is confined solely to the alleged failure of plaintiffs to comply with that part of F. R. Civ. P. 23(b) which requires a showing in a stockholders' secondary action complaint of what efforts the plaintiffs made to secure from the shareholders the corporate action sought by the plaintiffs and their reasons for failing to obtain it or for not making the effort.

The first rule from which F. R. Civ. P. 23(b) evolved was Equity Rule 94 adopted in 1882, 104 U. S. IX. It came into being during the term at which Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, was decided. It did not contain the requirement that a stockholder's bill state the reasons for not making an effort to secure the action sought from the stockholders. That addition was made to the rule when it became Equity Rule 27 at the 1912 term of the Court, 226 U. S. 656. The change was made three years after the Delaware decision, infra. The added language was continued into F. R. Civ. P. 23(b).

[Failure to "Make Effort"—Futility]

This being a motion under F. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) its determination is confined solely to the notice of motion and the complaint. Defendants do not challenge the 20th paragraph of the complaint which alleges the reasons for the futility of a demand upon the directors of General Motors. The only point raised is the sufficiency of the allegations explaining the failure of the plaintiffs to make an effort to secure from the stockholders the action sought.

The pertinent paragraphs of the complaint read:

"7. At all times since June 30, 1949, and for some time prior thereto, defendant du Pont owned at least approximately 23% of the total outstanding common stock of General Motors. In addition, the officers and directors of du Pont, their relatives and associates, directly and indirectly owned or controlled shares of the common stock of said corporation in amounts which are presently unknown to the plaintiffs herein. The balance of said corporation's outstanding common stock was divided between several hundreds of thousands of other stockholders who resided in widespread parts of the world, none of whom individually owned as much as 10% of the corporation's outstanding stock and nearly all of whom owned relatively small amounts of shares of said stock. For example, in 1957, out of approximately 667,000 stockholders other than du Pont, approximately 500,000 owned no more than 200 shares each and approximately 159,000 owned no more than 25 shares each. By reason of the foregoing du Pont's stock interest in General Motors exerted a potent influence on the affairs of General Motors, promoted the acts and transactions herein alleged, and induced General Motors to participate therein. Furthermore, by reason of the facts herein alleged, defendant du Pont had working control (sometimes hereinafter referred to as 'control') over General Motors, which permitted it to nominate and elect and/or dominate and control the majority of the Board of Directors and/or officers of said corporation, and to select and/or dominate and control a large part of the personnel of said corporation concerned with the acts and transactions herein alleged, to determine a large part of said corporation's policies including those relating to said acts and transactions, and to cause General Motors to participate in said acts and transactions."

"21. No demand has been made by plaintiffs on the body of stockholders of General Motors to obtain such action as they desire, because:

B. Such demand would have been futile for any or all of the following reasons:

(1) If the majority of stockholders had demanded that suit be brought, such demand would not have been honored by General Motors' Board of Directors and/or officers by reason of the facts hereinbefore alleged.

(2) The practical effect of any such demand would have been to involve the plaintiffs in a proxy contest to prevent ratification (if the body of stockholders of General Motors had the power to ratify the wrongful acts of the defendant du Pont) and/or to oust the existing Board of Directors of General Motors and to supplant it with a new Board which would have exercised independent and unbiased judgment in determining whether suit should have been instituted by said corporation against du Pont; and such a proxy contest would have required clearance of proxy material by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the circulation of said material to all stockholders of General Motors, all at considerable and prohibitive personal expense to plaintiffs. Such proxy contest would have been waged with du Pont and/or the management of General Motors, who also owned substantial blocks of the common stock of General Motors and had control over said corporation's proxy solicitation machinery. The latter's proxy solicitation would have been undertaken at the corporation's expense. By reason of the facts hereinbefore alleged, and the inertia and indifference of most of the widespread and relatively small stockholders, and their reluctance to oust management during a period of prosperity, for all practical purposes it would have been impossible for plaintiffs to have emerged the victor in such a proxy contest."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Allegations Adequate]

Accepting the allegations of paragraphs 7 and 21B of the complaint as true, the complaint, contrary to defendants' assertion, states a claim upon which relief can be granted because those allegations adequately set forth reasons for not making the effort to obtain from the shareholders the action by General Motors now sought against du Pont.

In small corporations, the holding of less than a majority of the stock would not amount to control; in large corporations, with stock widely distributed among many shareholders, a compact united ownership of a substantial block of stock, although less than a majority, could be ample to control the operations of the corporation.[2]

[Similar Case]

When the Court, in 1912, by the addition in Equity Rule 27, accorded to plaintiffs in derivative stockholders' suits the privilege of setting forth in their complaints the reasons for not seeking redress from the shareholders of the corporate beneficiary of the suit, it is obvious that it intended to cover a situation ruled upon by it but three years earlier.[3]

There is a marked similarity between the certified facts in the Delaware case (which, as above noted, was decided after the promulgation of Equity Rule 94 in 1882 and before the promulgation of Equity Rule 27 in 1912 which added the requirement now being discussed) and the case at bar. If anything, the defendants' position in the Delaware case was more formidable than is the position of the defendants here. In the Delaware case the complainants and the allied protective committee controlled a percentage of issued stock of Susquehanna almost equal to the 25 per cent controlled by the Delaware Company and the directors. Further, the amount of stock involved and the diversification of its ownership was far less than is here presented.

The facts here presented are governed by the ruling in the Delaware case and hence the first branch of defendants' motion is denied.[4]

The notice of motion asks "(2) in the alternative, for an order staying this action and directing that the plaintiffs seek approval for bringing this suit from the stockholders of General Motors Corporation at their next annual meeting to be held on May 22, 1959, and dismissing this action in the event they do not secure such approval . . ."[5] Granting of the alternative relief sought, that plaintiffs be stayed until they poll the stockholders of defendant General Motors, would negative the holding on the first branch of the motion that the complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted in so far as it states reasons for not consulting the shareholders. Hence, the second branch of defendants' motion is denied.

Recognizing that this decision enables a relatively small stockholder interest to plunge two large corporations into inevitably long and expensive litigation which, should this determination be erroneous, would result in a futile waste of time and money by both the plaintiffs and the defendants, this court will, if it is timely made, grant a certificate pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b).

The defendants' motion is in all respects denied.

The defendants had requested a delay of their "second stage" discovery until after the first stage of the trial; however, the court had overruled that request in order to prevent the defendants' lengthy "second stage" discovery from causing a time lapse between the two stages of the trial and thus the comparison of stale evidence with fresh evidence as to related issues.

Addendum to Opinion on Cut-Off Date

[Plans for "Two-Stage" Trial Abandoned]

HARTSHORNE, District Judge [In full text]: Shortly following the filing of the cut-off opinion herein, dated January 27, 1959 [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,260], the Court advised all counsel at pretrial that, in the light of the Government's previous written representations as to the nature of its prewar proof, it had real doubt as to whether it would not be obliged to give the Government the right to introduce such proof ultimately. Further that, in order not to do injustice by comparing stale evidence with fresh evidence as to related issues, the Court must insist that months on end not be permitted to intervene between the [6] General Rule 10(a) for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

first stage and the second stage of trial, in order to permit the defendants then to carry through their lengthy prewar discovery. Accordingly, the Court insisted that, before any trial, all parties would be required to complete both their prewar and postwar discovery. Therefore, the Court overruled the request of the defendants to delay their prewar discovery until after the first stage of trial. Thereupon the defendants indicated generally, with the exception of Colgate-Palmolive, and that of the Association which, though requested, did not state its viewpoint, that they did not want a two-stage trial, if they had to complete their discovery before any trial. Since the Government had never wanted a two-stage trial, the Court, particularly because of its doubt that a second stage trial could be avoided, determined to abandon the two-stage trial in favor of the usual single trial.

[Clarification—Miscellaneous Matters]

In the interest of accuracy, the Court would call attention to the following in its cut-off opinion:

> "The Government admits that it does not desire to give evidence as to the intermediate war period from, presumably, 1941 to 1946, when the Government's wartime regulations of business were in effect."

This does not mean that the Government admits that such are accurate dates, or that no violations by the defendants occurred between such dates. Nor does the Government admit the defendants' claim that it may use almost a million documents in its proof. However, it is clear that the Government will use documents literally in the thousands, so the exact number of documents to be used is theoretically, though not practically, immaterial.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combination and Conspiracies—Applicability of Sherman Act to Common Carriers—Jurisdiction of District Court and Interstate Commerce Commission—Referral of Issues to Commission Prior to Court's Decision.—A trial court which had held that railroads' concerted rate quotations were illegal per se under the Sherman Act was required, by an opinion of a reviewing court, to retain jurisdiction of air carriers' treble damage action against the railroads, but withhold its decision until the Interstate Commerce Commission has had an opportunity to decide initially whether, in its view, the railroads could be relieved of the operation of the antitrust laws by virtue of Section 5a(9) of the Interstate Commerce Act and, if so, whether they had been so relieved by an agreement approved by the Commission. The reviewing court had further held that it was unnecessary to refer to the Commission an aspect of the case in which it was charged that the railroads, in combination and conspiracy, made an effort to eliminate the competition of the air carriers. However, according to the trial court, a subsequent United States Supreme Court decision modified that holding by requiring that the issue of the intent and effect of an agreement approved by the Commission must, in a case where such issue is the sole or dominant issue in the case, first be referred to the Commission prior to a court determination of whether such an agreement violated the antitrust laws. As to that aspect of the case in which it was asserted that the railroads' purpose was to destroy competition, the issue of the intent and effect of the agreements was the sole or dominant issue; therefore, the railroads were granted a motion to submit that issue to the Commission for its determination along with the other issues previously submitted to it.

Memorandum

[Motion to Vacate Denied]

JOSEPH MCGARRAGHY, District Judge [In full text]: The Court is of the opinion that plaintiffs' motion to vacate the order of April 18, 1958 must be denied.

[Decision Withheld—ICC Action Pending]

The Interstate Commerce Commission has disclaimed jurisdiction to pass upon the question of law, but is proceeding to a hearing on the issues of fact stated in the order.

In my opinion, the opinion and mandate of the Court of Appeals in this case [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,958], require that this Court withhold decision on the interpretation of the existing agreements, insofar as the challenged practices are concerned, until the Commission has had an opportunity to decide the issues raised in the petition now pending before it.

The following passages from the opinion of the Court of Appeals, in my opinion, require this ruling:

"Nevertheless, we think the general statutory scheme referred to does not necessitate a conclusion that no section 22 reduced rates may be concertedly offered under the authority of an agreement approved by the Commission under section 5a. Though not subject to the same regulation as commercial rates, all section 22 terms for governmental carriage are not, for that reason, altogether beyond concerted action permissible under section 5a. The Act is designed primarily for commercial traffic. Section 22 is apart from this primary design. It is a concession to the Government. But the fact that section 22 reduced rates are not within the chief regulatory plan for commercial rates does not remove them from the Act entirely. . . ."

"We resolve the ambiguous situation by holding as a matter of statutory construction that not all reduced rates under section 22 are necessarily to be excluded from concerted action under agreements approved by the Commission under section 5a, and therefore left unprotected from the operation of the antitrust laws under section 5a(9). . . ."

"It does not follow, however, that the practices here involved may validly be included, or in fact are included, within any agreement which has been approved under section 5a."

"The Railroads vigorously contend at this point that the question whether or not the practices can be or are covered by any section 5a agreement is within the exclusive primary jurisdiction of the Commission. They rely principally upon section 5a(7), here set forth in the margin. We do not read that provision as do the Railroads. It seems to us to authorize the Commission to determine whether an agreement which it has approved, or the terms and conditions of its approval, conforms with the standard set forth in paragraph 5a(2), or whether such terms and conditions are not necessary for that purpose, and to determine that either the approval or the terms and conditions of the approval, should be modified to bring about conformity with such standard . . ."

"Nevertheless, the questions are appropriate for Commission consideration, even though, as we believe, exclusive primary jurisdiction over either of them does not reside in the Commission by reason of section 5a(7). Compare Myers v. Bethlehem Corp., 303 U. S. 41, 48. The agreements relied upon by the Railroads had Commission approval. While the challenged practices arose subsequently to such approval, and seriously affect another industry, they arose nonetheless in the industry with respect to which the Commission has expertise and large responsibilities, and they are defended as authorized by the Commission's governing statute and by its administration thereof. In this situation, 'the court should exercise equitable discretion to give that agency the first opportunity to pass on the issue'. . . ."

"In short, the court, while retaining jurisdiction, should in its discretion withhold decision on the interpretation of the statute and existing agreements approved under section 5a, insofar as the challenged practices are concerned, until the Commission has had an opportunity to decide initially whether in its view the Railroads can, with respect to those practices, be relieved of the operations of the antitrust laws under the statute and, if so, whether they have been so relieved by any approved agreement, and, if so, by which agreement or agreements, by what provisions thereof, and as of what date. The Commission might disclaim jurisdiction, or for some other reason might refrain from deciding these questions. We do not hold that it is required to decide them. The court could then proceed according to its own light to interpret either the statute or the agreements."

The foregoing relates to the practices which this Court has held are illegal per se and the Court of Appeals agreed unless they are relieved by virtue of section 5a(9).

[Alleged Conspiracy—Intent and Effect of Agreements]

With respect to the second aspect of the case in which the plaintiffs charge an effort by the defendants in combination or conspiracy to eliminate the competition of plaintiffs, the Court of Appeals held that this aspect need not be submitted for consideration or initial decision by the Commission as to either questions of fact or of law.

After the decision of the Court of Appeals in this case, the Supreme Court decided Federal Maritime Board v. Isbrandtsen Co., 356 U. S. 481, in the light of which the Court of Appeals in Riss & Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,122] held "that the Isbrandtsen opinion modifies the holding of the Aircoach case by requiring that the issue of the intent and effect of an agreement approved by the Commission must, in a case where such issue is the sole or dominant issue in the case, first be referred to the Commission prior to a Court determination of whether such agreement violates the anti-trust laws."

Defendants have now moved to supplement the order of April 18, 1958, by including the intent and effect of the challenged rate practices of the defendants as issues which the Commission shall first have an opportunity to pass upon.

While plaintiffs have not indicated a desire to proceed to hearing at this time on that aspect of the case in which they assert defendants' purpose to destroy competition, it remains in the case, and the Court is of the opinion that with respect thereto the issue of intent and effect is the sole or dominant issue. Accordingly, under Isbrandtsen and Riss, the issue of intent and effect must first be referred to the Commission.

Plaintiffs contend that such action at this time would be premature since plaintiffs have no present intention of proceeding on "the intent and effect" issue so long as the case may be decided on the plaintiffs' theory of per se illegality.

However, the Court is of the opinion that since the Commission has now set for hearing the issues of fact embodied in the Court's order of April 18, 1958, the orderly and expeditious procedure would be to include the issue of intent and effect for consideration and determination by the Commission in a single proceeding.

Accordingly, the defendants' motion to supplement the order of April 18, 1958 will be granted.

Counsel for defendants will submit an order in conformity with the foregoing.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Dissolution of Corporate Defendant After Return of Indictment—Survival of Criminal Liability. —Criminal actions charging Maryland and Delaware corporations with violations of the Sherman Act were not abated by the dissolution of the corporations after the return of the indictment. Section 8 of that Act defines "person" to include corporations "existing" under the laws of any state. Whether a corporation "exists" for any purpose is determined by reference to state law. Under a Maryland survival statute, a corporation continues "in existence for the purpose of paying, satisfying, and discharging any existing debts and obligations" and "such dissolution" does not "abate any pending suit or proceeding by or against the corporation." A Delaware survival statute provided that any "proceeding" begun by or against a corporation before or within three years after dissolution should continue "until any judgments, orders, or decrees therein shall be fully executed." The term "proceeding" was elsewhere used in the Deleware Code as including criminal prosecutions, and that seemed to be consistent with its normal construction. However, no matter how the courts of Maryland and Delaware might construe them, those survival statutes sufficiently continued the existence of the corporations for the purposes of Section 8 of the Sherman Act. Also, policy reasons accorded with that result. After dissolution, the corporations simply became divisions of a new corporation under the same ultimate ownership. There was no more reason to allow them to escape criminal penalties than damages in a civil suit. A corporation cannot be sent to jail; the discharge of its liabilities, whether criminal or civil, can be effected only by the payment of money.

[Criminal Liability of Dissolved Corporations]

Mr. Justice Douglas delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

Petitioners are corporations—two organized under Maryland law and one under Delaware law—and wholly owned subsidiaries of Schenley Industries, Inc. They were indicted with others for restraining trade, conspiring to monopolize and attempting to monopolize commerce in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2. Shortly after the indictment was returned, petitioners were dissolved under their respective state statutes and became separate divisions of a new corporation under the same ultimate ownership. They then moved to dismiss the indictment on the ground that their dissolution abated the proceeding. The District Court denied the motions, holding that under the applicable Maryland and Delaware statutes the existence of the dissolved corporations continued so far as prosecution of this criminal proceeding was concerned. 138 F. Supp. 385 [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,243]. Petitioners then pleaded nolo contendere and the District Court levied fines against them. The Court of Appeals affirmed, 258 F. 2d 726 [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,129]. The case is here on a petition for a writ of certiorari which we granted because of a conflict among the Circuits.[1] 358 U. S. 878.

[Applicable Law]

We start from the premise that in the federal domain prosecutions abate both on the death of an individual defendant (List v. Pennsylvania, 131 U. S. 396; Schreiber v. Sharpless, 110 U. S. 76) and on the dissolution of a corporate defendant (Defense Supplies Corp. v. Lawrence Warehouse Co., 336 U. S. 631, 634), unless the action is saved by statute. We need not decide whether federal law alone would be sufficient to save a federal cause of action against a corporation dissolved under state law. We have here a situation where the interplay of federal and state law makes it clear that petitioners did not escape criminal responsibility under the Sherman Act by the kind of dissolution decreed under Maryland and Delaware law.

[1] See United States v. Line Material Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,456], 202 F. 2d 929; United States v. United States Vanadium Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,283], 230 F. 2d 646. Cf. United States v. P. F. Collier & Son, 208 F. 2d 936.

The Sherman Law in § 8 defines "person" to include corporations "existing" under the laws of any State. The question whether a corporation "exists" for any purpose is thus determined by reference to state law. We conclude that under both Maryland and Delaware law the lives of these corporations were not cut short, as is sometimes done on dissolution, cf. Chicago T. & T. Co. v. Wilcox Bldg. Corp., 302 U. S. 120, but were sufficiently continued so that this proceeding did not abate.

[Maryland "Survival" Statute]

In Maryland, during the period relevant here, though the dissolution of the corporation was effective when the articles of dissolution had been accepted, the corporation continued "in existence for the purpose of paying, satisfying, and discharging any existing debts and obligations . . . ." (Flack's 1 Md. Ann. Code, 1951, Art. 23, § 72(b).) It was also provided in § 78(a) that "such dissolution" shall not "abate any pending suit or proceeding by or against the corporation . . . ." We have found no Maryland decisions interpreting these sections; but we are satisfied that the term "proceeding," no matter how the state court may construe it,[2] implies enough vitality to make the corporation an "existing" enterprise for the purposes of § 8 of the Sherman Act.

[Delaware "Survival" Statute]

The Delaware statute seems equally clear, though again there is no authoritative interpretation of it. It provides that any "proceeding" begun by or against a corporation before or within three years after dissolution shall continue "until any judgments, orders, or decrees therein shall be fully executed." Del. Code Ann., 1953, Tit. 8, § 278; Addy v. Short, 47 Del. 157, 89 A. 2d 136, 139. The term "proceeding" is elsewhere used in the Delaware Code as including criminal prosecutions;[3] and that seems to us to be consistent with its normal construction.[4] We conclude that irrespective of how the Delaware statute may be construed by the Delaware courts, it sufficiently continued the existence of this corporation for the purpose of § 8 of the Sherman Act.

[Policy]

Policy reasons look to the same result. Petitioners were wholly owned subsidiaries of Schenley Industries, Inc. After dissolution they simply became divisions of a new corporation under the same ultimate ownership. In this situation there is no more reason for allowing them to escape criminal penalties than damages in civil suits. As the Court of Appeals noted, a corporation cannot be sent to jail. The discharge of its liabilities whether criminal or civil can be effected only by the payment of money.

It is urged that "debts" in this setting means existing debts. But that seems to us too narrow a reading in light of the provisions in § 279 which contemplates the entry of judgments against the corporation.

tories than it charged in others, with the intent to destroy a competitor, was improperly dismissed by a trial court which held, in effect, that the Arkansas "Unfair Practices Act" was unconstitutional. That Act made it unlawful for a distributor of a commodity in general use to discriminate between different sections, by selling at a lower rate in one than in another, with the intent to destroy competition. In addition, the Act gave injured persons the right to treble damages and an injunction. For purposes of regulation under the police power, a commodity of general use or consumption is impressed with a public interest. Therefore, the Act was a proper exercise of the police power. It was not a price fixing statute; its purpose was to guard against monopolies and encourage competition, and the means adopted were reasonable and appropriate for promoting that purpose. Furthermore, the Act was not void for indefiniteness. The language of the Act set forth as definite a standard as was permitted by the evil to be remedied, namely, the destruction of competition by depressing prices in a locality where there was competition while offsetting the loss by raising prices in another locality where there was no competition.

Appellant commenced this action against the appellee, for an injunction and treble damages, in the Benton County Circuit Court, under the "Unfair Practices Act," Act 253 of 1937 (Ark. Stat. § 70-301). The trial court sustained appellee's demurrer, holding in effect that the Act was unconstitutional, and dismissed the complaint.

[Lowering Prices to Destroy Competition]

The complaint, among other things, alleges that the prices charged by appellee for its ready-mixed concrete in the Rogers and Springdale territory are at lower rates than those charged in other sections and cities served by appellee, after making allowance for transportation, grade, quality and quantity, and that the sale of said ready-mixed concrete at such rates is made with the intent to destroy the competition of appellant, a regularly established dealer.

The "Unfair Practices Act" makes it unlawful for one engaged in the distribution of a commodity of general use or consumption to discriminate between different sections, communities or cities or portions thereof, with intent to destroy competition, by selling at a lower rate in one such section than in another after making allowance for difference in grade, quality or quantity, and the actual cost of transportation. The injured person is given the right to treble damages and an injunction (Ark. Stat. § 70-310).

[Police Power]

Although appellee candidly points out that the "Unfair Practices Act" has been upheld against an attack on its constitutionality in Baratti v. Koser Gin Co., 206 Ark. 813, 177 S. W. 2d 750, and that similar acts have been upheld by the decisions of other states, it is argued that the doctrine embraced in the Act has never been and should never become a part of Arkansas law. The contention that the Act is not a proper exercise of the police power is without merit. In addition to the Baratti decision, our Constitution, Art. 2, § 19, provides: "Perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a republic, and shall not be allowed; . . ."

[Cases Considered]

The Supreme Court of Nebraska, in State v. Drayton, 82 Neb. 254, 260, 117 N. W. 768, 770, in upholding a similar statute regulating monopolies under the police power of the state, said:

". . . It is within the knowledge of all that in many instances persons engaged in the sale of commodities in general use by the people have depressed prices in one locality where there was competition and increased them in others where there was none, thus avoiding loss, until the competitor was driven out of business, when prices would be raised to an unreasonable and oppressive extent, and the people of the district or community supplied from that point would be the sufferers. It was evidently the intention of the legislature to prevent that course of conduct if resorted to for that purpose. The law afforded no protection from the injurious effects of such predatory course. If no protection could be furnished to the people who were compelled to purchase the commodities, it would be easily within the range of possibilities for one person or corporation to practically control the whole commerce of a community, a county, or even the state, exacting such prices as greed might dictate, and yet seeing to it that no others should be allowed to engage in a similar business as competitors . . ."

[Public Interest]

Appellee, citing such case as Noble v. Davis, 204 Ark. 156, 161 S. W. 2d 189, and Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. White River Distributors, Inc. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,953], 224 Ark. 558, 275 S. W. 2d 455, contends that this Court has never upheld price fixing or other regulation of a business of common right in the absence of a finding that it was impressed with a public interest.

The appellee's assumption that this is a price fixing statute is erroneous. Dunnell v. Shelley, 38 Cal. App. 2d 118, 100 P. 2d 830. The purpose of the Act, as stated in Ark. Stat. § 70-313, is to safeguard against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition by prohibiting unfair and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented. We think the means adopted are reasonable and appropriate to promote the purposes mentioned.

It is true that this Court, in Baratti v. Koser Gin Co., went into the question of whether a cotton gin was impressed with a public interest and thus subject to regulation under the police power, but it was there pointed out that one who devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, in effect grants to the public an interest in that use and must submit to be controlled by the public, for the common good, to the extent of the interest thus created. Thus it logically follows that a commodity of general use or consumption, as regulated by the "Unfair Practices Act," is impressed with a public interest for purposes of regulation under the police power.

[Indefiniteness]

Appellee says the Act is void, under Art. 2, § 8, of the Constitution of Arkansas, because it fails to define with reasonable certainty the acts that it declares unlawful. The particular language complained of as being vague and indefinite is "to discriminate between different sections, communities or cities or portions thereof, or between different locations in such sections, communities, cities or portions thereof in this State." Statutes with somewhat similar language were held void for indefiniteness in State v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,065], 195 S. C. 267, 10 S. E. 2d 778, and People v. Austin, 301 Mich. 456, 3 N. W. 2d 841.

In those cases we think the courts overlooked the evils to be remedied by the Act —i. e., to prevent a business from destroying competition by depressing prices in one locality where there is competition and offsetting the loss by raising the prices in another locality where there is no competition. The language in our Act sets forth as definite a standard as the evil to be regulated will permit. For, as was said in State v. Lanesboro Produce & Hatchery Co., 221 Minn. 246, 21 N. W. 2d 792, 163 A. L. R. 1108, the kind of activity here regulated is such that the use of general and flexible terms in fixing the standard is inescapable. That court upheld, as against the contention here made, a statute prohibiting discrimination between "different sections, localities, communities, cities, or villages . . . by purchasing at a higher rate in one locality . . . than is paid . . . in another section, locality, community, city or village." See annotations in 52 A. L. R. 169 and 163 A. L. R. 1124.

Case No. 1377 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Boycotts—Coercion—Exclusion from Trade—Refusal to Deal.—Retail sellers of floor covering materials and their trade association were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into agreements to hinder or prevent the sale of floor covering materials to any person. The decree also prohibited agreements to induce or coerce manufacturers or wholesalers to refuse to deal with or discriminate against any person or class of persons, to refuse to purchase from or deal with any manufacturer or wholesaler, and to induce or coerce any person or class of persons to refrain from dealing in materials produced or distributed by any person.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.533, 2005.575, 2005.660, 2005.785.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Trade Associations—Association Membership as Means of Trade Restraint—Coercion.—Retail sellers of floor covering materials were prohibited by a consent decree from belonging to or participating in the activities of any trade association or other organization whose activities were inconsistent with the decree. Also, the decree prohibited the association and its members from refusing to deal with any wholesaler or manufacturer, inducing or coercing others not to deal in materials produced or distributed by any person, and inducing or coercing manufacturers or wholesalers not to deal with any person. In addition, the association was ordered to incorporate the prohibitions of the decree into the association's by-laws and to require compliance as a condition to membership.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.121, 2017.300.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Specific Relief—Incorporation of Decree's Prohibitions Into Trade Association's By-Laws.—An association of retail sellers of floor covering materials, in an action charging the association and its members with boycotting manufacturers which sold to non-approved wholesalers and retailers, was ordered by a consent decree to incorporate the prohibitions of the decree into its by-laws and to make compliance therewith a condition to membership.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

THOMAS C. EGAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on April 2, 1958; the defendants having appeared herein and filed their answers to said complaint denying any violations of law; and the plaintiff and the said defendants, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or of law herein; and specifically without admission by any party in respect to any such issue; and the Court having considered the matter and being duly advised;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony or evidence has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of the parties hereto,

It is hereby Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed as follows:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

I

[Jurisdiction]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and all the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" means an individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trustee or any other business or legal entity;

(B) "Floor covering materials" means both hard and soft surface floor coverings, including but not limited to rugs, rug cushions, carpet, linoleum, and tile of types other than ceramic;

(C) "Retail store" or "retailer" means any person who maintains stocks of floor covering materials for resale to consumers; and

(D) "Wholesaler" means any person engaged in the purchase of floor covering materials from manufacturers thereof for sale or distribution to retail stores or other persons selling to ultimate consumers.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to each such defendant and to his or its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, co-partners, successors and assigns, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Exclusion from Trade—Boycotts]

The defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, among themselves or with any other person directly or indirectly to:

(A) Hinder, restrict, limit or prevent the sale of floor covering materials to any person or group or class of persons;

(B) Hinder, restrict, limit or prevent any manufacturer or wholesaler of floor covering materials from selling floor covering materials to any person;

(C) Refuse or threaten to refuse to purchase floor covering materials from or otherwise deal with any manufacturer or wholesaler thereof;

(D) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce any person or group or class of persons to refrain from purchasing, selling or distributing floor covering materials produced or distributed by any person; and

(E) Induce, compel or coerce, or attempt to induce, compel or coerce any manufacturer or wholesaler of floor covering materials to refuse to deal with or discriminate against any person or group or class of persons in connection with the purchase, sale or distribution of floor covering materials.

V

[Practices Prohibited]

Each defendant is enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly:

(A) Inducing, compelling or coercing, or attempting to induce, compel or coerce any manufacturer, wholesaler or retailer to refrain from purchasing, selling or discriminating in the purchase, sale or distribution of floor covering materials from or to any person or group or class of persons; and

(B) Belonging to, organizing, becoming a member of, or participating in the activities of any trade association or other organization, the activities of which are or may be inconsistent with any provision of this Final Judgment.

VI

[Specific Relief]

The defendant Association is ordered and directed:

(A) Within thirty (30) days after entry hereof, to serve upon each of its present and former members a conformed copy of this Final Judgment;

(B) To institute forthwith and to complete within three months from the date of this Final Judgment such proceedings as may be appropriate and necessary to adopt by-laws incorporating therein Sections IV and V of this judgment;

(C) To furnish to each of its present and future members a copy of its by-laws adopted in accordance with subsection (B) of this Section VI and require compliance with said by-laws as a condition of membership or continued membership;

(D) To expel promptly from membership any present or future member who shall violate any of those provisions of its by-laws which incorporate Sections IV and V of this Final Judgment when said Association shall have knowledge of such violation; and

(E) Within four months after the date of entry of this Final Judgment to file with this Court and serve upon the plaintiff an affidavit setting forth the fact and manner of its compliance with this Section VI.

VII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant, be permitted,

(A) Access, during the office hours of said defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers and employees of such defendant who may have counsel present, regarding such matters.

Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, said defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parites to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 88—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25091. Argued February 5, 1959. Decided April 15, 1959.

On Petition to Review an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Quantity Discounts Based on Annual Dollar Volume—Granting Discounts to Distributors Purchasing Through Buying Organizations—Legality.—An automotive parts manufacturer's practice of granting rebates to its distributors based on annual dollar volume of sales was properly found by the Federal Trade Commission to have violated Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Under the manufacturer's standard rebate contracts, a distributor was granted a percentage rebate of the list price of the purchased articles, varying with the net amount of its purchases in the calendar year from nothing at all for purchases totaling less than $1,800 to a maximum of 20 per cent of list price where the distributor's annual purchases were more than $100,000. Also, the manufacturer sold to distributors who had joined together in co-operative buying groups. They ordered and received shipments from the manufacturer exactly as if they had not belonged to the group; however, payments, which were made through the group office, were for list price, less a percentage discount equivalent to the rebate allowed under the uniform contracts for annual purchases equal to the aggregate purchases of the group. Under the discount plans, competing distributors bought at different net prices. The volume discounts, which related to the amount of the customer's total annual purchases and not to individual sales, did not reflect any cost savings which might accrue to the manufacturer on large individual orders, but merely benefited the more powerful purchasers in the industry. The buying groups brought into being by the widespread use of the discounts made no improvement in the efficiency or real cost of distributing auto parts to the public; they functioned entirely through their aggregate buying power. The conditions in the industry as disclosed in the instant case were apparently precisely those which the Robinson-Patman Act was intended to eliminate.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3508.754, 3508.885.

Price Discrimination—Effect of Price Discrimination on Competition—Quantity Discounts and Group Buying Organizations—Reasonable Probability of Unlawful Effect—Effect on Competition as Distinguished from Effect on Competitors.—Where an automotive parts manufacturer's practices of granting rebates to its distributors based on annual dollar volume of sales and of granting discounts to group buying distributors based on the aggregate purchases of the group were found to have resulted in different net prices to competing distributors, the manufacturer contended that its pricing practices did not have an unlawful effect on competition in the resale of its products. It stressed the testimony of many of its distributors that they never lost sales because of having to pay a higher price than competitors paid and emphasized its proof of several competitive situations where a distributor paying a higher net price than its competitors nevertheless maintained a more prosperous and more rapidly expanding business. It was held that the "statute, however, speaks of effects on competition—not on competitors—and substantially probable, rather than actual, effects are all that it requires." The manufacturer's varying volume rebate schedules and the similar practices of others in the industry had been a substantial factor in the formation of the distributor's joint purchasing groups, and, as acknowledged by the manufacturer, competition as to price in the resale of its products was all but completely nonexistent because distributors consistently followed manufacturers' suggested resale price lists. In view of the evidence of the distributors' competitive mood, the growth of joint purchasing groups could tend only further to lessen competition, and the manufacturer's pricing practices could well foster that tendency.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3506.400, 3506.460, 3506.788.

Price Discrimination—Defenses—Meeting Competition—Meeting Individual Rather Than General Competitive Conditions—Retention of Customers.—Where an automotive parts manufacturer's practices of granting rebates to its distributors based on annual dollar volume of sales and of granting discounts to group buying distributors based on the aggregate purchases of the group were found to be unlawful, the manufacturer's contention that its prices were made in good faith to meet competition was rejected. "As this defense is made only as to its sales to joint purchasing groups, the Commission's order must stand in any event, since the standard distributor contracts [granting such rebates] have themselves been shown to result in discriminations in price which may lessen competition." Moreover, it is well settled that a lowered price is within the defense only if it is made in response to an individual competitive demand, and not as part of the seller's pricing system and only if it is used defensively to hold customers rather than to gain new ones. The testimony of the manufacturer "belies its assertion here that net prices paid by a buying group were always individually negotiated, and not merely an outgrowth of its standard distributor contracts; and the record is also clear that petitioner gained many new customers through the buying groups with which it dealt."

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission order to cease and desist in Dkt. 5721.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, MADDEN, Judge, United States Court of Claims,* and HINCKS, Circuit Judge.

Standard Motor Products, Inc., petitions to review and set aside a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission. Order affirmed.

[Discrimination Order—Review]

CLARK, Chief Judge [In full text]: This proceeding brings for review an order of the Federal Trade Commission directing the petitioner, Standard Motor Products, Inc., to cease and desist from discriminating in the net sale prices of its products in violation of § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(a). The Commission's order is directed against Standard's practices of making rebates to its distributors based on volume sales. Standard's pricing practices here in question are closely similar to those of other manufacturers of replacement auto parts, and this case is one of several instituted by the Commission throughout the industry.[1]

[Pricing Practices]

Standard manufactures and sells to distributors throughout the United States automotive ignition parts and related items for replacement purposes. These distributors do not have exclusive territories, but compete with other dealers within a fifty-mile or larger radius in the resale of petitioner's products. The majority of petitioner's customers buy from it under one of its two standard rebate contracts, which each grant the distributor a percentage rebate of the list price of the purchased articles, varying with the net amount of its purchases in the calendar year from nothing at all for purchases totaling less than $1,800 to a maximum of 20% of list price where the distributor's annual purchases are more than $100,000. In addition, petitioner sells a substantial portion of its output to distributors who have joined together in cooperative buying groups. These distributors order and receive shipments direct from Standard exactly as if they did not belong to a buying group; but payments, made through the group office, are for list price, less a percentage discount equivalent to the rebate allowed under petitioner's uniform contracts for annual purchases equal to the aggregate purchases of the group. The proof before the trial examiner showed, as is apparent from the above facts, that in many instances competing distributors in effect buy petitioner's products at different net prices. Both the hearing and the Commission concluded that these pricing practices violated the Robinson-Patman Act.

[Robinson-Patman Act]

The conditions in the replacement auto parts industry disclosed by the record here seem precisely those which the Robinson-Patman Act was intended to eliminate. The statute was enacted in direct response to the growth of a few nationwide chain store corporations in the 1920's and 1930's. It is evident from the legislative history that Congress sought to curtail the concentration of economic power in the distributive area of the economy by eliminating inequalities derived from sheer economic power, while at the same time not stifling competition based on real cost savings and increased efficiency. H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 6-7; Sen. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 3. See also F. T. C., Final Report on the Chain Store Investigation (1934); Sen. Res. 224, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., 69 Cong. Rec. 7857 (1928). The volume discounts here—which relate to the amount of the customer's total annual purchases, and not to individual sales—do not reflect any cost savings which might accrue to petitioner on large individual orders, but merely benefit the more powerful purchasers in the industry. And the buying groups brought into being by the widespread use of these discounts make no improvement in the efficiency or real cost of distributing auto parts to the public, but, as is clear from the testimony of Standard's own witnesses, function entirely through their aggregate buying power.

[Competitive Effects]

On this petition to review petitioner vigorously attacks the Commission's finding that its pricing activities have an unlawful effect on competition in distributors' resale of its products. It stresses the testimony of many of its distributors that they never lost sales because of having to pay a higher price than competitors paid for Standard's products and emphasizes its proof of several competitive situations where a distributor paying a higher net price than its competitors nevertheless maintained a more prosperous and more rapidly expanding business. The statute, however, speaks of effects on competition—not on competitors — and substantially probable, rather than actual, effects are all that it requires: It prohibits all price discriminations "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowlingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." 15 U. S. C. § 13(a). (Italics supplied.) It is clear that petitioner's varying volume rebate schedules and the similar practices of other manufacturers in the industry have been a substantial factor in the formation of the distributor's joint purchasing groups. And, as petitioner readily acknowledges, competition as to price in the resale of its products is presently all but completely nonexistent because distributors consistently follow manufacturers' suggested resale price lists. It is apparent, in view of this clear evidence of the distributors' competitive mood, that the growth of joint purchasing groups among the distributors can tend only further to lessen competition,[2] and petitioner's pricing practices may well foster this tendency. In short, we have here not the bare minimum prima facie case held sufficient in F. T. C. v. Morton Salt Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,247], 334 U. S. 37, 1 A. L. R. 2d 260, and Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. F. T. C., 2 Cir., [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,353] 148 F. 2d 378, certiorari denied 326 U. S. 734, but rather an industry-wide pricing system with decided anticompetitive tendencies. Cf. F. T. C. v. Cement Institute [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,237], 333 U. S. 683, 721-726; F. T. C. v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,364], 324 U. S. 746; Corn Products Refining Co. v. F. T. C. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,363,], 324 U. S. 726. Whatever conflict may occasionally arise between the Robinson-Patman Act and more fundamental antitrust goals, cf. Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. F. T. C. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,503], 346 U. S. 61, 74; Standard Oil Co. v. F. T. C. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231, 249, we perceive none in the Commission's action in this case.

[Meeting Competition Defense]

Petitioner also seeks to avail itself of the affirmative defense provided in § 2(b) of the Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(b), which exempts differences in price made in good faith to meet an equally low price offered the favored purchaser by a competitor. As this defense is made only as to its sales to joint purchasing groups, the Commission's order must stand in any event, since the standard distributor contracts have themselves been shown to result in discriminations in price which may lessen competition. Moreover, it is well settled that a lowered price is within § 2(b) only if it is made in response to an individual competitive demand, and not as part of the seller's pricing system, F. T. C. v. Cement Institute, supra, [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,237] 333 U. S.

[2] These buying groups have themselves been the subject of Commission proceedings. In the Matter of Warehouse Distributors, Inc., F. T. C. Docket 6837; In the Matter of Mid-West Warehouse Distributors, Inc., F. T. C. Docket 6888; In the Matter of Metropolitan Automotive Wholesalers Cooperative, Inc., F. T. C. Docket 5724.

683, 721-726; F. T. C. v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., supra, [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,364] 324 U. S. 746, and only if it is used defensively to hold customers rather than to gain new ones. Standard Oil Co. v. F. T. C. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231, 249-250. The testimony of petitioner's own vice president belies its assertion here that net prices paid by a buying group were always individually negotiated, and not merely an outgrowth of its standard distributor contracts; and the record is also clear that petitioner gained many new customers through the buying groups with which it dealt. Hence the Commission's rejection of Standard's claim under § 2(b) is supported by substantial evidence.

[Affirmed]

We see no further merit in petitioner's contentions. Nor do we deem it necessary or useful to entertain its motion to strike portions of the Commission's and its own appendices.

Order affirmed.

Sherman, Clayton, and Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Elements and Proof of Conspiracy—Absence of "Agreement."—A wholesale distributor's charge that a manufacturer of portable electric power tools terminated its distributorship pursuant to a price fixing scheme, combination, and conspiracy was dismissed on the ground that it failed to contain the essential allegation of agreement or contract. Without that allegation, no cause of action could have been stated. The essence of a conspiracy is an agreement, which means that two or more persons, however informal the medium may be, agree to do or refrain from doing one or more things. It was alleged that the distributorship was terminated after the distributor, having received a contract to supply a government agency by submitting a lower bid than "competing distributors," refused to revise its quoted prices to conform to those suggested by the manufacturer. It does not follow, however, that the severance was the result of a contract, combination, or conspiracy. In the absence of an allegation to the contrary, the bids submitted must be deemed unrestrained individual acts; each of the distributors might have believed that it was to its individual interest to follow the manufacturer's resale price recommendations. A state of facts was recited that could have had their origin in a conspiracy, but the complaint did not state that one ever came into existence, and did not name the period embraced or the parties thereto.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.360, 2005.395.

Price Discrimination—Analysis and Scope of Clayton Act, Section 2(a)— Selection of Customers—Refusal to Deal—Termination of Distributorship.—A manufacturer of portable electric power tools did not violate the antitrust laws by terminating the franchise of a distributor where the distributorship was terminable at the option of either party. In view of the termination of the commercial relationship of the parties, the manufacturer had the right to refuse to sell anything to the distributor.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.950.

Price Discrimination—Practices Constituting Discrimination—Classification of Customers—Quantity Discounts—Causing Others to Discriminate—Legality.—A distributor of portable electric power tools, in an action alleging that it was compelled to discriminate against its smaller volume purchasers by a manufacturer's resale price fixing plan, failed to allege ultimate facts asserting a cause of action. There was no allegation that the manufacturer had contrived its recommended prices so that one purchaser had been charged a higher price for like goods than had been charged to one or more of that purchaser's competitors. It was unclear as to whether the distributor claimed the recommended price differentials, which were based upon volume of purchase, were illegal as such, or whether the distributor condemned the formula employed by the manufacturer in reaching its suggested scale of prices. In either case, the nature of the claim for relief was obscure. Damages were claimed by way of loss of sales, but that was a mere assertion and not sufficient as a pleading. Also, if any sales were lost, the distributor's own conduct in maintaining its distributorship contributed to that result.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.460, 3508, 3508.295.

Price Discrimination—Services or Facilities Furnished by Seller—Manufacturer's Repair of Tools Owned by Distributor's Customers—Absence of "Sale."—A distributor's allegation that a manufacturer of portable electric power tools, in repairing tools owned by the distributor's customers, granted less favorable discounts than it granted to other distributors stated no cause of action under the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act. No sale of chattels is involved in the making of necessary repairs to mechanical devices. Cases cited by the distributor did not meet that argument since those cases involved services and facilities which were incident to sales promotion efforts and constituted an element thereof. In the instant case, the repairs had no relation to the original sale of the article itself but to an independent transaction. With respect to a sale of repair parts for $2.88, the matter was too small to engage the attention of the court.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Byers, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is a defendants' motion addressed to the amended complaint filed January 7, 1959 following the decision of this court of December 1, 1958, reported in 167 Fed. Supp. 860 [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,214].

The relief sought is a dismissal of the three causes as now pleaded, (F. R. C. P. 12b) or for summary judgment on the third cause for lack of a genuine issue as to any material fact; and for such other relief, etc.

It is not proposed to rehearse what has been already written concerning the general nature and apparent scope of the controversy between these parties, and reference to the said opinion will be confined to the plain necessities of this motion.

[Plaintiff's Brief]

The plaintiff's present brief contains the following:

"The core of the case: illegal and predatory price fixing

"The basic challenge of the complaint is to the vertical and discriminatory price fixing plan and scheme by defendant Black & Decker (called 'B & D' herein), whereby B & D not only illegally maintains and controls the resale prices charged to the regular trade by certain of its named distributors of its industrial line of tools, equipment and parts, but also dictates and manipulates the resale prices charged by those distributors on government purchases of B & D products."

The brief continues for some thirty pages to argue the merits of the plaintiff's claim for relief.

The present task of the court is to examine the pleading as such, to ascertain if it is adequate to present triable issues.

The first paragraph asserts the filing of the complaint under the Clayton Act, the Sherman Act, and the Robinson-Patman Act. The next seven paragraphs purport to describe the corporate defendant, its plant and several officers (incidentally that it proclaims itself, and on information and belief that it is "the world's largest and predominant manufacturer of portable electric power tools, equipment and accessories"*).

* If this is meant to ascribe to the defendant B & D the status of a monopoly, it is legally insufficient in the opinion of this court.

Also comprehended is the description of the defendant Fischer as a District Manager of its New York office; the widespread use of the defendants' products, and its sale thereof to distributors, and the resale thereof; and the place that appliances, parts and equipment occupied in the business of the defendant. That the B & D two-inch portable electric hammers with self-contained electric motor are alone manufactured by the defendant. That would seem to be an obvious thing, and free from any taint of illegality.

The next three paragraphs recite the plaintiff's corporate status, and its business activities; also its relations to defendant prior to August 6, 1958.

The foregoing may be thought of as descriptive and as introductory to the controversy.

Paragraph 12 refers to the 30% discount to wholesale distributors in general, in the New York and Newark areas, among which was the plaintiff, until the date last mentioned.

Paragraph 13 contains a list of seven distributors other than plaintiff, followed by the words "(The above designated distributors are hereinafter called 'competing distributors')."

[First Cause of Action]

The asserted first cause of action is found in paragraphs 15 to 23 inclusive.

15 alleges bidding for purchases by governmental agencies of such devices, the specifications "for descriptive or other like purposes," (a cryptic expression) "often expressly designate products and accessories of Black & Decker by name as being the kind and quality of tools, etc. required by them."

16 alleges that the course of such trade "has been predicated upon free, competitive and non-collusive bidding by the prospective sellers thereof, the government contracts to purchase the same being awarded to the responsible bidder offering to sell and deliver to required articles at the lowest price."

17 alleges that in June 1957 the defendants in order to control and restrain competition between "competing distributors" including plaintiff, devised etc. a plan and scheme artificially fixing and controlling minimum sales prices on such bids, to which plaintiff was expected to adhere.

18. In furtherance thereof, five specifications are pleaded:

(a) Surveillance and report concerning any distributor who failed or refused to adhere to such minimum prices.

(b) Threats to blacklist and boycott such distributors.

(c) Threats to cancel the distributorship of such distributors.

(d) Threats to reduce or eliminate the 30% discount of such distributors.

(e) Require all distributors "to ascertain and clear with Black & Decker District Office" under Fischer's management, such minimum prices.

19. "In effect the price fixing plan and scheme described in paragraphs 17 and 18 above was and is the product of and results in agreement, understanding, combination and conspiracy by and between Black & Decker, Fischer and its distributors as aforesaid to restrain competition and lessen trade and commerce in the sale of goods and commodities among the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia."

[Termination of Distributorship]

20, 21, 22 and 23 may be paraphrased to recite the submission of a bid by plaintiff to the New York City Housing Authority on July 16, 1958 at a lower price than any of the other "competing distributors" who also submitted bids. That on July 22, 1958 Fischer threatened that unless plaintiff's quoted prices were to be revised to conform to the scale suggested by defendant, plaintiff would cease to be a B & D distributor. That plaintiff received the contract from the Housing Authority as the lowest bidder on July 30, 1958. That on August 6, 1958 plaintiff's distributorship was terminated by defendant. That this was done pursuant to the price fixing scheme, combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade as alleged.

It will be seen that the plaintiff's real grievance is the loss of its distributorship, which as has been heretofore explained, was terminable at the option of either party.

[Conspiracy]

The first complaint was inadequate to charge a conspiracy between the defendant and any named person or persons, so that a clear issue on the subject could be framed for the purpose of a responsive pleading. Does the amended complaint cure the defect?

To answer that question, it is necessary to remember that the essence of a conspiracy is an agreement, which means that two or more persons—however informal the medium may be—agree to do or refrain from doing one or more things. A conspiracy may embrace an illegal object, or a legal purpose illegally to be effected, but the fundamental requirement is none the less to be averred, in order that issue may be joined for the purpose of trial.

[Absence of "Agreement"]

The amended complaint is replete with alleged evidence, but is deficient in failing to contain the essential allegation of agreement or contract, without which no cause can be deemed to have been stated.

The bids for the Housing Administration contract, in the absence of an allegation to the contrary, must be deemed to have been the unrestrained individual act of each of the bidders, not a concerted thing, or done pursuant to an agreement between any of them and the defendant, or among themselves.

For all that is alleged in the challenged pleading, each of the other "competing distributors" may have believed that it was to his (its) individual interest to follow the resale price recommendations promulgated by defendant and therefore acted accordingly; the plaintiff elected otherwise as was its right. Having done so, it does not follow that the severance of its mutually terminable distributorship was the result of a "contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or otherwise * * *" since no such thing is alleged.

The most that can be said for the amended complaint is that it recites a state of purported facts that could have had their origin in a conspiracy, but it does not state that one ever came into existence, naming the period embraced, or the parties thereto.

The mere recital of the names of the competing distributors, does not supply the deficiency above discussed. Apparently the plaintiff's grievance is in part against them; since each of them has the right to conduct business according to his or its own concepts of expediency, if and when acting alone, no reason is pleaded or perceived to clothe the plaintiff with the right to interpose any legal bar to the exercise of that right, on the part of each of the plaintiff's competitors.

The plaintiff's apparent reliance upon U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707, is difficult to understand, in view of the elaborate system of contracts between manufacturer, distributors and retail dealers present in that case. In modifying a decree obtained by the government, the court observed (p. 728):

> "In a business, such as Soft-Lite, which deals in a specialty of a luxury or near luxury character," (tinted optical lenses) "the right to select its customers may well be the most essential factor in the maintenance of the highest standards of service. We are, as the District Court apparently was, loath to deny to Soft-Lite this privilege of selection. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, 307; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573. * * * The path is narrow between the permissible selection of customers under the decision in Colgate & Co. and unlawful arrangements as to prices under this decree, but we think Soft-Lite is entitled to traverse it, after a reasonable interim, etc."

The plaintiff's characterization of the Colgate decision as "dubious," is not in accord with the foregoing views of the Supreme Court.

[Conspiracy Charge Dismissed]

Without extending the discussion, it is clear to this court that the amended complaint does not plead ultimate facts as to the alleged conspiracy or contract in restraint of trade, necessary to present its asserted claim for relief. As to the first cause of action as pleaded, the defendants' motion to dismiss is granted.

[Second Cause of Action—Price Discrimination]

The second cause is still difficult to understand.

Apparently the plaintiff's present brief calls attention to but one difference from the original complaint, namely that the differential in recommended prices, based upon the quantity of merchandise involved, has "nothing to do with 'quantity or volume' economies. Rather, it is expressly alleged that such price distinctions are 'wholly arbitrary and artificial * * * having no actual relation to savings to Black & Decker or its said distributors in the cost of the manufacture, sale and delivery of said products from any different methods or quantities in which the said goods are sold' * * * and that the 'affected' customers are themselves 'in general competition with each other'."

Since this alleged cause includes paragraphs 1 through 13 already stated, and avers that in 1954 the defendant promulgated the said plan, and since the plaintiff was one of such distributors for the ensuing period until August 6, 1958, there is a manifest significance in the fact that it did not deem itself to be the victim of what it now complains, until the termination of its distributorship.

If upon the promulgation of the suggested price differentials, the plaintiff had seceded from its distributor status for the reasons now advanced, its conduct would have been consistent with a sense of mission to protect a theoretical public interest, but which by its own conduct it has foreclosed itself from now asserting.

That which is still unclear in the amended pleading is whether recommended price differentials based upon volume of purchase is claimed to be illegal as such; or whether it is the formula employed by defendant in reaching its suggested scale of prices that is condemned by plaintiff. In either case, the nature of plaintiff's claim for relief is obscure.

[Alleged Loss of Sales]

True, paragraph 31 alleges that plaintiff sustained damages by way of loss of sales, and in 32 that the continued existence of the complained of list of recommended prices threatens it with irreparable harm and damage; these mere assertions however are not of themselves sufficient for the purposes of even average good pleading. See Mason City etc. v. Clapper [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,553], 144 F. Supp. 754 at 766.

If any sales were indeed lost to plaintiff between 1954 and 1958, that result was contributed to by its own conduct in maintaining its distributorship.

There is no requirement of law cited in plaintiff's brief, or otherwise revealed, to the effect that in order to assert its present alleged cause, plaintiff was required to operate under the selling plan of which it now complains, for a certain number of years, to the end that its grievances should ripen into a claim for relief, or cause of action, whichever term is preferred.

There is no allegation that defendant has contrived its recommendations so that one purchaser has been charged a higher price for like goods than has been charged one or more of the latter's competitors. That would be necessary to invoke Fed. Trade Comm'n. v. Morton Salt Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,247], 334 U. S. 37.

While this, and other cases cited by plaintiff, were Federal Trade Commission proceedings, undertaken in the public interest, it is not presently suggested that the plaintiff under appropriate circumstances, could not assert in its own behalf, an alleged cause of action, said to arise from illegal conduct on the part of the defendant. It is the present opinion, however, that plaintiff has not alleged ultimate facts to assert a cause under the statutes which have been invoked, arising during the period of its distributorship, to render the amended complaint as to the second cause, any more adequate as a pleading, than the original one. Cf. Gerli v. Silk Ass'n., 36 F. (2d) 959.

In paragraph 16 the nature of the competition between all distributors of B & D products, prior to the termination of plaintiff's distributorship, is described as having been "free, competitive and non-collusive" which must be read as part of this second cause. That being admitted for present purposes, it is apparent that any inherent infirmity in the scale of defendant's recommended prices which allegedly operated to the detriment of the plaintiff, should be the subject of a precise factual allegation, not a mere statement in argumentative form of conclusions drawn from dissertations and judicial opinions having to do with unrelated circumstances.

[Second Cause Dismissed]

The requirements of good pleading in such cases is clearly stated in Baim & Blank etc. v. Admiral, etc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,088], 132 F. Supp. 412. This amended pleading does not survive the test.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

As to the second cause, the defendants' motion is granted.

[Third Cause of Action]

As to the third cause, the motion for summary judgment has much to commend it, in view of the narrow scope of the controversy; seemingly but two items are involved as to transactions occurring since August 6, 1958, (a) the sale of repair parts for $2.88; (b) the making of repairs to tools owned by plaintiff's customers, in the sum of $240.71.

These are said to have been subject to a less favorable discount than is accorded to defendant's distributors listed in the amended complaint.

[Services or Facilities Furnished by Seller]

As to the second item, the plaintiff does not meet the argument that no sale of chattels is involved in the making of necessary repairs to mechanical devices, by citing the Federal Trade Commission cases of Elizabeth Arden [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,467], (156 F. (2d) 132) and Simplicity Pattern Co. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,047], (258 F. (2d) 673). Both involved aids to selling, i.e. demonstrators in the first, and cabinets and catalogues in the second. These services and facilities were incident to sales promotion efforts and constituted an element thereof.

Here the repairs had no relation to the original sale of the article itself, but to an independent transaction, the occasion for which was consequent upon but quite remote from what had gone before.

The reasoning contained in General Shale etc. v. Struck etc. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,243], 132 F. (2d) 425, (cert. denied, 318 U. S. 780) at page 428, second column, is similar to that which is applicable to this repair job. The transaction in its essence was between the defendant and the owner of the device to which repairs were made, although the plaintiff was the go-between and is dissatisfied with its handling commission.

In view of the termination of the commercial relationship of the parties, the defendants' right to refuse to sell anything to the plaintiff, does not constitute a violation of law. Naifeh v. Ronson, etc. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,925], 218 F. (2d) 202.

With respect to the $2.88 sale, it is too small a matter to engage the attention of the court, even to assuage the plaintiff's appetite for litigation.

[Summary Judgment Granted]

At best, the plaintiff's third cause as pleaded is a make-weight which adds nothing to its claim for relief, as set forth in the first asserted cause. The pleadings and the affidavits considered in this connection now make it clear to this court that there is no material issue of fact which ought to be tried. It follows that as to this branch of the amended complaint, the defendants' motion under Rule 56 must be granted.

Settle order in accordance with the foregoing.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Civil Action No. 4056-54. Dated April 3, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Production of Evidence—Scope of Interrogatories—Compilation of Data—Burdensome Research.—A motor carrier which charged railroads with conspiring to destroy its business was not required to answer interrogatories seeking detailed data as to the pounds of freight handled and the revenue received by each of the motor carrier's terminals. Interrogatories under Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure were never intended to compel an adversary to search and analyze more than five million documents in order to furnish the answers. It was contended that the railroads were entitled to know the traffic gained or lost by the motor carrier in order to be able to test the carrier's charges that its losses of business were due to the railroad's alleged unlawful conduct. However, burdensome research is properly considered beyond the scope of Rule 33. That rule requires parties served with interrogatories to furnish such information as is "available" to them; however, the courts have applied a kind of "rule of reason" in the construction and application of the rule. An interrogated party should not be required to search its own records in order to compile and correlate information for the benefit of its adversary where the adversary has the right to inspect the records itself.

[Objections to Interrogatories]

JOHN J. SIRICA, District Judge [In full text]: On April 12, 1955, defendants Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, et al., served the plaintiff with certain interrogatories under Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The Plaintiff answered some of these questions and objected to others. The questions still under objection as of this date fall into two classes. The first group [1 A-E-23(a)-(f)], seeks detailed data as to the pounds of freight handled inbound and outbound by each of plaintiff's truck terminals and the monthly gross revenue received by Riss for traffic handled solely by Riss at each of its terminals. These questions also deal with "interline" traffic; i. e., traffic from connecting truck lines, at each terminal and request information as to the monthly figures on collections from shippers, the amount of these collections kept by Riss, the amount paid to interline carriers and the amount received by Riss from connecting lines. The second group of interrogatories [I-M and I-P], yet under objection, seek information as to the plaintiff's net income before taxes for all trucking operations performed for the United States and identical information with respect to the transport of ammunition and explosives for the United States.

[Compilation of Data]

With respect to the first group, it is plaintiff's position that, in view of the manner in which its records are kept, the only way to obtain the precise information desired by defendants would be to analyze every individual freight bill cut by Riss. It is argued that this would be a burdensome task since about five million bills would be involved in the operation. Defendants reply that they are entitled to know the traffic gained or lost by plaintiff at each of its terminals during the years 1950 to 1957 in order to be able to test plaintiff's charges that its losses of business were due to defendant's unlawful conduct.

[Prior Proceedings]

The court has heard argument on these objections several times in whole or in part. At the last session, on February 24, 1959, the court urged both sides to hold a conference among themselves in an effort to work out an arrangement satisfactory to all. Such a conference was held on March 3 and its results were first brought to the court's attention by a letter from Mr. McGlothlin dated March 9, 1959 sent on behalf of defendants concerned with these interrogatories. It was there stated that plaintiff's counsel had agreed to furnish, among other data, monthly figures as to revenue inbound and outbound from each of its terminals, along with revenues and tonnage received from connecting carriers. With respect to the second group of requests, it was said that plaintiff had agreed to provide the defendants with a study it was preparing showing a breakdown of the cost of the plaintiff's operations for the United States Government, if the study appears satisfactory to the plaintiff from an accounting standpoint. Plaintiff's counsel, however, in his letter to Mr. McGlothlin dated March 13, 1959, states a different version of what he had agreed to during the conference. He explains that he had only offered to provide certain samples of the kind of records kept by the company, some of them involving monthly figures and had offered to furnish complete sets of records in the form regularly kept if defendants would be willing to accept them instead of a bill-by-bill analysis. In a letter dated March 16 to the court, Mr. McKay, an associate of Mr. McGlothlin, contended that defendants' counsel had not agreed to and had not been authorized to agree to accept "monthly figures" as adequate answers to the first group of interrogatories. In view of the inability of counsel to reach a settlement, defendants request the court to rule on the objections now.

[Rule 33]

The initial sentence of Rule 33, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, reads as follows:

> "Any party may serve upon any adverse party written interrogatories to be answered by the party served or, if the party served is a public or private corporation or a partnership or association, by any officer or agent, who shall furnish such information as is available to the party." (Emphasis supplied.)

["Burdensome Research" Not Required]

The term "available" could be used in an absolute sense as meaning obtainable at any cost in time, money and effort or it could indicate that which is reasonably available to the party interrogated. In dealing with interrogatories involving substantial amount of research and compilation of data, the courts have often exercised their discretion and applied a kind of "rule of reason" in the construction and application of Rule 33. As Judge Holtzoff pointed out in Vargos v. Clark, 6 F. R. D. 635 (D. C. D. C. 1949) at page 636:

> "So, too, interrogatories are not to be used in an oppressive manner. An adverse party should not be required to perform burdensome labors or to execute difficult and expensive tasks, in searching for facts and classifying and compiling data. A litigant may not compel his adversary to go to work for him."

It has also been said that the court should not require an interrogated party to search its own records in order to compile and correlate information for the benefit of its adversary where the adversary has the right to inspect the records themselves. Porter v. Bremer, 12 F. R. D. 187 (N. D. Ohio 1951). In Porter v. Montaldo's, 71 F. Supp. 372 (S. D. Ohio 1946), the court declined to require the defendant in a Price Control Act Suit brought by the government to go through complicated accounting and auditing operations on his own books in order to show in what instances defendant had violated the price regulations. It was also pointed out in Cinema Amusements, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,622], 7 F. R. D. 318, 321 (D. Del. 1947) that:

> ". . . Clearly an interrogated party must furnish relevant information in his possession which can be obtained without great labor or expense.
> "Interrogatories under Rule 33, however, cannot be construed so as to displace entirely the right or necessity of a party to obtain information and compile data at his own expense by discovery process through the inspection of books or documents under Rule 34."

The underlying rationale of these decisions seems to be that burdensome research is properly considered beyond the scope of Rule 33. It is the court's conclusion that interrogatories under Rule 33 were never intended to compel an adversary to search and analyze more than five million documents in order to furnish the answers.

[Objections Sustained]

Therefore, plaintiff's objections to interrogatories I A-E 23(a)-(f) in their present form must be sustained.

[Ruling Withheld]

No ruling will be made with respect to the objections filed as to interrogatories I-M and I-P since the above-mentioned correspondence indicates a possibility that these matters might be settled by an agreement of counsel. Counsel for the parties will be allowed 30 days from this date within which to arrive at an agreement regarding these interrogatories.

Counsel for plaintiff will submit an appropriate order.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 15,714. Dated April 23, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable—Sufficiency of Proof—Fact of Damages as Distinguished from Amount—Causation—Competency of Proof—Loss of Hypothetical Profits.—In a patent infringement action, a zipper manufacturer's counterclaim charging the patentee with unlawfully combining and conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade was properly dismissed because of lack of proof of damage and causation. In its offer of proof as to the fact of injury, all that the manufacturer offered was the testimony of a certified public accountant regarding a loss of hypothetical profits. The rule precluding the recovery of uncertain damages applies to those damages which are not the certain result of the wrong; it does not apply to those which are definitely attributable to the wrong, but only uncertain as to the amount. If a causal connection between the unlawful acts of the patentee and the resultant injury to the manufacturer's property or business had been established with reasonable probability, the court could have made a just and reasonable estimate of the damages. However, the offer of proof of loss of hypothetical profits did not establish that such loss was a proximate result of the patentee's alleged unlawful acts. The trial court was not compelled to infer the fact of injury from the fact that certain of the patentee's alleged unlawful acts were directed at the manufacturer. Since the manufacturer failed to show damage or causation, it was unnecessary to consider the trial court's findings that the patentee violated the antitrust laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.250, 9011.385.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Damages—Attorney's Fees—Allowance as Incident to Successful Prosecution of Damage Action Under Antitrust Laws—Allowance as Incident to Successful Defense of Patent Infringement Action.—A successful defendant in a patent infringement action was not entitled to $1,500 of a $20,000 award of attorney's fees. In making the award of $20,000 under 35 United States Code, Section 285 (a section of the patent statute providing for the award of attorney's fees to the prevailing party in "exceptional cases"), the trial court stated that, if a reviewing court found no antitrust violations, then the value of the services of the defendant's attorneys was $18,500. Having dismissed the defendant's antitrust counterclaim, the trial court was without the power to award attorney's fees under the antitrust laws. Such an allowance can only be made as an incident to the successful prosecution of an action for damages for violations of the antitrust laws. Furthermore, the $1,500 award could not be sustained under the patent statute, although the trial court had found that the work of the defense attorneys, with regard to the antitrust violations, was also done as part of the work of showing the defense of "unclean hands." An award may include services rendered in connection with a separate defense set forth in the answer; in the instant case, however, the allegations of antitrust violations were not pleaded as a separate defense until after the trial and the dismissal of the defendant's antitrust counterclaim.

[Patent Infringement Action—Antitrust Counterclaim]

JERTBERG, Circuit Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Talon, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, hereinafter designated Talon, instituted this action for a patent infringement against Union Slide Fastener, Inc., a California corporation, hereinafter designated Union, seeking relief by way of injunction and damage. Union denied the validity of Talon's patents, and by counterclaim Union charged Talon with an unlawful combination and conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade. Union prayed for treble damages and attorney's fees against Talon.

[Judgment of Trial Court]

The district court found and concluded that Talon's patents were invalid and void and not infringed by Union. The district court adjudged that Talon take nothing, and that its complaint be dismissed. The court further concluded that Union take nothing on its counterclaim, and adjudged that the counterclaim be dismissed. The district court further adjudged that Union have and recover from Talon the sum of $20,000 for attorney's fees. Talon appeals from the judgment of the district court dismissing its complaint, and from the judgment of the district court awarding attorney's fees to Union. Union appeals from the judgment of the district court dismissing its counterclaim, and denying relief thereunder.

We will first consider the merits of Talon's appeal. The district court concluded that claims 1 through 4 and 16 and 17 of the United States Patent Number 2,078,017 to one Poux, and claims 1 through 4, 13, and 32 through 40 of the United States Letters Patent 2,437,793 to one Silberman were invalid and void. Talon has appealed to this Court only on the issue of the validity of the patent it acquired from Silberman, and the award of attorney's fees to Union.

Validity and Infringement

* * * We hold that the trial court did not err, and applied the proper standard of invention in concluding that the Silberman patent was invalid.

In view of what has just been stated, we deem it unnecessary to consider the questions of whether the patent was ever operative, whether Union was verbally licensed to use the Silberman patent, whether Talon is estopped from asserting the patent, or whether there was infringement.[5]

Before discussing Talon's appeal from the judgment of the district court awarding attorney's fees to Union, we will consider the merits of Union's appeal.

Union's Appeal

[Injury to Antitrust Claimant]

Union's three specifications of error[6] are based upon the alleged errors of the trial court in concluding that Union was not damaged by Talon's effort to control competition in violation of the anti-trust laws, and refusing to admit evidence of damage, or grant a new trial on the issue of damages. The specifications of error attack the conclusion of the district court that > "The defendant Union having failed to prove injury to defendant Union in its business or property arising out of any of the actions complained of in the Counterclaim, the Counterclaim cannot be maintained and must be dismissed."

[6] Specifications of error in Union's appeal are:

"The District Court erred:

"1. By concluding that Union was not damaged and that there was no showing of causal connection between Talon's acts and Union's injuries, resulting from what the Court itself found to be a continuing attempt by Talon to control competition in a substantial portion of the zipper industry in violation of the anti-trust laws.

"2. By concluding that Talon's acts regarding Union were isolated acts rather than the concluding steps in the final links in a chain of anti-trust violations extending over a period of twenty years and directed not only against the public in general but at Union in particular.

"3. By failing to admit evidence or permit a new trial to show damage to Union flowing directly from Talon's efforts to control competition, comprising the acquisition by Talon of an invalid patent from a third party and the institution of an infringement suit against Union, in bad faith and without reasonable belief in the validity of Talon's patents; the introduction of a zipper sold below cost in Los Angeles, following a price control meeting in that city staged by Talon, and, under the pretext of examining Union's machines to determine possible infringements of which Talon had no knowledge, wrongfully appropriating improvements made by defendant."

[Proximate Cause]

In addition to establishing that Talon has violated the antitrust laws, Union before being entitled to award of damages must establish that Talon's violations of the antitrust laws were a proximate cause of injury to it, and must also prove the extent of that injury. As stated by this Court in Flintkote Company v. Lysfjord [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,674], (1957), 246 F. 2d 368, at 392, certiorari denied 355 U. S. 835:

> "We take it that the controlling rule today in seeking damages for loss of profits in antitrust cases is that the plaintiff is required to establish with reasonable probability the existence of some causal connection between defendant's wrongful act and some loss of anticipated revenue."

If Union had established with reasonable probability the causal connection between the unlawful acts of Talon and the resultant injury to Union in its property or business, the district court, in the absence of evidence which would have established the amount or extent of damage with reasonable probability, could have made a just and reasonable estimate of damage based on relevant data and could have rendered its verdict accordingly. Bigelow v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,445], (1945), 327 U. S. 251, 264. The distinction then is "between the question of proof necessary to show the fact as distinguished from the amount of damage." Flintkote Company v. Lysfjord, supra.

As stated by the Supreme Court in Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co. (1930), 282 U. S. 555 at 562:

> "* * * there was uncertainty as to the extent of the damage, but there was none as to the fact of damage; and there is a clear distinction between the measure of proof necessary to establish the fact that petitioner had sustained some damage, and the measure of proof necessary to enable the jury to fix the amount. The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount. * * *" See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co. (1926), 273 U. S. 359, 379.

[Alleged Loss of Profits]

Implicit in the conclusion of the district court that Union failed to prove injury to its business or property is the finding by the trial court that Union had not sustained the burden of proof resting upon it to establish that Talon's unlawful acts were the proximate cause of Union's loss of profits. The only ruling of the district court occurring during the trial of which Union complains in its brief relates to the rejection of Union's offer of proof[7] of loss of profits.

[7] The offer of proof was made as follows:

"Mr. Mockabee [Attorney for Union]: Regarding Schedule II, your Honor, Mr. Lester Greene of the firm of Greer and Greene, certified public accountants, would, if called to the stand, testify that the items in Schedule II regarding estimated net profits that should have been earned is based upon a figure of 10 per cent of the invested and borrowed long-term capital and is a fair return on such investment. And he would also testify that from an inspection of the books of Union Slide Fastener, Inc., the profits and losses shown in Schedule II for the fiscal years ending February 28, 1950, through February 28, 1955, the last year being estimated because the books are not yet closed, are a true reflection of the profits and/or losses during that period.

"The Court: Is that what his testimony would be?

"Mr. Mockabee: He would further testify with regard to items on the books, which appear on the books, with regard to the other schedules, your Honor.

"The Court: Is that your offer of proof?

"Mr. Mockabee: Yes, sir.

"Mr. Leonard Lyon [Attorney for Talon]: I object to the offer as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Of course, the general objection is good and it will be sustained. In addition, there is no causal connection shown, nor can any be shown, between what the loss is on the books for each fiscal year and any activities of the plaintiff in this action. Nor is the estimated earnings any more than a mere estimate based upon 10 per cent of invested capital, which doesn't take into account competition, the competitive conditions in the industry. This is a very competitive industry. We have heard testimony on that already. It doesn't include new devices coming out, new companies coming into the field, and such things as the introduction of the Wilzip zipper, or some other zipper that might come in by some other company.

"Mr. Mockabee: Of course, we maintain, your Honor, that the introduction of the Wilzip zipper was not normal competition, but was the consummation of a threat to do what plaintiff had done back East, and that is wrecked small companies through the introduction of a cut-price zipper, if defendants and others on the West Coast did not maintain prices.

"The Court: All right. The objection to the offer of proof is sustained. You may step down, Mr. Witness."

No attempt or offer of Union was made to show that it sold less zipper machines or less zippers, or that it was forced to sell its machines or zippers at reduced prices, or that it was otherwise impaired or adversely affected in its business, because of the unlawful acts of Talon. In its offer of proof as to the fact of injury, all that Union offered was that a certified public accountant would testify that "the items in Schedule II regarding estimated net profits that should have been earned is based upon a figure of 10 per cent of the invested and borrowed long-term capital and is a fair return on such investment," and that "from an inspection of the books of Union Slide Fastener, Inc., the profits and losses shown in Schedule II for the fiscal years ending February 28, 1950, through February 28, 1955, . . . are a true reflection of the profits and/or losses during that period." Clearly the offer of proof of loss of hypothetical profits which the trial court rejected did not establish that such loss was a proximate result of Talon's unlawful acts. Contrary to Union's argument, the trial court was not compelled to infer the fact of injury from the fact that certain of the unlawful acts of Talon were directed at Union. The action of the trial court in rejecting the proffered testimony is proper.

On Union's motion for a new trial on the issue of damages, Union stated that its credit had been impaired, that it was unable to secure loans through lending agents, as a result of which it was forced to enter into a bankruptcy reorganization proceeding, all because of Talon's unlawful activities. Union did not claim that any of the matters set forth in the motion were "newly discovered", and no reason was advanced as to why such evidence was not offered at the trial of the action. The trial court denied Union's motion. The granting or refusal to grant a new trial rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. From the record in this case we are unable to hold that the trial court abused its discretion.

In light of the foregoing discussion, any consideration of the district court findings and conclusions that Talon was in violation of the anti-trust laws would be purely academic. Therefore, we deem it unnecessary to consider such findings and conclusions.

Award of Attorney's Fees

[Unclean Hands]

Talon claims that the court erred in awarding attorney's fees to Union in that the findings on which the award was made were clearly erroneous. The court in substance found that the action was brought by plaintiff in bad faith and without reasonable belief in the validity of the patent, and the litigation proves harassment and misconduct on plaintiff's part. Specifically, in respect to attorney's fees, the court found as follows:

> Finding of Fact XLVII: "Having considered the acts of plaintiff leading up to the prosecution of this action against defendant and the fact that plaintiff has acted in bad faith and with unclean hands and has misused its patents, defendant is entitled to reasonable attorney's fees. Taking into consideration the nature and complexity of the case; the length of the trial; the depositions taken; the experience, standing and eminence of counsel; the quality of skill demonstrated; the importance of the case to the plaintiff and defendant; the risk of the client and responsibility of the counsel; the time fairly and properly expended in preparation out of court; time in court; and the results accomplished, it is found that the reasonable value of the services of attorneys for the defendant is Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000.00).
> "In considering the relative importance of the work done by defendant's attorneys with regard to violations of the anti-trust laws, while it was done in part in support of defendant's counterclaim, it was also done as part of the work showing the defense of unclean hands and the material regarding anti-trust violations was used as a shield in defense of the patent suit as well as a sword in connection with the counterclaim. It was nearly all pertinent to the defense to plaintiff's action, even though the counterclaim failed.
> "It is found that the anti-trust problem is the only substantial issue if an appeal is taken. To provide for the contingency that on appeal the reviewing court should find no violation of anti-trust laws and be

"Mr. Mockabee: May I have the opportunity to present some law on the question of some of these matters in these schedules which have been objected to and the objection sustained?

"The Court: No, I am not going to permit you to do that. I have taken some proof on attorney's fees and expenses, and time. These other matters are pure speculation. It is highly speculative. From the facts of this case I can't see how loss would be sustained by defendant by virtue of quota agreements entered with other manufacturers . . ."

confronted with an apportionment of fees, and a remand for the purpose of fixing of fees without regard to services rendered on the anti-trust violation, then, excluding the services regarding anti-trust violations, the reasonable value of attorney's fees for defendant is Eighteen Thousand and Five Hundred Dollars ($18,500.00)."

Under 35 U. S. C. A. Sec. 285, "the court in exceptional cases may award reasonable attorney's fees to the prevailing party." This section enacted in 1952[8] adopted the language of the repealed 35 U. S. C. A., Section 70, except that the wording "exceptional cases" was substituted for "in its [the court's] discretion." This change was explained by the revisors as merely expressing the intent of 35 U. S. C. A. 70, as shown by its legislative history and as interpreted by the courts.[9] Both before and after the change in wording, this Court has interpreted this section as making the trial court's determination of attorney's fees final where it has clearly stated the basis for the award, "except where there is an abuse of discretion amounting to caprice or an erroneous conception of the law on the part of the trial judge."[10]

In the cases cited by Talon where attorney's fees were refused, the trial court either failed to make a finding of unfairness or bad faith on the part of the party against whom the award was made,[11] or the record did not support the finding of the trial court that there was bad faith.[12] But here the trial court's findings of fact that the action was brought by Talon without sufficient investigation, in bad faith, without reasonable belief in the validity of the patents, and that the litigation proves harassment and misconduct on the part of Talon, are all clearly supported by the record. We hold that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding attorney's fees to Union.

[Attorney's Fee—Antitrust Issue]

It is to be noted in the findings of the district court that the court found that the reasonable value of the services of attorneys for the defendant is $20,000, but in the event that this court should find no violation of the anti-trust laws, then, excluding the services regarding anti-trust violation, the reasonable value of attorney's fees is $18,500. We must confess that some of the findings quoted in the last two quoted paragraphs are, to say the least, unusual and create a problem for this Court where none would otherwise exist. Apparently the trial court was aware, having dismissed the counterclaim of Union, that it was without power to award attorney's fees to Union on its counterclaim. Section 15, Title 15 U. S. C. A. provides:

> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

We feel that the proper construction of the statute in regard to the award of attorney's fees was set forth in the following language in Alden-Rochelle, Inc. et al. v. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, et al. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,288], 80 F. Supp. 898 at page 899:

> "I have concluded that plaintiffs have not shown any injury from defendants' violations of the anti-trust laws and that, even if we presume injury, plaintiffs have not proved anything from which the court could approximate the damages. It follows that plaintiffs are not entitled to a money judgment and therefor cannot be awarded 'a reasonable attorney's fee' under 15 U. S. C. A. § 15. 'The court cannot properly award it except as an incident to the successful prosecution of a law action for recovery of damages based on a violation of the anti-trust laws.' Allen Bradley Co. v. Local No. 3, D. C., 51 F. Supp. 36 at page 40. In Decorative Stone Co. v. Building Trades Council, 2 Cir., 23 F. 2d 426, 428, it was held that 'the allowance of an attorney's fee * * * is incidental to the statutory right to damages, and was properly denied in the equity proceedings,' brought under 15 U. S. C. A.

§ 26. Even though plaintiffs have made out a case for equitable relief under 15 U. S. C. A. § 26 they may not recover 'a reasonable attorney's fee' because they have failed to establish their claim for damages under 15 U. S. C. A. § 15."

[Separate Evaluation Not Required]

Recognizing its lack of power to award attorney's fees on the counterclaim, the district court, in the first quoted paragraph of the findings, indicated that the allowance of the sum of $20,000 for attorney's fees was made under Section 285, Title 35, which we have quoted, supra. If the findings on this subject had ended there, we should and would have affirmed the award of $20,000. However, under the language contained in the third paragraph of the quoted findings, the district court has stated that if this Court fails to find a violation of the anti-trust laws then the reasonable value of the services rendered by attorneys is $18,500. The effect of such finding is an attempt to force this Court to decide an issue which we have heretofore indicated would serve no practical purpose in this case, and is an issue which we deem unnecessary to pass upon.

[Attorney's Fees for Asserting Defense of Antitrust Violations]

A proper construction of Title 35, Section 285, does not require a district judge in awarding attorney's fees to a prevailing defendant to separately evaluate the services rendered under each separate defense contained in the defendant's answer and then to reduce or increase such award depending upon whether a particular defense failed or is sustained. Under the statute a district judge, in exceptional cases, may award reasonable attorney's fees to the prevailing party. In our view, such award to a defendant may include services rendered by his attorney in connection with a separate defense set forth in the answer even though the trial court should ultimately conclude that such defense had not been sustained; provided that such defendant prevails in the action and that such defense was relevant and material, and was asserted and maintained in good faith. In the second paragraph of the quoted finding, the district court stated:

> "while it [work done by defendant's attorneys with regard to violations of the anti-trust laws] was done in part in support of defendant's counterclaim, it was also done as part of the work showing the defense of unclean hands and the material regarding anti-trust violations was used as a shield in defense of the patent suit as well as a sword in connection with the counterclaim. * * *"

It may well be that in a proper case a district judge would be warranted in including in its basis for awarding attorney's fees to a prevailing defendant the services rendered by the defendant's attorney in connection with a separate defense of anti-trust violations even though the district judge should fail to sustain such defense.

[Pleading]

In the case before us, Union filed an answer, amended answer and counterclaim. The amended answer and counterclaim did not contain as a separate defense the allegations of anti-trust violations by Talon. The trial was conducted on the basis of such pleadings. Presumptively the services of Union's attorneys, in relation to anti-trust violations, in the preparation and conduct of the trial were designed to use the anti-trust violations as a sword to inflict damages upon Talon under Union's counterclaim. Following the trial of the action, the district court in a memorandum to counsel stated,

> "The Antitrust laws may be used as a sword or a shield. The attempt of the defendant to invoke them here, as a sword, fails because of lack of proof of damage and causation. We believe however, if properly pleaded, they are here available as a defense, * * *"

Thereafter the district court permitted Union to file an amended answer, setting forth as an additional and separate defense Talon's alleged violations of the anti-trust laws. The record is, therefore, clear that the violations of the anti-trust law did not become a shield to protect Union from Talon's complaints until the district court decided that such anti-trust violations were not effective as a sword. Under such facts, the "bonus" of $1,500 awarded as part of the attorney's fees cannot be sustained.

[Amount Awarded]

Talon further contends that an award of attorney's fees of $20,000 or $18,500 is clearly excessive. It cites Dubil v. Rayford Camp & Co., supra, where this Court held $15,000 as attorney's fees was excessive for a patent trial which, like this one, ran nine days. But in the Dubil case there was involved only one patent for a comparatively simple method of preserving fresh meat, as opposed to the six very complex machinery patents in this case against which Union's attorneys were required to prepare a defense.[13] The most important distinction between the Dubil case and this one, however, is that this Court in Dubil set aside an award of attorney's fees and directed that they be redetermined because the trial court awarded them not only for the work in connection with the patent in suit but, erroneously, also in conjunction with a cause of action over which the court had no jurisdiction.[14] We hold that the trial court's reasons for awarding attorney's fees were clearly stated and supported by the record.

The sum of $18,500, in light of all of the circumstances of this case, is not excessive.

[Judgment Modified]

From the foregoing opinion it follows that the judgment appealed from should be and is hereby modified by reducing the award of attorney's fees from $20,000 to $18,500, and in all other respects should be and is affirmed. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal.

[¶ 69,342] Federal Trade Commission v. Mandel Brothers, Inc.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1958. No. 234. Dated May 4, 1959.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Fur Products Labeling Act

Fur Labeling—False Invoicing of Furs Under Fur Products Labeling Act—Retail Sales Slips as "Invoices" Subject to Information Disclosure Requirements—Interstate Commerce.—A retail sales slip for a fur product is an "invoice" within the meaning of the Fur Products Labeling Act, and, therefore, as such, it must disclose the information set forth in the Act. A fur product is falsely "invoiced" if the retail sales slip does not contain the required information.

The avowed purpose of the Act, among other things, is to protect consumers against deception resulting from the misbranding, false advertising, or false invoicing of fur products; therefore, Section 2(f) of the Act, which contains the definition of "invoice," should be read hospitably with that end in view. "Section 2(f) uses 'invoice' to include a 'written account' and 'memorandum.' So far a retail sales slip is included. Section 2(f) requires the 'invoice' to be issued 'in connection with any commercial dealing' in furs. A retail sale is plainly a 'commercial dealing.' Section 2(f) requires the invoice to be issued to a 'purchaser.' There again a customer of a retailer is a 'purchaser.'" The last phrase of the section which reads "or any other person who is engaged in dealing commercially in fur products or furs" applies only to the last antecedent, and it will not be construed to make the invoice provisions inapplicable to retail sales. Furthermore, the inclusion of retail sales slips as invoices has been the consistent administrative construction of the Act, and this contemporaneous construction is entitled to great weight, even though it was applied in cases settled by consent rather than in litigation. The contention that a retailer's sale is a local transaction not subject to the exercise by Congress of the commerce power was rejected.

[13] Four patents were dropped from the case at the pretrial conference, and a fifth on appeal.

[14] At page 902 of 184 F. 2d, it was stated: "It is unnecessary to decide in the instant case whether an award of a reasonable attorney's fee made in a case in which an action on a patent has been properly joined with another cause of action (one for unfair competition, for example) must be based solely on the work done by the attorney in connection with the cause of action arising on the patent or whether the fee may be enlarged by virtue of the work done by the attorney in connection with the other cause of action. In this respect note the phrase of the statute '* * * upon the entry of judgment on any patent case.' But it is clear, we think, that an award of an attorney fee may not be made in connection with a cause of action over which the court has no jurisdiction. It follows that that portion of the judgment awarding the fee must be set aside and the court below must redetermine what are reasonable attorney fees."

The Commission did not abuse the "wide discretion" that it has in a choice of a remedy "deemed adequate to cope with the unlawful practices" disclosed by the record. It is not limited to prohibiting "the illegal practice in the precise form" existing in the past. As in Sherman Act decrees, the question of the extent to which related activity should be enjoined is one of kind and degree. The Supreme Court sits only to determine if the trier of facts has exercised an allowable discretion. "Where the episodes of misbranding have been so extensive and so substantial in number as they were here, we think it permissible for the Commission to conclude that like and related acts of misbranding should also be enjoined as a prophylactic and preventive measure." However, the order was rephrased to avoid any suggestion that the respondent sold fur products contrary to the disclosure requirements not found to have been violated.

Mr. Justice Douglas delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

[FTC Ruling]

Petitioner issued a complaint charging respondent, a retail department store, with violations of the Fur Products Labeling Act, 65 Stat. 175, 15 U. S. C. § 69. Violations were found and a cease-and-desist order was issued. One of the principal violations found was that many of respondent's retail sales were falsely "invoiced" in violation of § 3 of the Act.[1] The term "invoice" is defined in § 2(f) as "a written account, memorandum, list, or catalog, which is issued in connection with any commercial dealing in fur products or furs, and describes the particulars of any fur products or furs, transported or delivered to a purchaser, consignee, factor, bailee, correspondent, or agent, or any other person who is engaged in dealing commercially in fur products or furs." Section 5(b)

[1] Section 3 provides in part:
"(a) The introduction, or manufacture for introduction, into commerce, or the sale, advertising or offering for sale in commerce, or the transportation or distribution in commerce, of any fur product which is misbranded or falsely or deceptively advertised or invoiced, within the meaning of this Act or the rules and regulations prescribed under section 8(b), is unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act.
"(b) The manufacture for sale, sale, advertising, offering for sale, transportation or distribution, of any fur product which is made in whole or in part of fur which has been shipped and received in commerce, and which is misbranded or falsely or deceptively advertised or invoiced, within the meaning of this Act or the rules and regulations prescribed under section 8(b), is unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act."

provides that a fur product or fur is falsely "invoiced" if it is not "invoiced" to show (a) the name of the animal that produced the fur; and where applicable, that the product (b) contains used fur, (c) contains bleached, dyed, or otherwise artificially colored fur, (d) is composed in whole or substantial part of paws, tails, bellies, or waste fur; (e) the name and address of the person issuing the "invoice"; and (f) the country of origin of any imported furs.

The Commission found that respondent had violated the "invoice" provisions of the Act by failure to include in many of its retail sales slips of fur products, (a) its address, (b) whether the fur was bleached, dyed, or otherwise artificially colored, and (c) the correct name of the animal producing the fur.

The Act in § 4 also provides[2] that a fur product is misbranded (1) if it is "falsely or deceptively labeled . . . or identified," (2) if there is not affixed a label setting forth substantially the same six items of information required for an "invoice," or (3) if the label designates the animal that produced the fur by some name other than that prescribed in the Fur Products Name Guide.[3] The Commission found that the labels on respondent's fur products were false in numerous instances by reason of the failure to include information in three of the categories listed under the second part of § 4. It held, however, that there was no evidence that the labels were deficient in the other three categories of information. Nevertheless, it issued a cease-and-desist order against misbranding by failure to include in the labels the required six categories of information, all of which were listed.

[Appellate Court Ruling]

On appeal, the Court of Appeals first eliminated the prohibitions relating to invoicing on the ground that a retail sales slip was not an "invoice" within the meaning of the Act; and second, it struck from the order the prohibition against misbranding through omission of the three categories as to which no violations were found. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,993] 254 F. 2d 18. The case is here on a petition for a writ of certiorari. 358 U. S. 812.

I.

[Fur Invoicing]

First, as to invoicing. We start with an Act whose avowed purpose, inter alia, was to protect "consumers . . . against deception . . . resulting from the misbranding, false or deceptive advertising, or false invoicing of fur products and furs." S. Rep. No. 78, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., p. 1. The House Report also emphasizes that the bill was "designed to protect consumers and others from widespread abuses" arising out of false and misleading matter in advertisements and otherwise. H. R. Rep. No. 546, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., p. 1. The Title of the Act (which, though not limiting the plain meaning of the text, is nonetheless a useful aid in resolving an ambiguity (see Maguire v. Commissioner, 313 U. S. 1, 9)), states that its purpose was to "protect consumers and others against . . . false invoicing of fur products and furs." 65 Stat. 175. So we have an avowed purpose to protect retail purchasers against improper "invoicing." We therefore should read § 2(f) which contains the definition of "invoice" hospitably with that end in view.

[2] Section 4 provides:
"For the purposes of this Act, a fur product shall be considered to be misbranded—
"(1) if it is falsely or deceptively labeled or otherwise falsely or deceptively identified, or if the label contains any form of misrepresentation or deception, directly or by implication, with respect to such fur product;
"(2) if there is not affixed to the fur product a label showing in words and figures plainly legible—
"(A) the name or names (as set forth in the Fur Products Name Guide) of the animal or animals that produced the fur, and such qualifying statement as may be required pursuant to section 7(c) of this Act;
"(B) that the fur product contains or is composed of used fur, when such is the fact;
"(C) that the fur product contains or is composed of bleached, dyed, or otherwise artificially colored fur, when such is the fact;
"(D) that the fur product is composed in whole or in substantial part of paws, tails, bellies, or waste fur, when such is the fact;
"(E) the name, or other identification issued and registered by the Commission, of one or more of the persons who manufacture such fur product for introduction into commerce, introduce it into commerce, sell it in commerce, advertise or offer it for sale in commerce, or transport or distribute it in commerce;
"(F) the name of the country of origin of any imported furs used in the fur product;
"(3) if the label required by paragraph (2)(A) of this section sets forth the name or names of any animal or animals other than the name or names provided for in such paragraph."

[3] This is a register of the names of hair, fleece, and fur-bearing animals which § 7 of the Act requires the Commission to maintain.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Section 2(f) is not unambiguous. Yet we do not have here the problem of a penal statute that deserves strict construction. We deal with remedial legislation of a regulatory nature where our task is to fit, if possible, all parts into an harmonious whole. Black v. Magnolia Liquor Co., 355 U. S. 24, 26.

[Retail Sales Slip]

Section 2(f) uses "invoice" to include a "written account" and "memorandum." So far a retail sales slip is included. Section 2(f) requires the "invoice" to be issued "in connection wtih any commercial dealing" in furs. A retail sale is plainly a "commercial dealing." Section 2(f) requires the invoice to be issued to a "purchaser." There again a customer of a retailer is a "purchaser." The case for inclusion of a retail sales slip in "invoice," as that term is used in the Act, would therefore seem to be complete. What turned the Court of Appeals the other way was the last phrase in § 2(f)—"or any other person who is engaged in dealing commercially in fur products or furs." It held that "engaged in dealing commercially" modifies not only "any other person" but also all the other preceding terms in the subsection including "purchaser." Cf. United States v. Standard Brewery, 251 U. S. 210, 218. That is a possible construction. We conclude, however, that this limiting clause is to be applied only to the last antecedent.[4] We think it would be a partial mutilation of this Act to construe it so that the "invoice" provisions were inapplicable to retail sales. In the first place, the language of § 2(f) specifies in sweeping language the categories of persons for whose benefit the invoicing requirements were imposed, viz., purchaser, consignee, factor, bailee, correspondent, or agent. Then as a general catch-all "any other person who is engaged in dealing commercially in fur products or furs" was added. In the second place, only by construing "invoice" to include retail sales slips can the full protection of the Act be accorded consumers. We do not agree with the point stressed by respondent that the consumer's protection is to be found solely in the label on the fur product and that invoices are required only at each antecedent step of delivery or transfer to a person dealing commercially in either furs or fur products. The advertising and mislabeling prohibitions in § 3(b) of the Act[5] are plainly applicable to retail sales. Yet the prohibition of false invoices is contained in the same clause. If we held that Congress, in spite of its desire to protect consumers, withheld from them the benefits of reliable invoices, we would have to read the clauses of § 3 distributively, making only some of them applicable to retail sales. That would be a refashioning of § 3, an undertaking more consonant with the task of a congressional committee than with judicial construction.

Moreover, fur product "labels," we are advised, are not pieces of cloth sewn into garments but tags which the purchaser is likely to throw away after the purchase. The "invoice" is the only permanent record of the transaction that the retail purchaser has. Its importance was emphasized by the Commission:

> "Inasmuch as the invoice may serve as a documentary link connecting the sale of specific fur products back through the retailer's records with advertisements therefor, the application of the invoicing provisions of the Act to transactions between retailers and consumers represents a key implement for effective administration of the Act."

The inclusion of retail sales slips in invoices has been the consistent administrative construction of the Act.[6] This contemporaneous construction is entitled to great weight (United States v. American Trucking Assns., 310 U. S. 534, 549; Black v. Magnolia Liquor Co., supra; Federal Housing Adm'n v. Darlington, Inc., 358 U. S. 84, 90) even though it was applied in cases settled by consent rather than in litigation.

[Commerce Power]

Finally respondent urges that a retailer's sale is a local transaction not subject to the exercise by Congress of the commerce power. Misbranding a drug held for sale

[4] Cf. United States v. Hughes, 116 F. 2d 613, 616; Puget Sound Electric R. Co. v. Benson, 253 F. 710, 711; 2 Sutherland, Statutory Construction (3d ed. 1943), § 4921.

[5] Note 1, supra.

[6] See Ed Hamilton Furs, Inc., 51 F. T. C. 186. We are advised that since that case, decided in 1954, the Commission has issued 137 complaints charging violations of the Act involving false and deceptive retail invoicing. There are presently outstanding 110 cease-and-desist orders relating to retail invoicing. In 92 other cases furriers have agreed to discontinue false and deceptive retail invoicing.

after shipment in interstate commerce was held to be within the commerce power in United States v. Sullivan, 332 U. S. 689. That decision and its predecessors sanction what is done here.

We conclude that a retail sales slip is an "invoice" within the meaning of the Act and accordingly the judgment of the Court of Appeals setting aside the part of the cease-and-desist order which requires this retailer to give a proper "invoice" to each purchaser is reversed.

II.

[False Labeling—Scope of Order]

Second, as to false labeling. The Commission, as we have noted, found that respondent had committed numerous violations of three of the six disclosure requirements contained in § 4(2) of the Act,[7] noting that there was no evidence that it had not complied with the other three disclosure requirements of § 4(2). The cease-and-desist order of the Commission was however directed against "misbranding fur products by: 1. Failing to affix labels to fur products showing" each of the six categories of information required by § 4(2). The Court of Appeals struck from the order the prohibition with respect to the three categories as to which there was no evidence of violation.

We do not believe the Commission abused the "wide discretion" that it has in a choice of a remedy "deemed adequate to cope with the unlawful practices" disclosed by the record. Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,451], 327 U. S. 608, 611. It is not limited to prohibiting "the illegal practice in the precise form" existing in the past. Federal Trade Comm'n v. Ruberoid Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,279], 343 U. S. 470, 473. This agency, like others, may fashion its relief to restrain "other like or related unlawful acts." Labor Board v. Express Pub. Co., 312 U. S. 426, 436. The practice outlawed by § 4 is "misbranding." The disclosure required for a properly branded garment is specified. These disclosure requirements are so closely interrelated that the Commission might well conclude that a retailer who for example failed to disclose that the fur was bleached or dyed might well default when it came to disclosure of the fact that used fur was contained in the garment. One cannot generalize as to the proper scope of these orders. It depends on the facts of each case and a judgment as to the extent to which a particular violator should be fenced in. Here, as in Sherman Act decrees (Local 167 v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,043], 291 U. S. 293, 299; International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, 400-401; International Boxing Club v. United States [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,231], 358 U. S. 242, 253), the question of the extent to which related activity should be enjoined is one of kind and degree. We sit only to determine if the trier of facts has exercised an allowable discretion. Where the episodes of misbranding have been so extensive and so substantial in number as they were here,[8] we think it permissible for the Commission to conclude that like and related acts of misbranding should also be enjoined as a prophylactic and preventive measure.

[Wording of Order]

Respondent objects to the wording of the cease-and-desist order saying it suggests that the store has sold garments contrary to the disclosure requirements not found to have been violated here. The Commission bows to the suggestion that Part A, par. 1 of the cease-and-desist order be rephrased to enjoin "misbranding fur products by failing to affix labels to fur products showing each element of information required by the Act." We so order.

On this phase of the case the judgment of the Court of Appeals is also reversed, the cease-and-desist order to be rephrased as we have indicated.

It is so ordered.

[7] See note 2, supra.

[8] The Commission found 12 instances of failure to label the product with the correct name of the animal producing the fur, 15 instances of failure to disclose that the product was bleached, dyed or otherwise artificially colored, and 58 instances of failure to show the country of origin of imported furs. There were in addition 187 other violations of the rules of the Commission which provide additional labeling requirements and standards. See 16 CFR, Pt. 301.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Violations as Defense to Trademark Suit—Relationship Between Alleged Illegal Practices and Relief Sought.—A manufacturer of trademarked radionic products, in its trademark suit, was denied a motion to strike from the defendant's answer an allegation that the manufacturer was precluded from any relief because it had connived and co-operated with its distributors to pay a major portion of the advertising costs expended by favored customers in the advertising and promotion of the manufacturer's products. In some instances, the doctrine of "unclean hands" can preclude a plaintiff's recovery, especially where 15 United States Code, Section 1115 (section of Trade-Mark Act providing a defense to infringement actions where "the mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States"), is properly invoked. The defense of "unclean hands" must, however, be scrutinized with a "critical eye"; therefore, a full factual disclosure must be made before it can be determined whether the alleged illegal trade practices bear an immediate and necessary relation to the relief sought.

Memorandum on Motion of Plaintiff to Strike Defendant's Sixth Defense from Its Answer

["Unclean Hands"]

ROBSON, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff has moved to strike defendant's Sixth Defense from its answer. This defense, in substance, raises an issue of "unclean hands" on the part of plaintiff, in that it has connived and co-operated with its distributors to pay a major portion of advertising costs expended by favored customers in the advertising and promotion of Zenith trademarked radionic products. It is defendant's legal position that such conduct of plaintiff precludes it from any right to relief in this trademark, unfair competition suit, predicated upon the trademarks pertaining to Zenith.

[Relationship Between Alleged Illegality and Relief Sought]

There can be no doubt that in some instances the doctrine of "unclean hand" can be invoked to preclude plaintiff's recovery (Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488; Worden v. California Fig Syrup Co., 187 U. S. 516; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218; Strey v. Devine's, Inc., 217 F. 2d 187 (C. A. 7); Extractol Process v. Hiram Walker & Sons [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,460], 153 F. 2d 264 (C. A. 7); American Cooperative Serum Assn. v. Anchor Serum Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,447], 153 F. 2d 907 (C. C. A. 7); Nims, Unfair Competition and Trademarks, Sec. 390; Toulmin, Anti-Trust Laws of the U. S., Sec. 27.23). This applies especially where the statute 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1115, which provides a defense where "the mark has been or is being used to violate the anti-trust laws of the United States," is properly invoked. The court cannot determine at this time whether the illegal trade practices alleged bear that immediate and necessary relation to the relief which plaintiff seeks, which is necessary to bar the relief sought. (Vanity Fair Mills v. Cusick [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,522], 143 F. Supp. 452.) Since the defense of unclean hands must be scrutinized with a "critical eye" (The Coca-Cola Company v. The Koke Company of America, et al., 254 U. S. 143), there must be a full factual disclosure before there can be a determination of the closeness of the antitrust unclean hands defense to the trademark involved in this suit.

[Motion Denied]

The motion of plaintiff to strike the Sixth Defense from defendant's answer is denied.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Interpretation of Consent Decree Prohibiting Certain Business Activities—Alleged Avoidance of Consent Decree.—An order of the California Public Utilities Commission accepting a tariff schedule submitted by a telephone company's subsidiary for installing, leasing, and maintaining private mobile communications systems did not conflict with a Federal antitrust consent decree (1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,246), which enjoined the company from "engaging, either directly, or indirectly through its subsidiaries . . . in any business other than the furnishing of common carrier communications services . . . ." However, this provision did not apply, for a period of five years from the date of the decree, to "leasing and maintaining facilities for private communications systems, the charges for which are not subject to public regulation, to persons who are lessees from defendants or their subsidiaries of such systems forty-five (45) days after the date" of the decree. While it had been argued before the commission that the subsidiary's motive in filing the tariff was to avoid the consent decree, the commission held that there was no proof to that effect; that it would not take judicial notice of good or bad intentions; that if the court which entered the consent decree wished to bar such activities, even though subject to regulation, it would have made such a provision; and that there was nothing in the decree to prompt it to change its ruling that the service was a utility service subject to its jurisdiction. The reviewing court saw no reason why the decision of the commission should be disturbed.

phone and Telegraph Company, hereinafter called Pacific. The schedule was voluntarily filed and covered the installing, leasing and maintaining of private mobile communications systems. The tariff was originally accepted to become effective April 30, 1956, but at the request of petitioners a rehearing was granted and the commission conducted an investigation into the proposed rates and conditions and an inquiry as to the scope of its own jurisdiction. The petitioners, with the exception of the City of Los Angeles, are private persons or firms engaged in furnishing similar service on a private contract basis, in competition with Pacific, which heretofore has offered this service only on a contract basis. The City of Los Angeles has appeared on behalf of customer interests of its own and its inhabitants, and pursuant to its public-spirited interest in utility regulation and growth. The petitioners[1] urge that the commission has incorrectly determined in favor of its own jurisdiction in this matter and contend that their rights under the Constitution of the United States and of this state are violated. They also urge that the tariff creates a conflict with federal law and with the provisions of a consent decree[2] to which Pacific, as a subsidiary of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, was a party.

This leaves for consideration the question of any probable conflict between the jurisdiction of the federal and state commissions and of an alleged limitation on the state commission by reason of the provisions of the New Jersey consent decree hereinbefore referred to.

In January 1956 the Department of Justice brought a proceeding under the Sherman Act in the United States District Court in New Jersey against Western Electric Company, Inc. and American Telephone and Telegraph Company. By consent of the parties and without trial of the issues a consent decree was entered [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,246]. Under the federal antitrust laws where no trial is had and no testimony taken, a consent decree is not evidence of or an admission of any of the charges contained in the complaint. (15 U. S. C. 16; Barnsall Refining Corp. v. Birnamwood Oil Co. [E. D. Wis. 1940] 32 F. Supp. 308, 310-311.) The New Jersey court specifically retained continuing jurisdiction to issue orders and directions with reference to the construction or enforcement of this final judgment. From the briefs submitted in the proceeding before this court it appears that the original parties to the New Jersey proceeding take opposing views as to the meaning and effect of subdivision (d) of section V of that decree which provides as follows:

> "The defendant AT & T is enjoined and restrained from engaging, either directly, or indirectly through its subsidiaries . . . in any business other than the furnishing of common carrier communications services; provided, however, that this Section V shall not apply . . . (d) for a period of five (5) years from the date of this Final Judgment, leasing and maintaining facilities for private communications systems, the charges for which are not subject to public regulation, to persons who are lessees from defendants or their subsidiaries of such systems forty-five (45) days after the date of this Final Judgment . . . ."

The Department of Justice takes the view that under subdivision (d) the defendants in that action were prohibited from engaging in the business of leasing and maintaining facilities for private mobile communications systems, but were allowed a cut-off period of five years for serving those who were lessees within 45 days after the date of the judgment. Its view is that the phrase in subdivision (d) reading "the charges for which are not subject to public regulation" is descriptive of the fact stated, namely, that such charges are not subject to public regula-

[1] Petitioner Thomas Poor, an individual doing business as Bakersfield Electronics, appears as one of the petitioners on the Watson Communication Systems, Inc. brief. He did not petition for a rehearing before the commission, and therefore has no standing before this court as a petitioner for review. (Pub. Util. Code, § 1731).

Petitioner Gamewell Company did not petition for rehearing and likewise has no standing to petition for review. This court gave it permission to file a brief, without opposition from the commission until after the brief was filed. It is not necessary to rule on the commission's motion to strike this brief as it may be treated as an amicus curiae brief.

Amici curiae briefs have also been filed by several interested parties.

tion. The other parties to the consent decree are of the view that this phrase merely provides that if the charges are regulated by a state commission the telephone companies are not prohibited by the decree from continuing to furnish equipment and facilities for private mobile communications systems. Pacific, as hereinabove stated, was a party to that decree and would be bound by its terms.

Insofar as we are advised no ruling has been obtained from the New Jersey federal court as to the meaning and effect of subdivision (d) of section V, and no adjudication of this issue has been made by the Federal Communications Commission. However, it has been brought to our attention that in a Memorandum Opinion and Order released November 21, 1957, in the proceedings entitled "In the Matter of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, et al., Lease and maintenance of equipment and facilities for private communications systems, Docket No. 11972," in which this issue was sought to be raised, the federal commission stated it had been unable to find any basis in the specific language of the consent decree to support the contention of the Department of Justice that it was the intent of that decree to prohibit the service, regulated or unregulated. That commission made no actual determination on this question.

[Alleged Motive—Avoidance of Consent Decree]

In the proceedings before the state commission some of the petitioners argued that Pacific's motive in filing the proposed tariff 108-T was to avoid the consent decree. The commission held that there was no proof to that effect; that it would not take judicial notice of good or bad intentions; that if the federal court wished to bar such activities by Pacific even though subject to regulation, it would have made such a provision, and that there was nothing in the decree to prompt it to change its ruling that this service was utility service subject to its jurisdiction. No good reason appears why the decision of the commission in this respect should be disturbed.

The order is affirmed.

With reference to the provision of the 1956 consent decree of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey in United States v. Western Electric Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,246], quoted in the majority opinion, pp. 20-21,[3] I would comment as follows: This provision is not a clear declaration that the charges for leasing and maintaining private communications systems are not subject to public regulation; neither is it a clear declaration that American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its subsidiaries are not enjoined from engaging in the business of leasing and maintaining facilities for private communications systems where the charges for those private communications services are subject to public regulation. In the circumstances it does not appear that the provision of the consent decree should influence the decision herein.

For the reasons above stated I would annul the order of the Public Utilities Commission.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Trade Associations—Association Membership as Means of Trade Restraint—Price-Fixing—Boycotts—Exclusion from Trade—Refusal to Deal.—A retail hardware dealers' trade association and its former president were enjoined by a consent decree from entering into or enforcing any agreement to fix prices or other terms or conditions for the sale of hardware and housewares to consumers, restrict price competition between discount houses and retailers, and hinder or prevent any discount house or other person from selling to consumers. The decree also enjoined the association and its former president from advising or inducing suppliers to discontinue business relations with any discount house, hinder or prevent distributors or wholesalers from reselling to any discount house, and boycotting or refusing to deal with any manufacturer of products resold in discount houses or any supplier of such discount houses. In addition, the decree prohibited membership or participation in the activities of any trade association or other organization whose activities were inconsistent with the provisions of the judgment.

[Consent Decree]

MATTHEW T. ABRUZZO, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 27, 1957, and each of the said defendants having appeared herein and the plaintiff and the defendants, by their respective attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or admission by any party in respect of any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony or evidence has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of all the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and all the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants and each of them under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm association, corporation or other legal entity:

(B) "Defendant association" shall mean the defendant Nassau & Suffolk County Retail Hardware Association, Inc.,:

(C) "Retailer" shall mean any person who sells for profit goods and merchandise to consumers:

(D) "Discount house" shall mean a retailer who solicits the favor of consumers chiefly on the basis of price.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to each such defendant and to his officers, agents, servants, employees, members, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Specific Relief—Dissolution of Association]

The defendants are ordered and directed:

(A) To institute such action as may be necessary to dissolve the defendant association under the laws of the State of New York within 90 days from the signing of this Judgment, and to complete such dissolution with 120 days from the date of the signing of this Judgment.

(B) Upon completion of such dissolution of the defendant association, to file an affidavit with this Court and with the plaintiff setting forth the fact of compliance with this Section IV.

V

[Price-Fixing—Exclusion from Trade]

The defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, enforcing, maintaining or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any retailer or with any association or central agency of or for retailers:

(A) To fix, determine, establish, maintain or stabilize prices, pricing methods, discounts, mark-ups or other terms or conditions for the sale of hardware and housewares to consumers:

(B) To limit, restrict, eliminate or reduce price competition between discount houses and retailers:

(C) To hinder, restrict, limit or prevent any discount house or other person from selling hardware and housewares to consumers.

VI

[Boycotting—Refusal to Deal]

The defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Advising, suggesting or inducing or attempting to advise, suggest or induce, any or all suppliers of hardware and housewares to discontinue business relations with any discount house:

(B) Hindering, restricting, limiting or preventing or attempting to hinder, restrict or prevent distributors, jobbers or wholesalers of hardware and housewares from reselling such products to any discount house:

(C) Boycotting or refusing to deal, or attempting to boycott or refuse to deal, with any manufacturer of products resold in discount houses or with any supplier of merchandise to discount houses:

(D) Being a member of, contributing anything of value to, or participating in any of the activities of, any trade association or other organization, the activities of which are inconsistent in any manner with any of the provisions of this Final Judgment.

VII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally-recognized privilege, (A) reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment, and (B) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference, to interview officers and employees of such defendant who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon such written request said defendant shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil No. 17660. Dated April 24, 1959. Amended by Supplemental Opinion dated April 30, 1959.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery Under Antitrust Laws May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations—Tolling of Limitation Period During Pendency of Government Action.—A manufacturer of shoe machinery, in a private treble damage action charging it with monopolizing the market from some time prior to 1939 until the filing of the action on May 27, 1957, was granted partial summary judgment dismissing so much of the claim as accrued before May 27, 1953. Section 4B of the Clayton Act provides that such actions are barred unless commenced within four years after accrual. Section 5(b), which provides for the suspension of the running of the statute during the pendency of Government actions, also provides that, whenever the running of the statute is suspended thereunder, the action shall be barred unless commenced either within the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued. In the instant case, a Government action against the manufacturer was terminated no later than June, 1954. Therefore, any cause of action which accrued more than four years prior to May 27, 1957, was barred.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.275.

For the plaintiff: Sigmund Moses (James M. Malloy, of counsel).

For the defendant: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland and Kiendl (Louis Stanton, of counsel).

[Treble Damage Action]

ZAVATT, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: This action, which is brought pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15, was instituted on May 27, 1957. The plaintiff seeks treble damages for alleged injury to its business by reason of alleged violations by the defendant of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 2, claimed by the plaintiff to have begun some time prior to 1939, and to have continued up to the time of the filing of the complaint. The defendant's monopolization of the shoe machinery market was the subject of a civil antitrust action commenced by the government in December, 1947. It was there found that the defendant had acquired such power as to give it effective control of the shoe machinery market in violation of the Sherman Act, and a decree was entered to dissipate the effects of the defendant's monopolization. United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,436], 110 F. Supp. 295 (D. Mass. 1953). The government's suit may be said to have terminated no later than June, 1954, when the District Court of Massachusetts received the mandate of the Supreme Court affirming its decree. United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,755], 347 U. S. 521, 74 S. Ct. 699 (1954).

[Statute of Limitations]

The defendant now moves (1) for partial summary judgment dismissing so much of the claim as accrued before May 27, 1953, on the ground that the same is barred by the statute of limitations, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 15b, 16(b); and (2) for summary judgment dismissing the complaint upon the merits. The plaintiff moves, pursuant to Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for an order requiring the defendant to produce a number of documents for inspection and copying by the plaintiff. The motions will be disposed of as follows:

(1) The defendant's motion for partial summary judgment will be granted. Title 15, United States Code, sections 15b and 16(b), enacted July 7, 1955, effective January 7, 1955, provide as follows:

"§ 15b. Limitation of actions

Any action to enforce any cause of action under sections 15 or 15a of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. No cause of action barred under existing law on the effective date of this section and sections 15a and 16 of this title shall be revived by said sections.

"§ 16. Judgment in favor of Government as evidence, suspension of limitations

(b) Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws, but not including an action under section 15a of this title, the running of the statute of limitations in respect of every private right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter: Provided, however, That whenever the running of the statute of limitations in respect of a cause of action arising under section 15 of this title is suspended hereunder, any action to enforce such cause of action shall be forever barred unless commenced either within the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued."

Upon the authority of Muskin Shoe Company v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,179], 167 F. Supp. 106 (D. Md. 1958); La Rouche v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,317], 166 F. Supp. 633 (D. Mass. 1958); and Solinski v. General Electric Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,671], 149 F. Supp. 784 (D. N. J. 1957), the court holds that any cause of action which the plaintiff asserts which accrued more than four years prior to May 27, 1957 is barred by the statute of limitations. Cf., contra, International Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 167 F. Supp. 93 (D. Mass. 1958).

[Summary Judgment on Merits Denied]

(2) The defendant's motion for summary judgment on the merits will be denied. In Van Brode Milling Co. v. Kravex Manufacturing Co., 21 F. R. D. 246, at 249, this court had occasion to state the principle governing the determination of a motion of this nature:

> "It requires no citation of authority for the general proposition that a motion for summary judgment may be granted only upon a showing that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In the absence of such a showing the motion shall be denied. Any reasonable doubt should be resolved against the movant. [Citing cases.]"

The record upon which the defendant relies in support of its motion is fairly ponderous, and it would serve no useful purpose to elaborate the points upon which the defendant has failed to adequately demonstrate that no genuine issue as to a material fact exists. The pleadings, affidavits, depositions, exhibits and answers to interrogatories before the court create serious doubt that no issue as to material fact exists, and such doubt is resolved against the defendant.

[Production of Documents]

(3) The plaintiff's motion for the production of documents for inspection and copying is granted as to the documents referred to in items I through V, inclusive, of the notice of motion, with the exception of the following listed memoranda, as to which the defendant's claim of the attorney-client privilege is sustained:

* * *

Except as specifically sustained, the defendants objections on the ground of privilege are disallowed. The motion for production is denied as to the documents referred in item VI of the notice of motion.

In the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. Middlesex. No. 5813. April 30, 1959. Argued February 5, 1959.

Massachusetts Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Person Who May Maintain Suit—Foreign Corporation Engaged Solely in Interstate Commerce.—A Delaware manufacturer of firearms engaged solely in interstate commerce was not precluded from enforcing fair trade contracts in Massachusetts by its failure to comply with a Massachusetts statute requiring foreign corporations to file a copy of their charter and by-laws and a certificate of certain information before transacting business in the state or maintaining actions in the state courts. The qualification requirements of that statute did not apply to foreign corporations engaged solely in interstate commerce. The keeping of an office, a local bank account, a small number of samples, and the employment of a stenographer and salesmen were incidental instrumentalities reasonably necessary to the conduct of that interstate commerce. Similarly, the manufacturer's resort to the courts of Massachusetts and the activities of its local manager, field agents, and professional shoppers in enforcing the fair trade program were a part of its interstate business.

[Fair Trade Action]

Wilkins, Chief Justice [In full text]: This is a suit in equity under the fair trade law, G. L. c. 93, §§ 14A-14D, to enjoin the defendant, a retail dealer, from selling the plaintiff's trade marked rifles and ammunition at prices lower than the minimum retail prices established in fair trade contracts entered into and in force between the plaintiff and various Massachusetts retail dealers. The case was referred to a master whose report has been confirmed. The case is reported without decision by a judge of the Superior Court. G. L. c. 214, § 31.

[Parties]

Remington is a Delaware corporation engaged in the manufacture of a sporting line of firearms and ammunition which bear its trade mark, brand, or name. By advertising it has developed a large and valuable good will.

Lechmere, a Massachusetts corporation, has a large retail establishment in East Cambridge, and is the largest discount house in New England. In its sporting goods department Remington firearms and ammunition and similar products of Remington competitors are sold at retail.
